From the month of March until the month of September, 1908, defendant, the Russian-American Line, was independently engaged in operating its line of steamships from the Port of New York to the Port of Libau in Russia and in carrying thereon third-class or steerage passengers in competition with all of the other defendant steamship lines, and frequently during said period it advertised its steamships to sail from said port of New York and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third-class or steerage passengers, and in each such instance the aforesaid committee of three, selected a so-called "fighting steamer" and advertised the same to sail at or about the same time as the ships of the Russian-American Line, and advertised the third-class or steerage rates thereon at far less than the rate therefore upon the steamer of the Russian-American Line, and 87 such rate was so low that the Russian-American Line could not profitably compete therewith.

88 Petition

Owing to this unfair and unlawful competition, the Russian-American Line incurred serious financial loss in the conduct of its third-class or steerage traffic and in order to be permitted to continue in said business it unlawfully and wrongfully sought admission to the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy and in or about the month of September, 1908, signed and became a party to the aforesaid unlawful contract of February 5, 1908, and was accorded by the other defendant steamship lines a certain percentage of said 89 steerage traffic which it has ever since been permitted to handle and transport upon its steamships without further interference or molestation, and ever since it has been conducting its said business, trade and commerce in concert and harmony and free from competition with said other defendant steamship lines, and under and pursuant to and in accordance with the aforesaid unlawful contract, combination and conspiracy, to the great loss and detriment of the People of the United States.

Unfair competition against the Uranium Steamship Company.

90 About April 1st, 1909, the Uranium Steamship Company, Limited, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the Kingdom of Great Britain, began to operate and has ever since operated a regular line of steamships under the name and style of the North West Transport Line, between the Ports of New York and Rotterdam, and began to carry and has ever since carried third-class or steerage passengers thereby between the said ports: and at all such times it has operated its said steamships in an endeavor to compete with the defendant steamship lines in the carriage of third-class or steerage passengers, and has endeavored to obtain a share in such traffic without being a party to the aforesaid unlawful contract of February 5, 1908, and to the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy among the defendant steamship lines. 91

In and for the further execution of the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy, and pursuant to resolution of March 25th, 1908, hereinbefore mentioned, the defendant steamship lines on or about the first day of April, 1909, authorized and directed the aforesaid committee of three, in New York City, to select "fighting steamers" to carry third-class or steerage passengers at cut rates against the steamships of said North West Transport Lines on behalf of all the defendant steamship lines. 92

In the month of March, 1910 (after the Government instituted an inquiry into the affairs and conduct of the defendant steamship lines), the aforesaid committee of three in New York, it is said was disbanded, but the above described unlawful methods adopted by the defendant steamship lines to eliminate competition with them in the carriage of steerage passengers by said North West Transport Line, are continued and now are in force except that since March, 1910, the said "fighting steamers" are selected and their rates for steerage transportation altered from time to time by the defendant steamship lines in Europe and notices of such action are now sent by them to the individual defendants representing them in this country, and such cut rates for such "fighting steamers" are and since March, 1910, have been put in force by notices sent out by the individual defendants to the agents throughout the United States for the sale of tickets for third-class steerage transportation on such lines. 93

Owing to the above described illegal and oppressive measures adopted in concert by the defendant

94 steamship lines for the purpose of excluding said North West Transport Line from a participation in said traffic and effectuating the restraint and monoply of the said traffic pursuant to the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy said North West Transport Line has at all times since the institution of its said service been prevented from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic and has been forced to carry such of it as it has secured at a financial loss.

Further, in pursuance of the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy and to prevent other per-95 sons and corporations from engaging in the traffic covered thereby, the defendant steamship lines have agreed that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line, any person who shall act as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with said defendants' lines; this agreement is now in force and the measures provided for thereunder are today employed by the individual defendants within the United States and particularly in the Southern District of New York for and on behalf of the defendant steamship lines, and particularly as a part of the above described illegal and oppressive at-96 tack upon the said North West Transport Line.

Excessive and arbitrary rates are charged by defendants for steerage transportation.

At all times since the formation of the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy (and since the adoption of the aforesaid unlawful contract), and the institution of the practices hereinbefore referred to as adopted in pursuance thereof, each and all of the defendant steamship lines, in pursuance of said combination, conspiracy and contract, have arbitrarily fixed their rates for steerage transportation so as to bring about the arbitrary division of traffic hereinbefore referred to and at the same time to maintain rates at that artificial level at which said traffic so monopolized may be made to yield the highest net return to them, and by such action in fixing said rates they have deprived and are depriving the public of the benefit of the normal division of traffic between persons and corporations engaged in such traffic, according to the needs and convenience of the public, that would naturally have resulted from free competition among persons and corporations engaged in such traffic, and of the benefit of the lower scale of rates for such traffic that would normally have resulted from free competition among such persons and corporations, and of the benefit of superior facilities for such traffic that would normally have been provided as a result of said competition.

Penal enforcement of the terms of the unlawful contract.

Ever since the formation of the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy (and the adoption of the aforesaid unlawful contract), each and all of the defendant steamship lines has been constrained to conduct its steerage business in all respects in compliance with the terms and provisions of said contract under duress of loss of membership in said conspiracy for failure to observe and carry out the provisions of said contract and of the consequent forfeiture of the money deposit made by it under said contract and of the exposure of such line to the combined attack upon it by all the other defendant steamship lines by the practices hereinbefore described.

VI.

MONOPOLY RESULTING FROM CONSPIRACY.

By the aforesaid unlawful contract and the unlawful practices hereinbefore described as instituted by the defendant steamship lines to effect the objects of the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy, the defendant steamship lines have obtained and attempted to obtain a virtual monopoly of that part of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations that was included within the scope and objects of said conspiracy, and at the date of filing this petition upwards of ninety per cent of the total third-class or steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America is carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines and upwards of seventy-five per cent of such total steerage passenger traffic is regulated, limited and restrained by means of the aforesaid unlawful contract of February 5th, 1908.

VII.

PRAYER.

In consideration whereof, and inasmuch as petitioner can only have adequate relief in the premises in this honorable Court, where matters of this nature are properly cognizable and relievable, your petitioner prays:

1. That the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy and the aforesaid contract entered into and continued by the defendants as set forth herein, be declared illegal and in violation of the Act of Congress passed July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect Trade and Commerce against unlawful restraints and Monopolies" and the Acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof, and that an injunction issue restraining and prohibiting the defendants and each, every and all of them and their officers, servants, employees, attorneys and agents from doing any act in pursuance or in furtherance thereof by the means herein described, or by any other means, and be required to desist and withdraw from all connection with the same, and that they and each of them be required and compelled to cancel and abate said unlawful contract.

2. That each, every and all of said defendant steamship lines be enjoined, restrained and forbidden either to enter or clear any of their ships or vessels at the Port of New York or at any other Port of Entry within the United States of America or any of its possessions so long as it shall continue to operate pursuant to or co-operate with any of the other defendants under the aforesaid unlawful combination and conspiracy, or under or pursuant to any such or similar combination and conspiracy.

3. That the defendants and all and each of them, their officers, servants, employees, attorneys and agents be enjoined and prohibited from further agreeing, 105 combining, conspiring and acting together to establish and maintain rules, regulations and rates for carrying steerage passengers upon the several steamships operated by the defendant steamship lines or any of them, between ports in the United States and European ports, in restraint of the trade and commerce of the United States with foreign nations, and from entering into or continuing in, or doing anything in aid of any combination, association, contract or conspiracy to deprive the people traveling between points in the United States and European ports, of such facilities and rates for steerage transportation as will be afforded by free and unrestrained competition among said defendant steamship lines, or any of them.

4. That the defendants and all and each of them, their officers, servants, employees, attorneys, and agents, be enjoined and prohibited from further agreeing, combining, conspiring or acting together to injure or destroy the business of any person or corporation engaged in or who may at any time hereafter be engaged in the business of carrying steerage passengers between points in the United States and European 107 ports, and from further agreeing, combining, conspiring or acting together to monopolize the said steerage traffic in the trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations or any part thereof.

5. That the defendants and each of them, their officers, agents, attorneys, servants and employees be enjoined and prohibited from entering into, or taking part in, or performing any contract, combination or conspiracy, the object, purpose or effect of which will be a restraint of, or a monopolization or attempt to monopolize trade and commerce in the transportation of steerage passengers between the United States and foreign nations, in violation of the provisions of 108 the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect Trade and Commerce against unlawful restraint and Monopolies" and the Acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, either by agreeing or contracting together or with one another expressly or impliedly, directly or indirectly, as to the prices at which the said service of transportation of steerage passengers shall be rendered or as to a division of said traffic, or by agreeing or contracting together, or with one another, with a view to the imposition of any burden or limitation upon the service of transporting steerage passengers, or by contracting or agreeing together, or with one another, expressly or impliedly, directly or indirectly, to contribute to any pool or general fund, any part of the proceeds of such transportation, or to maintain any such pool or general fund made from such contributions. 109

6. That upon the filing of this petition, an injunction or restraining order be granted, restraining the defendants and each of them in the manner expressly set forth in Paragraphs 1 to 5, inclusive, of this prayer.

7. That your petitioner have such other further and general relief as to this honorable Court may appear to be meet and proper. 110

8. To the end that said defendants may, if they can, show why your petitioner should not have the relief herein prayed for, and may, according to their best and utmost knowledge, remembrance, information and belief, full, true, direct and perfect answer make but not under oath, answer under oath being hereby expressly waived, to each and all matters in this bill contained, and that as fully as if the same were here repeated paragraph by paragraph and they were specially interrogated thereunto severally, may it please your Honors to grant to your petitioner a writ of subpoena and respondendum issuing out of and under the seal of this Court, to be directed to said defendants and each of them, commanding them and each of them on a certain day and under a certain penalty to be therein inscribed, to appear before your Honors in this Court, and then and there full, true, direct and perfect answer make to all and singular the premises herein set forth and further to stand, to perform and abide by such further order or decree 111 as to your Honors shall seem meet, and your petitioner will ever pray.

the following contract has this day been concluded:

118 Petition

ARTICLE 1.

The Companies before named guarantee to each other the percental participation as defined and provided for in Article 3 of this Contract of the entire steerage traffic forwarded by the parties to this Contract from all European Ports to and via the United States of America and Canada and vice versa in vessels owned, leased, chartered or controlled by them without regard to the flag. Excepted are Italian and Oriental passengers forwarded by direct steamers through the Straits of Gibraltar. (Oriental passengers 119 means passengers to or from Greece, Africa and Asia.)

ARTICLE 2.

All passengers forwarded in any intermediate class between steerage and cabin, as defined in Article 13, to be considered as steerage passengers in the sense and meaning of this Contract.

Commentary to Article 2

(a) The word "Cabin" in the sense of this Con-
120 tract is understood to mean the first and second cabin.

(b) Intermediate or even cabin passengers are steeragers unless they pay at least the lowest cabin-fare as defined in Article 13.

(c) Steeragers once embarked by a Line cannot be counted a second time by the same Line or any other Line in case of transfers through accidents, etc.

ARTICLE 3.

The proportions in which the Lines participate in the total transportation of steeragers in accordance with Article 1 of this contract are fixed as follows (subject to the figures being checked) :—

The Cunard S. S. Co.'s Adriatic service, the Allan Line's Canadian services, and the Canadian Pacific Ry Co., Atlantic S. S. Lines, are not covered by this contract as far as westbound business is concerned, except for the conditions attached to the Cunard S. S. Co.'s Adriatic service as provided for on page 33.

ARTICLE 4.

If a Line ceases to carry steeragers in the sense of Article 1, its share of participation as fixed in Article 3 will be divided amongst the other Lines in proportion to the percental participation appertaining to each Line, according to Article 3.

Petition 127

Commentary to Article 4

(a) In case a Line ceases to exist or ceases to forward steeragers, the deposit made by such Line as stipulated in Article 17 will be returned to it after the expiration of 6 months but only if and in so far as no claim lays against the deposit under this contract.

(b) If a Line transfers its business in part or in whole to a successor or if an amalgamation with another Line takes place, the Line so transferring business is bound to make it binding upon its successor 128 to enter into this contract and to become a party to it with all the rights and obligations arising out of this contract, and the deposit made by the former Line, forthwith devolves upon the other Line, and stands valid on behalf of the latter.

ARTICLE 5.

(a) If any of the Lines are compelled by vis major to discontinue their entire service or even only their steerage service for longer than 4 weeks after its last sailing (the day of this sailing included), such Line ceases to be a party to this contract from the 129 date of its last sailing, but becomes a party to it again immediately upon the resumption of its service or even only of its steerage service.

(b) In the interval, the participation-quota of such Line devolves pro rata of the participation as per Article 3 upon the other Lines.

(c) In case Lines representing 40 per cent of the shares are compelled contemporaneously to discontinue their steerage services for longer than four weeks from their last sailing, the present contract to 130 be suspended so long as such discontinuance of the service or services lasts, beginning from the last sailing.

Commentary to Article 5

(a) It was not considered feasible to closely define the conception of "vis major" inasmuch as the opinion generally prevailed that it would be impossible to exhaust all the eventualities which might in this respect arise.

131 (b) But it was unanimously thought that not only the blockade of ports, war and similar events of a political or revolutionary kind should be comprised in the conception of vis major, but that also obstruction of ports by ice or from other causes, as for instance; if a narrow fairway should be completely closed up by a sunken vessel in or outside of a port, shall be considered as vis major. A cessation of a Canadian service during the Winter season when the St. Lawrence is closed shall not be considered as coming under this clause.

(c) A Line ceasing to be a party means, that the accounts are closed with it up to the day when the 132 Line had its last sailing, and a Line becomes a party again, means that the accounts are re-opened with it from the day of its rejoining the contract, that is, from the day of its first sailing.

ARTICLE 6.

(a) Any Line or Lines whose steerage transportation in a year exceeds in point of number the proportions fixed by Articles 3 to 4 have to pay a compensation price of £4 for each passenger (soul) carried in excess of the established proportion.

133

(b) Such money to be paid to the Line or Lines who have not reached their participation-quota and such payments to be made in proportion to the number of steeragers which each Line is short.

Commentary to Article 6

(a) The stipulation of a compensation payment for each steerager carried beyond the proportion allotted by this Contract forms one of the main features of the entire Contract. The payment of such compensation is certainly not the intent and purpose of the Contract, but it is the requisite means to deter the Lines from following the tendency to exceed their proportion.

(b) The possibility ought not to be excluded to effect alterations with regard to the figure £4 in the event of it becoming evident that from extraordinary causes, the stipulated compensation proves to be too low or too high for the purposes of this contract.

(c) If for instance the steerage rates by any Line should fall below £4, the compensation price of £4 was considered excessive for the purpose of this contract.

(d) It was therefore agreed that the compensation can be advanced and lowered by a majority of the Lines representing at least 75 per cent of the shares as fixed in Article 3.

(e) It was, however, understood that alterations of the compensation price can in no case be decided otherwise than to take effect at the beginning of the next week.

136 Petition

ARTICLE 7.

The Compensation price fixed by Article 6, as also the statistics relating to the transportation of steeragers, is in all cases based upon the number of persons or souls, so that children and infants always count as full passengers in the sense of this present contract.

Commentary to Article 7

The stipulation contained in this Article was deemed 137 necessary in view of the fact that if for children and infants certain fractions of the rate for adults were to be reckoned, the accounts would be unduly complicated.

ARTICLE 8.

(a) Provisional compensation accounts to be prepared monthly by the Secretary who has to direct the party or parties in excess of their share with regard to the amount of compensation to be paid by them. Such payments have to be effected within a fortnight after receipt of the Secretary's notice.

138 (b) Final settlements will be made at the end of each calendar year on the basis of a compensation account prepared by the Secretary comprising the entire year. Objections against this final account to be made within four weeks, failing which, the accounts shall stand.

(c) Objections to the correctness of the accounts form no release from the obligation to effect the provisional settlement.

Commentary to Article 8

No comment needed.

ARTICLE 9.

Each Line undertakes to arrange its services in such a manner that the number of steeragers which it actually carries corresponds as nearly as possible with the number allotted to it by this contract.

Commentary to Article 9

As already explained in the comment to Article 6, the payment of the compensation moneys is not the object of this Contract, but merely the means of 140 deterring the Lines from endeavoring to exceed their participation-quota.

ARTICLE 10.

(a) For the purposes of the compilation of the compensation accounts, all the Lines have to furnish to the Secretary every 7th, 15th, 23rd, and last day of a month, their statistics of the steeragers and also 2nd Cabin Passengers carried by them in the week ending with these respective dates, and the destination of the steamers.

(b) A fine of £5 shall be imposed upon any Line 141 delaying the delivery of the statistics for more than three days.

(c) The Secretary has to furnish to the Lines, weekly, the statistics of the passengers carried, and monthly, a statement showing the position of the Lines versus each other, and not later than on the 15th of each month for the preceeding month.

Commentary to Article 10

No comment needed.

142 Petition

ARTICLE 11.

(a) In case the results thus obtained show that any of the Lines have exceeded their proportion or have remained below it, such Line is entitled and in duty bound to adopt measures calculated to bring about a correct adjustment. But before putting such measures into operation, the Line is bound to inform the Secretary of the measures proposed to be adopted.

(b) The other Lines are entitled to await what 143 result the measures taken produce, or in so far they represent 75 per cent of the shares they may direct other or more forcible measures, which can only refer to rates to be set in motion. In the latter case, the Lines are bound to put such measures into force without delay and without demur.

Commentary to Article 11

(a) All parties were unanimously of the opinion that the adjustment is, whenever practicable, to be effected not by reducing the rates of one Line, but on the contrary, by raising the rates of one or several of 144 the Lines.

(b) No Line to be compelled to fix its gross rate per adult steerager at less than £5 or more than £8.

(c) It was expressly understood that there is to be no appeal against the decisions taken by such majority of 75 per cent, as such decisions will in all cases be solely in respect to questions of rate.

(d) Even in case the Lines themselves do not propose the adoption of measures, a majority of the Lines representing 75 per cent of the shares can immediately proceed to take measures, as for instance; they may direct that the rates shall be raised or reduced.

(e) In all cases under this contract where percentages have to be taken into consideration, it is understood that in questions on westbound business, the westbound percentages, in questions on eastbound business the eastbound percentages, and in general, questions the mean of the west—and eastbound percentages of each Line shall apply.

ARTICLE 12.

No Line has the right to alter its steerage and second cabin rates without having previously informed the Secretary.

Commentary to Article 12

No comment needed.

ARTICLE 13.

(a) Unless there is a second-class rate agreement, the lowest second cabin rates of any Line westbound must be at least £2, and eastbound at least $10, higher than the highest normal third-class rates of the respective steamer. In case a Continental Line should carry third-class and steerage passengers, the basis for fixing its second-class rate shall be its steerage rate.

(b) The lowest prepaid cabin rate in America of any of the Lines must be at least equal to the lowest cabin rate of the same Line on this side.

148 Petition

Commentary to Article 13

(a) The word cabin is also here, as in Article 2, understood to comprise both the first cabin and the second cabin.

(b) If a Line has fixed and published its second cabin tariff, it cannot be compelled to change this tariff during the current season whatever changes in the steerage rates may occur. Each Line shall indicate to the Secretary when its seasons commence and end, and also indicate the rates.

149 (c) The rate of exchange with regard to cabin rates is fixed for dollars at marks 4 or 4 shillings.

ARTICLE 14.

(a) The Lines undertake to pay out of the gross steerage rate, a commission to their agents which must not exceed in Great Britain 6/- per adult to ordinary agents, or 9/- to general agents, or on the Continent not more than 15/- for a full steerager, or 12 kroners in Scandinavia or 17 Finnish marks in Finland.

150 (b) The maximum commission for second cabin passengers per adult in Great Britain to be not more than 5 per cent with a minimum of 9/- to ordinary agents or 13/6 to general agents and on the Continent a maximum of 6%, but each Line is entitled to grant a minimum of 15 marks on a single trip per adult.

Commentary to Article 14.

In respect to the question as to who is to be considered as agent of a Line and more especially also whether the so-called town agents are comprised in the term of agent, it was unanimously decided, that as agents in the sense and meaning of the contract, only such agents are to be considered who are regularly appointed by a Line. In the case of the British Lines, any agent appointed by their head agents at the ports shall be considered as a firmly engaged agent of a Line.

ARTICLE 15.

The Cash Steerage Rates and the American Prepaid Rates shall be established on the following equivalence 152

M 100	Dollars	24 1/2
" 110	"	27
" 120	"	29 1/2
" 130	"	31 1/2
" 140	"	34
" 150	"	36 1/2
" 160	"	38 1/2
" 170	"	41
" 190	"	45 1/2
" 200	"	48

Commentary to Article 15.

(a) It was not thought necessary to make any stipulation in respect to the rate of commission to be paid to agents in America for prepaids, so long as the rates of commission on the other side are fixed by the Continental Conference and/or the North-Atlantic Conference, but it is agreed that in no case, the sub-agents' commission shall exceed 2 Dollars or the head agents' commission 3 Dollars, and the names of such head agents shall be scheduled with the Secre-

154 tary of the Continental Conference and/or North-Atlantic Conference in New York and with the Secretary of the Atlantic Conference.

(b) It was agreed that with a view to regulate the question in respect to the European inland transportation in connection with the prepaid business, each Line may issue a Tariff containing not more than 300 stations, showing the cost of transportation from such stations to the port of embarkation. No commission shall be allowed on these European inland rates.

ARTICLE 16.

(a) The Lines undertake to comply with Article 8 of the "General Rules, third series, of the Continental Conference" which reads as follows:

"No circulars or publications shall be issued by any Line reflecting upon or instituting comparisons with any Conference Line unfavorable to the latter, and no party hereto shall support any newspaper which may systematically attack any Conference Line."

(b) They further undertake to send to the Secretary any printed matter and circulars sent to agents 156 in relation to the steerage business, so far as such matters are not of purely internal nature.

Commentary to Article 16.

(a) In view of the fact that the stipulations referred to in this Article of the Continental Conference have stood the test of many years practical working, it was decided not to alter anything with regard to such stipulations of the Continental Conference, but it was agreed that the words "support any newspaper" are more especially understood to mean that no advertisements are to be given to such newspaper.

(b) It was furthermore decided that all the Lines shall be responsible for their agents and employees or other representatives in this sense, that the Lines are bound not only immediately to dismiss an agent, etc., who in respect to another Line has disregarded the stipulations of Article 16, but that all the Lines are also bound to break off all and every direct or indirect business connection with such agent.

(c) An agent, etc., who has thus been dismissed, must not be engaged by any of the other Lines nor are they allowed to have any business connection directly or indirectly with such person.

ARTICLE 17.

For the faithful performance of the conditions of this agreement, the parties deposit with the Secretary a promissory note in the amount of £1,000 for each per cent proportion.

This note is only payable if it is accompanied by the award of an arbitrator, provided for in this agreement, or by the award of another arbitrator, agreed upon by the parties at difference.

Commentary to Article 17.

No comment needed.

ARTICLE 18.

(a) The sum deposited shall be considered the amount of liquidated damages and thus entirely forfeited, if the Line who made the deposit unduly withdraws from the present contract before its expiration, or if the Line resorts to actions which render the continuance of this present contract impossible, and which are, therefore, to be considered equivalent to a withdrawal from this present contract, as for instance:

160 Petition

(b) Refusal to pay compensation money or failure to replenish the deposit in due time, or assisting directly or indirectly a new opposition Line, or starting or assisting a Line whereby the business as defined in Article 1 would be seriously interfered with.

161 Commentary to Article 18.

No comment needed.

ARTICLE 19.

In the event of a deposit being declared entirely forfeited the Line or Lines who have claims to compensation will in the first instance receive satisfaction out of the same pro rata of their claims. Any remaining surplus will be divided amongst all Lines excluding the Line the deposit of which has been declared forfeited proportionate to their participation-162 quota.

Commentary to Article 19.

ARTICLE 20.

(a) Penalties in case of contravention against or infraction of any stipulations of this contract shall be fixed by the Arbitrator, but in no case shall such penalties exceed the amount deposited by the party at fault.

163

(b) The amount of penalty to be in each case, not less than £250 for each contravention or infraction, except as provided for in Article 10.

(c) In case of the contravention or infraction being made wilfully and designedly, especially in case of any wilful and intentionally incorrect statement or declaration in respect to statistics, the penalty shall not be less than £2,500.

(d) The sums accruing from penalties are to be divided amongst the other Lines in the same manner as provided for at the end of Article 19.

(e) Unless the penalty be paid to the Secretary within 8 days after the Line concerned has received the relative award, the deposit will be drawn upon up to the amount of such penalty.

Commentary to Article 20.

It was thought that a penalty of £2,500 for each case might in case of systematically incorrect statements amount to such an extravagant sum that it would be impossible to recover it, or that the deposit would be entirely exhausted thereby; hence this stipulation, that in such case the penalty need not be applied to each case separately, but is fixed at £2,500 minimum, which implies that a higher amount can be fixed according to the gravity of the infraction, the number of cases involved, as well as the length of time during which the infractions and contraventions have been practiced.

ARTICLE 21.

In the event of a deposit having been dealt with the same must within 14 days after the day on which it 166 has been so dealt with be replenished up to its original amount.

Commentary to Article 21.

The replenishment of the deposit shall be effected by the Lines without their having been called upon to effect such replenishment.—The notes required to replenish the deposit are to be transmitted to the Secretary in the same manner as stipulated in Article 17. The Secretary is bound forthwith to arrange for the notes so received being immediately deposited with a 167 bank. As stipulated in Article 18, the remainder is entirely forfeited if the deposit is not replenished in due time.

ARTICLE 22.

(a) Other Lines can be admitted to the present Contract, and the terms and conditions of the latter can be altered and new terms and conditions can be added thereto, but only by the unanimous vote of the Lines unless otherwise provided for in this Contract.

(b) All alterations and additions made in respect of this present Contract, to be valid and binding upon 168 the Lines, parties to this present Contract only when all the Lines have given their written consent to such alterations and additions.

Commentary to Article 22.

ARTICLE 23.

(a) The execution and control of the fulfilment of the stipulations of the present contract are confided firstly to the Secretary, secondly to the Arbitrator.

(b) The Secretary must be a person entirely and in every respect independent of any of the parties to this present contract. The Secretary shall be appointed or dismissed by a majority of the Lines representing 75 per cent of the shares. Mr. H. Peters at Jena is hereby appointed as Secretary.

(c) Among his duties are: To receive the statistical statements, to examine the same as also the accounts, for which purpose the Secretary shall have access to the Passenger Offices of the Lines and can there examine all books, correspondence, &c., so far as he may deem it practicable; to communicate the statistics and accounts to all the Lines concerned, and act as mediator in general in the transactions between the Lines themselves, so far as such transactions appertain to matters relative to this Contract; wherefore, the Secretary has also to see that all Lines receive regularly and simultaneously all necessary information; to control the steerage prices in accordance with Article 11; to collect the payment of the penalties; to call the Meetings of the Lines according to Article 25 and keep the minutes of these Meetings; to effect the Compensation Accounts.

(d) It shall be the duty of the Secretary to use every exertion to settle difficulties amicably.

(e) The expenses of the Secretary are to be paid by the Lines in proportion to the mean of the percentages allotted to each according to Article 3, but the salary of the Secretary shall be paid by the Lines in equal parts.

172 (f) There is no objection to the British Lines sending their statements and reports through the Secretary of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference in Liverpool.

ARTICLE 24.

All parties mutually agree that any dispute or claims between any of them, or between any one or more of them, and the rest of them arising under this agreement, shall be settled by Arbitration as follows:

173 (a) Arbitration proceedings, unless the parties in dispute agree otherwise, shall take place alternately in England and Germany; to commence with England.

(b) Notice in writing of intention to prefer a claim shall be given in reasonable time, to the party complained of, signed by or on behalf of the complaining party, and stating the nature and also particulars of the claim. Such notice shall as to any party hereto be deemed properly served if sent by post prepaid in a registered letter, duly addressed to the principal office in England of such British
174 or American Line, and to the principal office on the Continent of such Continental Line, and shall be deemed to have been delivered in the ordinary course of post. Copies to be sent to the Secretary, who has to inform the other parties.

(c) Unless the disputing parties mutually agree to the appointment of a single Arbitrator within 14 days from the date of the aforesaid notice, each party shall without delay, appoint in writing an Arbitrator to act on his behalf, and the two Arbitrators so chosen shall appoint an Umpire. In case they cannot agree upon the Umpire, the latter to be nominated by the President of the Board of Trade if the arbitration takes place in England, and by the President of the Hanseatic court of appeal in case the arbitration takes place in Germany.

(d) Should either of the parties fail to appoint an Arbitrator within 21 days after notice of the intended reference has been given, and for seven days after service upon him or them of notice in writing by the other disputing 176 party or parties appointing his or their Arbitrator then the one Arbitrator who has been chosen may if so required by the party or parties who appointed him proceed to act as sole Arbitrator in the reference whether the party failing to appoint an Arbitrator appear before him or not, and the decision of such sole Arbitrator shall be final and binding.

(e) The arbitrator or arbitrators shall alone have power to determine whether any claim preferred comes within the terms of this agreement, and also as to which of the parties shall pay the costs of the reference. 177

(f) The arbitrator or arbitrators shall take into consideration whether from the circumstances disclosed it appears that proved breaches are isolated offences, or whether they are incidents in a systematic violation of this agreement, and shall impose damages accordingly.

(g) The damages for breach of this agreement shall be imposed by the arbitrator having due regard to the stipulations in Article 20.

178 Petition

(h) Damages shall be payable within eight days from the date of the notification of the award.

(i) Each party hereto agrees that the amount of any fines or damages to be imposed upon him or them by the Arbitrator or Arbitrators as above provided shall be treated as the liquidated and ascertained damage for the breach of this Agreement complained of and not in the nature of penalty or under any circumstances be regarded otherwise than as the 179 true and ascertained damages resulting from the breach, and each party hereby irrevocably declares himself finally stopped from raising any contrary contention.

(k) The Arbitrator or Arbitrators shall notwithstanding they may have made and published an award have power to re-open and reconsider the same and to hear further evidence and to make a fresh award provided cause be shown satisfactory to him or them within one week after the award is first made and published, or if the Arbitrator or Arbitrators see cause to extend the time, then within three 180 weeks of the issue and publication of the said award. The award of the Arbitrator takes the place and is equivalent to a legal judgment given by the highest instance of any law court against which all right of appealing is exhausted, and it is expressly understood that all the parties to this present contract relinquish all and every right to employ against the award given any legal means of whatever name or description such legal means may be.

(l) Any disputes arising under this Agreement shall be settled according to the law of the country in which the arbitration takes place, wherever the domicile residence or office of business of the parties to this Agreement may be or become.

(m) In case of arbitration taking place in England, all and singular, the provisions of the Arbitration Act 1889, or any statutory modification or amendment thereof for the time being in force, shall be applicable.

(n) In case of arbitration taking place in Germany, the German law will apply, but the manner in which the arbitrator thinks proper to take the evidence of the parties and of the witnesses who may have to be heard, as also the modus which he adopts in ascertaining the facts of the matter at issue are left entirely to his conscientious decision, and it is expressly understood that he is not bound to the observance of the rules in operation in respect of any legal procedure.

ARTICLE 25.

(a) Meetings are convened by the Secretary. Such meetings to be held alternately at London and at Cologne, to commence in Cologne.

(b) Regular meetings shall be held on the first Thursday of March and December.

(c) Special meetings shall take place within 21 days if the majority of the Lines demand same, within four weeks if demanded by two of the Lines and within five weeks if demanded by only one Line.

184 Petition

(d) The subject or subjects to be dealt with in such meetings to be notified by the Secretary to all the parties concerned not less than eleven days before the date on which the meeting is to take place.

(e) At meetings thus convened the party or the parties present shall form a quorum irrespective of the number.

(f) Resolutions cannot be taken upon any subjects which have not been duly notified to all the parties concerned, unless all the parties to this contract are 185 represented at such meetings and agree.

(g) Resolutions on subjects transmitted by the Secretary to the Lines can also be taken by a vote given in writing provided no Line objects to such manner of voting.

(h) Minutes shall be written at all meetings, the same to be signed at such meetings by all the parties present, and minutes so written and signed shall stand as a true record of the proceedings and shall be considered final.

Commentary to Article 25.

186 Each Line demanding a meeting in doing so has to communicate to the Secretary the subjects which the Line proposes for discussion. Each Line can propose additions to these subjects provided such additions are forwarded to the Secretary so as to be in in his possession at least five days before the meetings.

ARTICLE 26.

(a) It is understood that in all cases in which resolutions have to be taken in respect to existing differences of opinion as to the terms and conditions of this present contract, as also in the case of all decisions by the Lines or by the Arbitrator not only the tenor but also more especially the spirit of this present contract, is to be taken into consideration.

(b) For this purpose there have been appended to the various articles commentaries with expositions, and it is understood that same are to be considered to their full extent to form an integrant part of this present contract.

ARTICLE 27. 188

(a) This present contract has been concluded for the period from March 1st, 1908, to February 28th, 1911, and shall after this latter date continue from year to year unless due notice be given to the Secretary not later than on the 1st December of the intention of terminating same at the end of the next February, namely, in the first instance on the 1st December, 1910.

(b) The withdrawal of any Line from the present contract releases the other Lines from all obligations except from the obligation to pay the Compensation accounts incurred under this contract up to the date of 189 such withdrawal, unless the latter agree amongst themselves to continue the present contract under the same or under altered terms and conditions.

196 Answer of Anchor Line (Henderson Brothers), Limited, and William Coverly.

IN THE

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against	In Equity
197 HAMBURG-AMERIKANISCHE PACKET - FAHRT - ACTIEN - GESELLSCHAFT, and others, Defendants.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting in equity:

The answer of the defendants Anchor Line (Henderson Brothers), Limited, and William Coverly, to the petition of the United States of America herein:

198 These defendants respectively, now and at all times hereafter saving to themselves all and all manner of benefit or advantage of exception, or otherwise, that can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and imperfections in said petition contained, for answer thereto or to so much thereof as these defendants are advised it is material or necessary for them to make answer to, severally answering, allege:

The individual defendant William Coverly, who joins in this answer, for himself avers that he has not personal knowledge with reference to many of the averments of the petition or of the admissions, denials and averments in this answer set forth, so far as the same relate to matters alleged to have taken place abroad or with which he had no personal connection; but he says that all of the admissions, denials and averments in this answer set forth are true to the best of his knowledge, information and belief. And the corporate defendant herein, in making its denials, admissions and averments, except in so far as they refer particularly to the individual defendant William Coverly, intends the same to refer only to its own acts and transactions.

I.

Denial of combination and conspiracy

1. These defendants admit that the corporate defendants herein are engaged, but deny that the individual defendants are engaged, in foreign trade and commerce as common carriers of freight and passengers, including third-class or steerage passengers, between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, except that they say, upon information and belief, that the defendant, Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is not so engaged, and they deny that the corporate defendants are engaged as common carriers 201
of passengers and freight between inland points in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa, and they deny that in respect to the business alleged in Article I of the petition they are violating the provisions of the Act of Congress passed July 2, 1890, entitled, "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; and they deny, upon information and belief, that any of their co-defendants are so engaged, and they deny that at any time they have been, or are now, engaged in any combination or conspiracy in violation of said acts.

II.

AS TO THE DESCRIPTION OF THE DEFENDANTS AND THE TRADE AND COMMERCE WHICH THEY CONDUCT

2. They admit the allegations contained in the paragraphs of Article II of the petition numbered 7 and 8.

3. They deny each and every allegation contained
203 in the paragraph of Article II of the petition numbered 24, except that they admit that some of the defendant steamship lines are in some respects natural competitors.

4. As to the allegations of the remaining paragraphs of Article II of the petition they are not sufficiently informed to make answer thereto and, therefore, leave the petitioner to make such proof in relation thereto as it may be advised.

III.

AS TO THE DESCRIPTION OF THE TRADE AND COM-
204 MERCE WHICH THE DEFENDANTS ARE CHARGED WITH MONOPOLIZING AND ATTEMPTING AND CONSPIRING TO MONOPOLIZE

5. They deny that immigration from Europe to the United States has steadily increased, and say that it reached its maximum in the year 1907, and that last year it was less than in any year for ten years prior thereto They admit that the traffic back and forth is large, but they deny that it is very lucrative. The other allegations of Article III of the petition they deny except that they admit that the steamship companies have been extending their facilities for handling such traffic, as well as their other business, and that the income from third class or steerage traffic between Europe and North America forms an important part of the revenue of the steamship companies.

IV.

Denial of Combination and Conspiracy

6. They deny that these defendants, and, upon information and belief, deny that any of the defendants, 206 have been or now are engaged in the United States or elsewhere in any combination or conspiracy to restrain or monopolize any part of the trade or commerce of the United States with foreign nations, or to destroy, eliminate, or suppress competition either between themselves or by others in the business of transportating third-class or steerage passengers between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, or have sought to accomplish any such combination or conspiracy or any objects thereof either in the manner or by the means alleged in the petition, or otherwise.

Denial of unlawful combination and conspiracy charged and of alleged manner and means of accomplishing same

As to agreement of February 5, 1908

7. They admit that on or about February 5, 1908, at London, England, the defendants mentioned in paragraph 1 of subdivision A of Article V of the petition entered into a contract, of which they believe Exhibit A annexed to the petition is a substantitially correct copy, but for greater certainty they pray leave to refer to the original upon the trial hereof. They deny, however, that said contract was or is unlawful and deny that by the execution thereof, or otherwise, said defendants entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy, and they deny all the other allegations of said subdivision A not expressly admitted herein, except as the same may appear from the original contract of February 5, 1908. Further answer-209 ing they say that said agreement was and is lawful under the laws of England, where the same was made, and under the laws of the countries of the parties thereto and of their vessels.

B

As to the Russian-American Line becoming a party to agreement

8. They deny that pursuant to or in furtherance of any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy the Russian-American Line was admitted to membership
210 in the Atlantic Conference or to all the provisions of said contract of February 5, 1908. They admit that at about the time mentioned in subdivision B of Article V of the petition the Russian-American Line entered into an agreement with the other defendant steamship lines, parties to said contract of February 5, 1908, with reference to steerage or third-class passenger traffic, but for answer to the allegations of said subdivision B regarding the contents of said agreement or of said contract of February 5, 1908, they beg leave to refer to the originals thereof and ask that they be produced upon the trial hereof.

Denial of unlawful acts

9. They say they are not informed as to whether, since the adoption of the contract of February 5, 1908, the business of all of the defendant steamship lines in the carriage of the steerage traffic referred to therein has been, or at the time of the filing of this petition was, carried on in all respects in accordance with the terms and provisions thereof or of resolutions adopted at meetings of the parties held in pursuance thereof, and, therefore, they leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised; but they deny that thereby or otherwise all free and natural competition between said steamship lines in the establishing of rates and furnishing of facilities for such steerage traffic has been wholly eliminated, and they allege that on the contrary at all times there has been and is now active competition between them. 212

10. They deny each and every allegation contained in the paragraph numbered 2 of subdivision C of Article V of the petition, and in particular they deny that they have entered into any unlawful agreement, combination or conspiracy, and they deny that any agreements into which they have entered necessarily involved the execution of their terms, scope and intent throughout the United States, or more particularly in the Southern District of New York; and they deny that since February 5, 1908, or at any other time, any of the individual defendants has been designated or established by his respective line at his respective office in the United States as agent for such line to carry out or make effective any unlawful agreement, combination or conspiracy whatsoever; and they deny that said individual defendants at their respective offices or agencies throughout the United States or in 213 the Southern District of New York, or at any other place or time, have been or are carrying out or executing any acts for the accomplishment of any unlawful combination, conspiracy or agreement whatsoever.

11. They deny that at any time whatever the individual defendants in the Southern District of New York or elsewhere have received orders or instructions from their respective principals with respect to the accomplishment of the objects and purposes of any unlawful combination or conspiracy whatsoever, or that any of said individual defendants have within said
215 Southern District of New York or elsewhere complied with or carried out any such instructions.

DENIAL OF AGREEMENT TO DESTROY COMPETITION OF INDEPENDENT LINES

12. They deny that in and for the execution of any unlawful combination or conspiracy or agreement, or in furtherance thereof, or otherwise, any or all of the defendant steamship lines, at a meeting held March 25, 1908, or at any other time, agreed that they should act together to eliminate and destroy the competition of any persons or corporations whatsoever, either in the business of carrying steerage passengers between 216 Europe and the United States in competition with any or all of the defendant steamship lines or otherwise.

DENIAL OF ARRANGEMENT TO USE SO-CALLED "FIGHTING STEAMERS" TO DESTROY COMPETITION, AND THAT COMPETITORS ARE CRUSHED.

13. They deny that in and for the execution of any resolution as alleged or for the purpose of effecting the objects of any unlawful combination or conspiracy the defendant steamship lines appointed a committee for the selection of so-called "fighting steamers," and they deny that the facts with reference to the appointment of a committee and its authority and powers, and as to the use and effect of said so-called "fighting steamers" are correctly or truly set forth in the petition, and they say that the facts in regard thereto are as follows, and not otherwise.

About March, 1908, lines known as the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the Russian-American Line, which were engaged in the transportation of steerage passengers between Libau and New York, and about April, 1909, the Uranium Steamship Company, under the name of the Northwest Transport Line and various other names, which was engaged in such transportation between Rotterdam and New York, adopted the plan of making such excessively low steerage rates that steerage passengers could not be carried therefor except at a loss. So long as said lines sought to secure such traffic only by fair and legitimate methods of competition the defendants did not reduce their rates in competition with said lines; but when said lines made such excessively low rates, and not until then, the defendants agreed that a committee of three in the United States should be authorized, whenever a vessel of said competing lines was booking passengers from New York at such low rates, to make a reduced rate for such one of the defendants' steamers sailing from New York at about the same time with the competing vessel as the committee might name; and it was also agreed that, in case the bookings for the steamer so named by the committee should exceed the capacity of such steamer, other steamers of the defendants sailing at about the same time should carry the excess and that the loss due to the difference between the reduced rate and the regular rates of the steamers carrying such excess passengers should be shared by the defendants. Said agreement was there-220 after put into effect, but no steamer of the defendants was at any time despatched or its time of sailing or destination changed with reference to the sailings of the competing vessels, and the reduced rates made for defendants' vessels were at no time lower than the rates which, as these defendants are informed and believe, were made by such competing vessels.

The sole intent and purpose of said agreement and action on the part of defendants was to restrict, so far as possible, the loss resulting from such excessively low rates of competing vessels, and was not in or for the execution or furtherance of or to effect the objects 221 of any unlawful combination or conspiracy or to eliminate or destroy competition on the part of said lines, or to force them out of business, or for any other unlawful, improper or unfair purpose. To have reduced the steerage rates on all of the defendants' steamers would have resulted in enormous loss and the driving out of business of the weaker among them, and the method adopted was necessary and reasonable in order to protect the defendants against such unfair and unnatural competition.

DENIAL THAT THE RUSSIAN VOLUNTEER FLEET WAS DRIVEN OUT OF BUSINESS.

14. They admit that from the month of March until the month of June, 1908, or thereabouts, the Russian Volunteer Fleet advertised steamers to sail from the port of New York to the port of Libau, in Russia, and advertised for and solicited persons to sail as third-class or steerage passengers upon such ships. They deny that said ships were thoroughly equipped for handling such traffic, but say, on the contrary, on information and belief, that such ships were small and poorly equipped for steerage transportation. They deny that the facts as to the competition of steamers of the defendant lines with the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet are truly and correctly set forth in the petition, and say that the true facts with regard thereto are as stated in paragraph 13 of this answer; they deny that the Russian Volunteer Fleet incurred loss or was forced to retire from the third-class or steerage business between New York and Russia by reason of any unfair or unlawful competition on the part of the defendant steamship lines; but they admit that in or about the month of July 1908, said fleet withdrew its steamships from the New York-Libau service and has ever since ceased to operate said line between said ports. 224

And they say that the reason for the withdrawal of said Russian Volunteer Fleet from said business was not because of any agreement or action of the defendants, but was solely because of the inferior character of its service and lack of sufficient funds and because of its action in carrying steerage passengers at such excessively low rates, and the defendants say that the retirement of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was not in fact any detriment or loss to the public or to persons wishing to travel third-class or steerage between New York and Russia.

DENIAL THAT THE RUSSIAN-AMERICAN LINE WAS DRIVEN OUT OF COMPETITION AND FORCED INTO UNLAWFUL COMBINATION OR CONSPIRACY. 225

15. They admit that from the month of March until the month of September, 1908, or thereabouts, the defendant the Russian-American Line was engaged in operating a line of steamships from the port of New York to the port of Libau, Russia, and in carrying thereon third-class or steerage passengers, and they admit that in conducting said business it was in competition to a certain extent with certain of the other defendant steamship lines, and that during said period it advertised its steamers to sail from the port of New York and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third-class or steerage passengers; but they deny that the facts with reference to the use of so-called "fighing steamers" are truly or correctly set forth in the petition, and say that the true facts in regard thereto are as stated in paragraph 13 of this answer. They deny that the Russian-American Line incurred financial loss in the conduct of its third-class or steerage traffic as the result of any unfair or unlawful competition on the part of the defendants, but 227 they say that any financial loss suffered by said Russian-American Line was due solely to its course in charging excessively low rates and was not due to any agreement or action on the part of the defendants, and they deny that it unlawfully or wrongfully sought admission to any unlawful combination or conspiracy in order to be permitted to continue in said business or otherwise; and they deny that the facts in reference to its admission into the Atlantic Conference are truly or correctly set forth in said petition, and they say that the true facts in regard thereto are alleged in paragraph 8 of this answer. And they say that said Russian-American Line, by greatly improving the 228 character of its vessels and service and by abandoning the practice of carrying steerage passengers at such excessively low rates, have been able to continue and establish its service, as these defendants are informed, upon a successful basis.

DENIAL OF UNFAIR COMPETITION AGAINST THE URANIUM STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

16. They admit that about April 1, 1909, the Uranium Steamship Company, Limited, began to operate and has ever since operated a regular line of steamships under different names and styles between the ports of New York and Rotterdam, and began to carry and has ever since carried third-class or steerage passengers between said ports, and that said company has competed to some extent with some of the defendant steamship lines in the carriage of third-class or steerage passengers, and that said company has not been a party to the contract of February 5, 1908; but they deny that the defendant steamship lines on or about April 1, 1909, or at any other time, in and for the execution of any unlawful combination or conspiracy, took any action with regard to the use of steamers in competition with the steamers of said company, and they allege that the true facts with relation to the use of so-called "fighting steamers" are truly set forth in paragraph 13 of this answer, and that the facts are as therein stated and not otherwise. 230

They admit that in March, 1910, the committee of three in New York was disbanded and that since that time steamers employed to protect the defendant lines against unfair and unnatural competition have been selected and their rates fixed from time to time by the defendant lines in Europe, and that notices of such action are now sent by them to the individual defendants representing them in this country, and the rates fixed have been put in force by notices sent out by the individual defendants through the agents throughout the United States. 231

They deny that by reason of any illegal or oppressive measures the Northwest Transport Line has at any time been prevented from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic or forced to carry said traffic at a financial loss, and they say that said Northwest Transport Line is still continuing in said steerage business and has a fair and reasonable share thereof, and if it has suffered loss in said business the sole reason therefor is the inferior character of its service and its excessively low rates, which have at all times been lower than any rates of the defendants.

They deny that in pursuance of any unlawful combination, conspiracy or agreement, or to prevent other persons or corporations from engaging in any traffic they have agreed that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who shall act as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with the defendant lines. They deny that any such agreement or manner of employing agents is adopted as a part of any illegal or oppressive attack upon the Northwest Transport Line
233 or any other steamship line; but they say that the defendant lines have agreed not to employ as agents persons who act as agents for steamship lines which have been engaged or are threatening to engage in unfair competition with the lines of the defendants, and they say that this is reasonable and necessary for the proper protection of themselves and their business and as a means to safeguard the interests of intending passengers against irresponsible steamship lines and their agents, and to prevent fraud and injury to such passengers.

DENIAL OF EXCESSIVE AND ARBITRARY RATES.

17. They deny that at any time and in pursuance
234 of any combination, conspiracy or contract, or otherwise, they have arbitrarily fixed their rates for steerage transportation for the purpose as alleged in the petition, or otherwise, and they deny that in fixing their rates they have deprived or are depriving the public of any benefit whatsoever; and they say that on the contrary the public has had the benefit of exceedingly low rates and of superior facilities, and that such rates and such facilities are far more favorable to the public than would have resulted had the defendants not entered into the lawful and reasonable agreement with reference to the conduct of their business as hereinbefore set forth.

DENIAL OF PENAL ENFORCEMENT OF THE TERMS OF ANY UNLAWFUL CONTRACT.

18. They deny all the allegations of the petition with reference to penal enforcement of the terms of the contract between the defendants and all duress upon or between the parties to said contract as alleged in the petition, and for the terms of said contract they refer to the original thereof when the same shall be produced on the trial hereof.

VI.

DENIAL OF MONOPOLY.

19. They deny that by any unlawful contract or unlawful practices the defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual or other monopoly of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations or of any part thereof. They are not informed as to the percentage of steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines, and therefore leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised. They deny that such steerage passenger traffic or any portion thereof is regulated, limited or restrained by means of any unlawful contract whatsoever, and they say that they are not informed as to what percentage of the steerage passenger traffic is conducted in accordance with the terms of the contract of February 5, 1908, and therefore leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised.

20. Further answering, these defendants say that the business of transporting passengers between European ports and ports in the United States is international in its character, and as such is not subject to regulation by the laws of any one nation but can be regulated only by international agreements or treaties.

21. Further answering, these defendants say that in enacting the Act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, the Congress of the United States did not intend to, and did not thereby, make agreements entered into by persons or corporations engaged in the transportation of passengers be-239 tween European ports and ports of the United States unlawful.

22. Further answering, these defendants say that in so far as the business of transporting passengers from Europe to the United States is concerned, no part of said business is transacted within the United States, but said business is wholly transacted in foreign countries and on the high seas. The only part of said business performed in the United States is the landing of passengers at ports in the United States, which right has been granted by treaty between the United States and the several nations to whose flags said steamers belong; and as to the whole of said business
240 of transporting passengers from European ports to ports in the United States the act of Congress aforesaid has not and cannot have any application, force or effect whatsoever.

23. In the absence of governmental regulation of ocean transportation between the United States and foreign nations, such as exists as to railroad transportation, agreements among persons engaged in such ocean transportation are essential. Without such regulation or agreements, the weaker lines would be driven out of business and only the strongest would survive. The agreement into which the defendants have entered does not result in undue or unreasonable restraint of foreign commerce. Interpreted reasonably, it does not restrain trade and commerce with foreign nations, nor does it create, or attempt to create, a monopoly. The very nature of the business is such as to make it impossible that a monopoly should be created. Competition on the seas is necessarily limited only by the number of vessels in existence. Any ship owner may employ his vessels where he will. No franchise is needed; all are free to sail the seas; and, unlike any other business, those engaged in ocean transportation may at any time change from one trade to another. Steamers engaged in one trade may enter another temporarily, and, after demoralizing business and ruining those engaged therein, may return to their former routes. Thus, a great steamship company engaged in a worldwide business may, for a period short or long, but sufficient for its purpose, concentrate its forces and by unnatural and cut-throat competition drive out of business the weaker lines regularly established and engaged in the service. In this way it could destroy all of its weaker competitors.

Agreements, therefore, among those engaged in the transatlantic trade, like the agreement of these defendants, are reasonable and necessary in order to make possible the continuance of the business. The agreement entered into by the defendants was not for the purpose of creating a monopoly, nor for the purpose of establishing and maintaining excessive and unreasonable rates, nor for the purpose of unlawfully destroying competition or restraining trade and commerce.

The necessity for such an agreement is shown by the history of the transatlantic trade. At times when no such agreement has been effective, those engaged

244 in the business have reduced rates in competition with each other to such a point that the continuance thereof would speedily have destroyed all but the strongest lines, and, in fact, such rate wars have been continued to such an extent that weaker lines have actually been forced out of business.

The necessity for such an agreement has also been strikingly shown by the action of the Government with reference to the transportation of steerage passengers by the railroads of the United States. For many years the railroads have divided among themselves by agreement the transportation in the United States of 245 steerage passengers arriving upon the lines of the defendants and others engaged in the transatlantic passenger business. The Interstate Commerce Commission, after a careful investigation of this practice of the railroads, concluded that, in the interest of the public, it should not be disturbed.

The effect of the present agreement between the defendants has not been to cause higher rates, but instead has resulted in steerage passengers receiving far more for their money than formerly. Larger and faster steamers have been put in service with better accommodations for steerage passengers and more frequent sailings, and the facilities for comfort and safety 246 have been greatly increased. All of this has been accomplished notwithstanding the increasingly stringent requirements of the laws of the United States and of the foreign countries from which the steamers sail. The requirements of the United States immigration laws alone have become, and are becoming year by year, more and more severe, and impose upon steamship owners greatly increased expenses. Notwithstanding all this, the charges made by the steamship companies for the service have been uniformly fair and reasonable and have not increased proportionately with the cost of the service. The present rates for steerage transportation are not substantially higher than those of former years. Such rates have not kept pace with the increased burdens upon steamship owners, the improved facilities furnished and the generally higher cost of living. The result, therefore, of agreements among the steamship companies, such as the agreement of February 5, 1908, has been beneficial to the public, and, instead of restraining foreign trade and commerce, has been to protect and develop it.

24. And these defendants now, having fully answered the petition herein, deny all and all manner of unlawful contract, combination, conspiracy, monopolizing or attempt to monopolize, wherewith they are charged by said petition; without this that if there is any other matter, cause or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for these defendants to make answer to and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed and avoided or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of these defendants or to any of them; all of which matters and things these defendants are ready and willing to aver, maintain and prove as this honorable Court shall direct, and humbly pray to be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs in this behalf most wrongfully sustained. 248 249

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against 251 HAMBURG-AMERIKANSCHE PACKET-FAHRT-ACTIEN-GESELLSCHAFT, and others, Defendants.	In Equity.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting in equity:

The answer of the defendants Nederlandsch-Americakaansche Stoomvaart Maatschappij (Holland-America Line) and Adrian Gips to the petition of the United States of America herein:

252 These defendants respectively, now and at all times hereafter saving to themselves all and all manner of benefit or advantage of exception, or otherwise, that can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and imperfections in said petition contained, for answer thereto or to so much thereof as these defendants are advised it is material or necessary for them to make answer to, severally answering, allege:

The individual defendant Adrian Gips, who joins in this answer, for himself avers that he has not personal knowledge with reference to many of the averments of the petition or of the admissions, denials and averments in this answer set forth, so far as the same relate to matters alleged to have taken place abroad or with which he had no personal connection; but he says that all of the admissions, denials and averments in this answer set forth are true to the best of his knowledge, information and belief. And the corporate defendant herein, in making its denials, admissions and averments, except in so far as they refer particularly to the individual defendant Adrian Gips, intends the same to refer only to its own acts and transactions.

I.

DENIAL OF COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY.

1. These defendants admit that the corporate defendants herein are engaged, but deny that the individual defendants are engaged, in foreign trade and commerce as common carriers of freight and passengers, including third-class or steerage passengers, between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, except that they say, upon information and belief, that the defendant, Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is not so engaged, and they deny that the corporate defendants are engaged as common carriers 255
of passengers and freight between inland points in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa, and they deny that in respect to the business alleged in Article I of the petition they are violating the provisions of the Act of Congress passed July 2, 1890, entitled, "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; and they deny, upon information and belief, that any of their co-defendants are so engaged, and they deny that at any time they have been, or are now, engaged in any combination or conspiracy in violation of said acts.

II.

AS TO THE DESCRIPTION OF THE DEFENDANTS AND THE TRADE AND COMMERCE WHICH THEY CONDUCT.

2. They admit the allegations contained in the paragraphs of Article II of the petition numbered 15 and 16.

257 3. They deny each and every allegation contained in the paragraph of Article II of the petition numbered 24, except that they admit that some of the defendant steamship lines are in some respects natural competitors.

4. As to the allegations of the remaining paragraphs of Article II of the petition they are not sufficiently informed to make answer thereto and, therefore, leave the petitioner to make such proof in relation thereto as it may be advised.

III.

258 AS TO THE DESCRIPTION OF THE TRADE AND COMMERCE WHICH THE DEFENDANTS ARE CHARGED WITH MONOPOLIZING AND ATTEMPTING AND CONSPIRING TO MONOPOLIZE.

5. They deny that immigration from Europe to the United States has steadily increased, and say that it reached its maximum in the year 1907, and that last year it was less than in any year for ten years prior thereto. They admit that the traffic back and forth is large, but they deny that it is very lucrative. The other allegations of Article III of the petition they deny except that they admit that the steamship companies have been extending their facilities for handling such traffic, as well as their other business, and that the income from third-class or steerage traffic between Europe and North America forms an important part of the revenue of the steamship companies.

IV.

DENIAL OF COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY.

6. They deny that these defendants, and, upon information and belief, deny that any of the defendants, 260 have been or now are engaged in the United States or elsewhere in any combination or conspiracy to restrain or monopolize any part of the trade or commerce of the United States with foreign nations, or to destroy, eliminate, or suppress competition either between themselves or by others in the business of transporting third-class or steerage passengers between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, or have sought to accomplish any such combination or conspiracy or any objects thereof either in the manner or by the means alleged in the petition, or otherwise.

V.

DENIAL OF UNLAWFUL COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY CHARGED AND OF ALLEGED MANNER AND MEANS OF ACCOMPLISHING SAME.

A.

As to agreement of February 5, 1908.

7. They admit that on or about February 5, 1908, at London, England, the defendants mentioned in paragraph 1 of Subdivision A of Article V of the petition entered into a contract, of which they believe Exhibit A annexed to the petition is a substantially correct copy, but for greater certainty they pray leave to refer to the original upon the trial hereof. They deny, however, that said contract was or is unlawful and deny that by the execution thereof, or otherwise, said defendants entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy, and they deny all the other allegations of said Subdivision A not expressly admitted herein, except as the same may appear from the original 263 contract of February 5, 1908. Further answering they say that said agreement was and is lawful under the laws of England, where the same was made, and under the laws of the countries of the parties thereto and of their vessels.

B.

As to the Russian-American Line becoming a party to agreement.

8. They deny that pursuant to or in furtherance of any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy the Russian-American Line was admitted to membership
264 in the Atlantic Conference or to all the provisions of said contract of February 5, 1908. They admit that at about the time mentioned in Subdivision B of Article V of the petition the Russian-American Line entered into an agreement with the other defendant steamship lines, parties to said contract of February 5, 1908, with reference to steerage or third-class passenger traffic, but for answer to the allegations of said Subdivision B regarding the contents of said agreement or of said contract of February 5, 1908, they beg leave to refer to the originals thereof and ask that they be produced upon the trial hereof.

C.

Denial of unlawful acts.

9. They say they are not informed as to whether, since the adoption of the contract of February 5, 1908, the business of all of the defendant steamship lines in the carriage of the steerage traffic referred to therein has been, or at the time of the filing of this petition was, carried on in all respects in accordance with the terms and provisions thereof or of resolutions adopted at meetings of the parties held in pursuance thereof, and, therefore, they leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised; but they deny that thereby or otherwise all free and natural competition between said steamship lines in the establishing of rates and furnishing of facilities for such steerage traffic has been wholly eliminated, and they allege that on the contrary at all times there has been and is now active competition between them. 266

10. They deny each and every allegation contained in the paragraph numbered 2 of Subdivision C of Article V of the petition, and in particular they deny that they have entered into any unlawful agreement, combination or conspiracy, and they deny that any agreements into which they have entered necessarily involved the execution of their terms, scope and intent throughout the United States, or more particularly in the Southern District of New York; and they deny that since February 5, 1908, or at any other time, any of the individual defendants has been designated or established by his respective line at his respective office in the United States as agent for such line to carry out or make effective any unlawful agreement, combination or conspiracy whatsoever; and they deny that said individual defendants at their respective offices or agencies throughout the United 267

States or in the Southern District of New York, or at any other place or time, have been or are carrying out or executing any acts for the accomplishment of any unlawful combination, conspiracy or agreement whatsoever.

11. They deny that at any time whatever the individual defendants in the Southern District of New York or elsewhere have received orders or instructions from their respective principals with respect to the accomplishment of the objects and purposes of any unlawful combination or conspiracy whatsoever,
269 or that any of said individual defendants have within said Southern District of New York or elsewhere complied with or carried out any such instructions.

DENIAL OF AGREEMENT TO DESTROY COMPETITION OF INDEPENDENT LINES.

12 They deny that in and for the execution of any unlawful combination or conspiracy or agreement, or in furtherance thereof, or otherwise, any or all of the defendant steamship lines, at a meeting held March 25, 1908, or at any other time, agreed that they should act together to eliminate and destroy the competition of any persons or corporations whatsoever, either in 270 the business of carrying steerage passengers between Europe and the United States in competition with any or all of the defendant steamship lines or otherwise.

DENIAL OF ARRANGEMENT TO USE SO-CALLED "FIGHTING STEAMERS" TO DESTROY COMPETITION, AND THAT COMPETITORS ARE CRUSHED.

13. They deny that in and for the execution of any resolution as alleged or for the purpose of effecting the objects of any unlawful combination or conspiracy the defendant steamship lines appointed a committee for the selection of so-called "fighting steamers," and they deny that the facts with reference to the appointment of a committee and its authority and powers, and as to the use and effect of said so-called "fighting steamers" are correctly or truly set forth in the petition, and they say that the facts in regard thereto are as follows, and not otherwise.

About March, 1908, lines known as the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the Russian-American Line, which were engaged in the transportation of steerage passengers between Libau and New York, and about April, 1909, the Uranium Steamship Company, under the name of the Northwest Transport Line and various other names, which was engaged in such transportation between Rotterdam and New York, adopted 272 the plan of making such excessively low steerage rates that steerage passengers could not be carried therefor except at a loss. So long as said lines sought to secure such traffic only by fair and legitimate methods of competition, the defendants did not reduce their rates in competition with said lines; but when said lines made such excessively low rates, and not until then, the defendants agreed that a committee of three in the United States should be authorized, whenever a vessel of said competing lines was booking passengers from New York at such low rates, to make a reduced rate for such one of the defendants' steamers sailing from New York at about the same time with 273 the competing vessel as the committee might name; and it was also agreed that, in case the bookings for the steamer so named by the committee should exceed the capacity of such steamer, other steamers of the defendants sailing at about the same time should carry the excess and that the loss due to the difference between the reduced rate and the regular rates of the steamers carrying such excess passengers should be shared by the defendants. Said agreement was thereafter put into effect, but no steamer of the defendants was at any time despatched or its time of sailing or destination changed with reference to the sailings of the competing vessels, and the reduced rates made for defendants' vessels were at no time lower than the rates which, as these defendants are informed and believe, were made by such competing vessels.

The sole intent and purpose of said agreement and action on the part of defendants was to restrict, so far as possible, the loss resulting from such excessively low rates of competing vessels, and was not in or for the execution or furtherance of or to effect the objects of any unlawful combination or conspiracy or to 275 eliminate or destroy competition on the part of said lines, or to force them out of business, or for any other unlawful, improper or unfair purpose. To have reduced the steerage rates on all of the defendants' steamers would have resulted in enormous loss and the driving out of business of the weaker among them, and the method adopted was necessary and reasonable in order to protect the defendants against such unfair and unnatural competition.

DENIAL THAT THE RUSSIAN VOLUNTEER FLEET WAS DRIVEN OUT OF BUSINESS.

14. They admit that from the month of March until 276 the month of June, 1908, or thereabouts, the Russian Volunteer Fleet advertised steamers to sail from the port of New York to the port of Libau, in Russia, and advertised for and solicited persons to sail as third-class or steerage passengers upon such ships. They deny that said ships were thoroughly equipped for handling such traffic, but say, on the contrary, on information and belief, that such ships were small and poorly equipped for steerage transportation. They deny that the facts as to the competition of steamers of the defendant lines with the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet are truly and correctly set forth in the petition, and say that the true facts with regard thereto are as stated in paragraph 13 of this answer; they deny that the Russian Volunteer Fleet incurred loss or was forced to retire from the third-class or steerage business between New York and Russia by reason of any unfair or unlawful competition on the part of the defendant steamship lines; but they admit that in or about the month of July, 1908, said fleet withdrew its steamships from the New York Libau service and has ever since ceased to operate said line between said ports.

And they say that the reason for the withdrawal of said Russian Volunteer Fleet from said business was 278 not because of any agreement or action of the defendants, but was solely because of the inferior character of its service and lack of sufficient funds and because of its action in carrying steerage passengers at such excessively low rates, and the defendants say that the retirement of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was not in fact any detriment or loss to the public or to persons wishing to travel third-class or steerage between New York and Russia.

DENIAL THAT THE RUSSIAN-AMERICAN LINE WAS DRIVEN OUT OF COMPETITION AND FORCED INTO UNLAWFUL COMBINATION OR CONSPIRACY.

15. They admit that from the month of March until the month of September, 1908, or thereabouts, the defendant the Russian-American Line was engaged in operating a line of steamships from the port of New York to the port of Libau, Russia, and in carrying thereon third-class or steerage passengers, and they admit that in conducting said business it was in competition to a certain extent with certain of the other defendant steamship lines, and that during said period it advertised its steamers to sail from the port of New York and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third-class or steerage passengers; but they deny that the facts with reference to the use of so-called "fighting steamers" are truly or correctly set forth in the petition, and say that the true facts in regard thereto are as stated in paragraph 13 of this answer. They deny that the Russian-American Line incurred financial loss in the conduct of its third-class or steerage traffic as the result of any unfair or unlawful competition on the part of the defendants, but they say that any financial loss suffered by said Russian-American Line was due solely to its 281 course in charging excessively low rates and was not due to any agreement or action on the part of the defendants, and they deny that it unlawfully or wrongfully sought admission to any unlawful combination or conspiracy in order to be permitted to continue in said business or otherwise; and they deny that the facts in reference to its admission into the Atlantic Conference are truly or correctly set forth in said petition, and they say that the true facts in regard thereto are alleged in paragraph 8 of this answer. And they say that said Russian-American Line, by greatly improving the character of its vessels and service and by abandoning the practice of carrying steerage passengers at such excessively low rates, have 282 been able to continue and establish its service, as these defendants are informed, upon a successful basis.

DENIAL OF UNFAIR COMPETITION AGAINST THE URANIUM STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

16. They admit that about April 1, 1909, the Uranium Steamship Company, Limited, began to operate and has ever since operated a regular line of steamships under different names and styles between the ports of New York and Rotterdam, and began to carry and has ever since carried third-class or steerage passengers between said ports, and that said company has competed to some extent with some of the defendant steamship lines in the carriage of third-class or steerage passengers, and that said company has not been a party to the contract of February 5, 1908; but they deny that the defendant steamship lines on or about April 1, 1909, or at any other time, in and for the execution of any unlawful combination or conspiracy, took any action with regard to the use of steamers in competition with the steamers of said company, and they allege that the true facts with relation to the use of so-called "fighting steamers" are truly set forth in paragraph 13 of this answer, and that the facts are as therein stated and not otherwise.

They admit that in March, 1910, the committee of three in New York was disbanded and that since that time steamers employed to protect the defendant lines against unfair and unnatural competition have been selected and their rates fixed from time to time by the defendant lines in Europe, and that notices of such action are now sent by them to the individual defendants representing them in this country, and the rates fixed have been put in force by notices sent out by the individual defendants through the agents throughout the United States.

They deny that by reason of any illegal or oppressive measures the Northwest Transport Line has at any time been prevented from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic or forced to carry said traffic at a financial loss, and they say that said Northwest Transport Line is still continuing in said steerage business and has a fair and reasonable share thereof, and if it has suffered loss in said business the sole reason therefor is the inferior character of its service and its excessively low rates, which have at all times been lower than any rates of the defendants.

They deny that in pursuance of any unlawful combination, conspiracy or agreement, or to prevent other persons or corporations from engaging in any traffic they have agreed that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who shall act as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with the defendant lines. They deny that any such agreement or manner of employing agents is adopted as a part of any illegal or oppressive attack upon the Northwest Transport Line or any other steamship line; but they say that the defendant lines have agreed not to employ as agents persons who act as agents for steamship lines which have 287 been engaged or are threatening to engage in unfair competition with the lines of the defendants, and they say that this is reasonable and necessary for the proper protection of themselves and their business and as a means to safeguard the interests of intending passengers against irresponsible steamship lines and their agents, and to prevent fraud and injury to such passengers.

DENIAL OF EXCESSIVE AND ARBITRARY RATES.

17. They deny that at any time and in pursuance of any combination, conspiracy or contract, or otherwise, they have arbitrarily fixed their rates for steerage
288 transportation for the purpose as alleged in the petition, or otherwise, and they deny that in fixing their rates they have deprived or are depriving the public of any benefit whatsoever; and they say that on the contrary the public has had the benefit of exceedingly low rates and of superior facilities, and that such rates and such facilities are far more favorable to the public than would have resulted had the defendants not entered into the lawful and reasonable agreement with reference to the conduct of their business as hereinbefore set forth.

DENIAL OF PENAL ENFORCEMENT OF THE TERMS OF ANY UNLAWFUL CONTRACT.

18. They deny all the allegations of the petition with reference to penal enforcement of the terms of the contract between the defendants and all duress upon or between the parties to said contract as alleged in the petition, and for the terms of said contract they refer to the original thereof when the same shall be produced on the trial hereof.

VI.

DENIAL OF MONOPOLY.

19. They deny that by any unlawful contract or unlawful practices the defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual or other monopoly of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations or of any part thereof. They are not informed as to the percentage of steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines, and therefore leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised. They deny that such steerage passenger traffic or any portion thereof is regulated, limited or restrained by means of any unlawful contract whatsoever, and they say that they are not informed as to what percentage of the steerage passenger traffic is conducted in accordance with the terms of the contract of February 5, 1908, and therefore leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised.

20. Further answering, these defendants say that the business of transporting passengers between European ports and ports in the United States is international in its character, and as such is not subject to regulation by the laws of any one nation but can be regulated only by international agreements or treaties.

21. Further answering, these defendants say that in enacting the Act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, the Congress of the United States did not intend to, and did not thereby, make agreements entered into by persons or corporations engaged in the transportation of passengers between European ports and ports of the United States 293 unlawful.

22. Further answering, these defendants say that in so far as the business of transporting passengers from Europe to the United States is concerned, no part of said business is transacted within the United States, but said business is wholly transacted in foreign countries and on the high seas. The only part of said business performed in the United States is the landing of passengers at ports in the United States, which right has been granted by treaty between the United States and the several nations to whose flags said steamers belong; and as to the whole of said business of transporting passengers from European ports to 294 ports in the United States the act of Congress aforesaid has not and cannot have any application, force or effect whatsoever.

23. In the absence of governmental regulation of ocean transportation between the United States and foreign nations, such as exists as to railroad transportation, agreements among persons engaged in such ocean transportation are essential. Without such regulation or agreements, the weaker lines would be driven out of business and only the strongest would survive. The agreement into which the defendants have entered does not result in undue or unreasonable restraint of foreign commerce. Interpreted reasonably, it does not restrain trade and commerce with foreign nations, nor does it create, or attempt to create, a monopoly. The very nature of the business is such as to make it impossible that a monopoly should be created. Competition on the seas is necessarily limited only by the number of vessels in existence. Any ship owner may employ his vessels where he will. No franchise is needed; all are free to sail the seas; and, unlike any other business, those engaged in ocean transportation may at any time change from one trade to another. Steamers engaged in one trade may enter another temporarily, and, after demoralizing business and ruining those engaged therein, may return to their former routes. Thus, a great steamship company engaged in a worldwide business may, for a period short or long, but sufficient for its purpose, concentrate its forces and by unnatural and cut-throat competition drive out of business the weaker lines regularly established and engaged in the service. In this way it could destroy all of its weaker competitors.

Agreements, therefore, among those engaged in the transatlantic trade, like the agreement of these defendants, are reasonable and necessary in order to make possible the continuance of the business. The agreement entered into by the defendants was not for the purpose of creating a monopoly, nor for the purpose of establishing and maintaining excessive and unreasonable rates, nor for the purpose of unlawfully destroying competition or restraining trade and commerce.

The necessity for such an agreement is shown by the history of the transatlantic trade. At times when no such agreement has been effective, those engaged in the business have reduced rates in competition with each other to such a point that the continuance thereof would speedily have destroyed all but the strongest lines, and, in fact, such rate wars have been continued to such an extent that weaker lines have actually been forced out of business.

The necessity for such an agreement has also been strikingly shown by the action of the Government with reference to the transportation of steerage passengers by the railroads of the United States. For many years the railroads have divided among themselves by agreement the transportation in the United States of steerage passengers arriving upon the lines of the defendants and others engaged in the transatlantic pas-
299 senger business. The Interstate Commerce Commission, after a careful investigation of this practice of the railroads, concluded that, in the interest of the public, it should not be disturbed.

The effect of the present agreement between the defendants has not been to cause higher rates, but instead has resulted in steerage passengers receiving far more for their money than formerly. Larger and faster steamers have been put in service with better accommodations for steerage passengers and more frequent sailings, and the facilities for comfort and safety have been greatly increased. All of this has been accomplished notwithstanding the increasingly rates have not kept pace with the increased burdens upon steamship owners, the improved facilities furnished and the generally higher cost of living. The result, therefore, of agreements among the steamship companies, such as the agreement of February 5, 1908, has been beneficial to the public, and, instead of restraining foreign trade and commerce, has been to protect and develop it.
300 stringent requirements of the laws of the United States and of the foreign countries from which the steamers sail. The requirements of the United States immigration laws alone have become, and are becoming year by year, more and more severe, and impose upon steamship owners greatly increased expenses. Notwithstanding all this, the charges made by the steamship companies for the service have been uniformly fair and reasonable and have not increased proportionately with the cost of the service. The present rates for steerage transportation are not substantially higher than those of former years. Such

24. And these defendants now, having fully answered the petition herein, deny all and all manner of unlawful contract, combination, conspiracy, monopolizing or attempt to monopolize, wherewith they are 302 charged by said petition; without this that if there is any other matter, cause or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for these defendants to make answer to and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed and avoided or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of these defendants or to any of them; all of which matters and things these defendants are ready and willing to aver, maintain and prove as this honorable Court shall direct, and humbly pray to be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner against HAMBURG-AMERIKANISCHE PACKET-FAHRT-ACTIEN-GESELLSCHAFT, and others, Defendants.	In Equity.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, Sitting in Equity:

306 The joint and several answer of the defendants, International Mercantile Marine Company, International Navigation Company, Limited, British and North Atlantic Steam Navigation Company, Limited, Societe Anonyme de Navigation Belge Americaine and Oceanic Steam Navigation Company, Limited, and Philip A. S. Franklin, to the petition of the United States of America herein:

These defendants respectively, now and at all times hereafter saving to themselves all and all manner of benefit or advantage of exception, or otherwise, that can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and imperfections in said petition contained, for answer thereto or to so much thereof as these defendants are advised it is material or necessary for them to make answer to, severally answering, allege:

The individual defendant Philip A. S. Franklin, who joins in this answer, for himself avers that he has not personal knowledge with reference to many of the averments of the petition or of the admissions, denials and averments in this answer set forth, so far as the same relate to matters alleged to have taken place abroad or with which he had no personal connection; 308 but he says that all of the admissions, denials and averments in this answer set forth are true to the best of his knowledge, information or belief. And the corporate defendants herein, in making their denials, admissions and averments, except in so far as they refer particularly to the individual defendant Philip A. S. Franklin, intend the same to refer only to their own acts and transactions.

I.

Denial of Combination and Conspiracy.

309

1. These defendants admit that the corporate defendants herein are engaged, but deny that the individual defendants are engaged, in foreign trade and commerce as common carriers of freight and passengers, including third-class or steerage passengers, between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, except that they say, upon information and belief, that the defendant, Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is not so engaged, and they deny that the corporate defendants are engaged as common carriers of passengers and freight between inland points in the

310 Answer of International Mercantile Marine Co., et al.

United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa, and they deny that in respect to the business alleged in Article I of the petition they are violating the provisions of the Act of Congress passed July 2, 1890, entitled, "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; and they deny, upon information and belief, that any of their codefendants are so engaged, and they deny that at any time they have been, or are now, engaged in any combination or conspiracy in 311 violation of said acts.

II.

AS TO THE DESCRIPTION OF THE DEFENDANTS AND THE TRADE AND COMMERCE WHICH THEY CONDUCT.

2. They admit the allegations contained in the paragraphs of Article II of the petition numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 12, 19, and 22, except that they deny that the defendant, John Lee, is, or was at the time when the petition was filed, an officer of the International Mercantile Marine Company or of the International Na-
312 vigation Company, Limited, and allege that this proceeding has been discontinued as to said defendant, John Lee, and except that they deny that the defendant, Philip A. S. Franklin, is now, or at any time has been, an officer of the International Navigation Company, Limited.

3. They deny each and every allegation contained in the paragraph of Article II of the petition numbered 24, except that they admit that some of the defendant steamship lines are in some respects natural competitors.

4. As to the allegations of the remaining paragraphs of Article II of the petition they are not sufficiently informed to make answer thereto and, therefore, leave the petitioner to make such proof in relation thereto as it may be advised.

III.

AS TO THE DESCRIPTION OF THE TRADE AND COMMERCE WHICH THE DEFENDANTS ARE CHARGED WITH MONOPOLIZING AND ATTEMPTING AND CONSPIRING TO MONOPOLIZE.

5. They deny that immigration from Europe to the United States has steadily increased, and say that it reached its maximum in the year 1907, and that last year it was less than in any year for ten years prior thereto. They admit that the traffic back and forth is large, but they deny that it is very lucrative. The other allegations of Article III of this petition they deny, except that they admit that the steamship companies have been extending their facilities for handling such traffic, as well as their other business, and that the income from third-class or steerage traffic between Europe and North America forms an important part of the revenue of the steamship companies. 315

IV.

DENIAL OF COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY.

6. They deny that these defendants have been, or are, engaged in the United States or elsewhere in any unlawful combination or conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce of the United States with foreign nations, or any part thereof, or to monopolize the same, and they deny that they are, or have been, engaged in

816 the Southern District of New York, or elsewhere, in any combination or conspiracy to destroy competition in the business of transporting third-class or steerage passengers between ports in the United States of America and ports in Europe, and they deny that they have sought to accomplish any of said purposes by eliminating, suppressing or destroying competition in such traffic, and they deny that they have sought, or are seeking, to bring about any combination or conspiracy in the manner and by the means set forth in the petition or in any other manner or by any other means whatsoever; and, upon information and belief, they 817 deny that any of their codefendants have been, or are, engaged in any of the acts or things charged against these defendants in Article IV of the petition.

V.

DENIAL OF UNLAWFUL COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY CHARGED AND OF ALLEGED MANNER AND MEANS OF ACCOMPLISHING SAME.

As to agreement of February 5, 1908

818 7. They admit that on February 5, 1908, at London, England, the defendants mentioned in paragraph 1 of Subdivision A of Article V of the petition entered into an agreement, whereof a copy which it believes to be substantially correct is annexed to the petition and marked Exhibit A, but for greater certainty it prays leave to refer to the original upon the trial hereof; but they deny that said agreement was unlawful or was entered into pursuant to any unlawful combination or conspiracy. They deny all the other allegations of Subdivision A of Article V of the petition.

except as may appear from the original agreement of February 5, 1908; and they say further that said agreement was and is lawful by the laws of England, where it was entered into, and by the laws of the United States.

As to the Russian American Line becoming a party to agreement

8. They deny that pursuant to the provisions of any unlawful contract or in furtherance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy, the Russian American Line was admitted to membership in the Atlantic Conference; but they admit that at about the time mentioned in the petition the Russian American Line entered into an agreement with the other defendant steamship lines with reference to its steerage or third class business, and became a member of the Atlantic Conference, and that the agreement so entered into provided for a percentage of such traffic for said Russian American Line, and for answer to the allegations contained in subdivision B of the petition as to the terms of said agreement of February 5, 1908, they refer to said agreement itself when it shall be produced upon the trial hereof. 320

Denial of unlawful acts

9. They deny that since the making of the contract of February 5, 1908, or at any other time, all free and natural competition between the defendant steamship lines in the establishment of rates and the furnishing of facilities for steerage traffic has been or is thereby wholly eliminated, and they say that they are not informed as to whether the business of all of the defendant steamship lines in so far as it consists in the carriage of the steerage traffic referred to in the petition has been, or at the date of the filing of the petition was, carried on by each and every one of them in all respects in accordance with the terms and provisions of said contract or in accordance with the terms and provisions of resolutions adopted by said contracting parties at meetings held in pursuance thereof, and they therefore leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised; and, on the contrary, they say that now and at all times there is and has been active competition between all of the 323 steamship lines.

10. They deny each and every allegation contained in the paragraph numbered 2 of subdivision C of Article V of the petition, and in particular they deny that they have entered into any unlawful agreement, combination or conspiracy, and they deny that any agreements into which they have entered necessarily involved the execution of their terms, scope and intent throughout the United States, or more particularly in the Southern District of New York; and they deny that since February 5, 1908, or at any other time, any of the individual defendants has been designated 324 or established by his respective line at his respective office in the United States as agent for such line to carry out or make effective any unlawful agreement, combination or conspiracy whatsoever; and they deny that said individual defendants, at their respective offices or agencies throughout the United States or in the Southern District of New York, or at any other place or time, have been or are carrying out or executing any acts for the accomplishment of any unlawful combination, conspiracy or agreement whatsoever.

11. They deny that at any time whatever the individual defendants in the Southern District of New York or elsewhere have received orders or instructions from their respective principals with respect to the accomplishment of the objects and purposes of any unlawful combination or conspiracy whatsoever, or that any of said individual defendants have within said Southern District of New York or elsewhere complied with or carried out any such instructions.

DENIAL OF AGREEMENT TO DESTROY COMPETITION OF INDEPENDENT LINES

12. They deny that in and for the execution of any unlawful combination or conspiracy or agreement, or in furtherance thereof, or otherwise, any or all of the defendant steamship lines, at a meeting held March 25, 1908, or at any other time, agreed that they should act together to eliminate and destroy the competition of any persons or corporations whatsoever, either in the business of carrying steerage passengers between Europe and the United States in competition with any or all of the defendant steamship lines or otherwise.

DENIAL OF ARRANGEMENT TO USE SO-CALLED "FIGHTING STEAMERS" TO DESTROY COMPETITION, AND THAT COMPETITORS ARE CRUSHED

13. They deny that in and for the execution of any resolution as alleged or for the purpose of effecting the objects of any unlawful combination or conspiracy the defendant steamship lines appointed a committee for the selection of so-called "fighting steamers," and they deny that the facts with reference to the appointment of a committee and its authority and powers, and as to the use and effect of said so-called "fighting steamers" are correctly or truly set forth in the petition, and they say that the facts in regard thereto are as follows, and not otherwise:

The rates charged for transportation of steerage passengers between Europe and the United States have uniformly been exceedingly low so that the range of competition in rates has necessarily been very limited. A slight reduction in rates would bring the remuneration received for such traffic below its cost to the steamship lines. From time to time companies have been formed to engage in the business, with a few steamers and inadequate facilities. In order to attract business from the established lines, these companies have been willing to adopt rates which in many 329 instances were below the actual cost of furnishing such transportation. The result has been that such companies have been able to continue in business only for a short time until their resources have been exhausted. While they have been so engaged, however, the effect of quoting rates unremunerative and below cost has been to divert from the established lines the traffic which they would otherwise have received, and seriously to disorganize their business. The only method of protecting themselves against such unfair and unnatural competition has been to meet such rates as far as practicable. To have reduced the steerage rates on all their steamers would have resulted in enormous loss to such lines and the driving out of business 330 of the weaker among them. In order to prevent such a result, which would be injurious not only to the lines themselves but to the public, the established lines have from time to time, when such unfair and unnatural competition was threatened, adopted the policy of meeting such competition by selecting certain steamers for that purpose. Accordingly, the defendant lines appointed a committee of three of their representatives at New York City to select from among the steamers of the defendant lines steamers for this purpose, the rates on which were fixed and advertised at such a sum as was necessary to meet the rates quoted by the steamers of their competitors, but at no time were the rates so fixed lower than the rates charged, as these defendants are informed and believe, by such other steamers, nor was any steamer of the defendants at any time despatched nor its time of sailing or destination changed with reference to the sailings of the vessels of competing lines. When the number of passengers procuring tickets for the steamers so selected was in excess of their carrying capacity the excess passengers were carried by other steamers of the defendant lines, and the lines so carrying such excess were compensated by the other lines for the resulting loss. In adopting the methods above described, the 332 defendant lines have not acted in any unlawful manner or in pursuance of any unlawful combination, conspiracy or agreement in restraint of trade or otherwise, but solely for the purpose of protecting themselves against unfair and unnatural competition and only so far as was absolutely necessary and reasonable for that purpose.

DENIAL THAT THE RUSSIAN VOLUNTEER FLEET WAS DRIVEN OUT OF BUSINESS

14. They admit that from the month of March until the month of June, 1908, or thereabouts, the Russian 333
Volunteer Fleet advertised steamers to sail from the port of New York to the port of Libau, in Russia, and advertised for and solicited persons to sail as third class or steerage passengers upon such ships. They deny that said ships were thoroughly equipped for handling such traffic, but say, on the contrary, on information and belief, that such ships were small and poorly equipped for steerage transportation. They deny that the facts as to the competition of steamers of the defendant lines with the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet are truly and correctly set forth in the petition, and say that the true facts with regard thereto are as stated in paragraph 13 of this answer; they deny that the Russian Volunteer Fleet incurred loss or was forced to retire from the third class or steerage business between New York and Russia by reason of any unfair or unlawful competition on the part of the defendant steamship lines; but they admit that in or about the month of July, 1908, said fleet withdrew its steamships from the New York-Libau service and has ever since ceased to operate said line between said ports.

335 And they say that the reason for the withdrawal of said Russian Volunteer Fleet from said business was not because of any agreement or action of the defendants, but was solely because of the inferior character of its service and lack of sufficient funds and because of its action in carrying steerage passengers at such excessively low rates, and the defendants say that the retirement of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was not in fact any detriment or loss to the public or to persons wishing to travel third-class or steerage between New York and Russia.

DENIAL THAT THE RUSSIAN AMERICAN LINE WAS DRIVEN OUT OF COMPETITION AND FORCED INTO

336 UNLAWFUL COMBINATION OR CONSPIRACY

15. They admit that from the month of March until the month of September, 1908, or thereabouts, the defendant the Russian-American Line was engaged in operating a line of steamships from the port of New York to the port of Libau, Russia, and in carrying thereon third-class or steerage passengers, and they admit that in conducting said business it was in competition to a certain extent with certain of the other defendant steamship lines, and that during said period it advertised its steamers to sail from the port of

New York and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third class or steerage passengers; but they deny that the facts with reference to the use of so-called "fighting steamers" are truly or correctly set forth in the petition, and say that the true facts in regard thereto are as stated in paragraph 13 of this answer. They deny that the Russian-American Line incurred financial loss in the conduct of its third class or steerage traffic as the result of any unfair or unlawful competition on the part of the defendants, but they say that any financial loss suffered by said Russian-American Line was due solely to its course in charging excessively low rates and 338 was not due to any agreement or action on the part of the defendants, and they deny that it unlawfully or wrongfully sought admission to any unlawful combination or conspiracy in order to be permitted to continue in said business or otherwise; and they deny that the facts in reference to its admission into the Atlantic Conference are truly or correctly set forth in said petition, and they say that the true facts in regard thereto are alleged in paragraph 8 of this answer.

And they say that said Russian American Line, by greatly improving the character of its vessels and services and by abandoning the practice of carrying 339 steerage passengers at such excessively low rates, has been able to continue and establish its service, as these defendants are informed, upon a successful basis.

DENIAL OF UNFAIR COMPETITION AGAINST THE URANIUM STEAMSHIP COMPANY

16. They admit that about April 1, 1909, the Uranium Steamship Company, Limited, began to operate and has ever since operated a regular line of steamships under different names and styles between the

340 ports of New York and Rotterdam, and began to carry and has ever since carried third-class or steerage passengers between said ports, and that said company has competed to some extent with some of the defendant steamship lines in the carriage of third-class or steerage passengers, and that said company has not been a party to the contract of February 5, 1908; but they deny that the defendant steamship lines on or about April 1, 1909, or at any other time, in and for the execution of any unlawful combination or conspiracy, took any action with regard to the use of steamers in competition with the steamers of said
341 company, and they allege that the true facts with relation to the use of so-called "fighting steamers" are truly set forth in paragraph 13 of this answer, and that the facts are as therein stated and not otherwise.

They admit that in March, 1910, the committee of three in New York was disbanded and that since that time steamers employed to protect the defendant lines against unfair and unnatural competition have been selected and their rates fixed from time to time by the defendant lines in Europe, and that notices of such action are now sent by them to the individual defendants representing them in this country, and the 342 rates fixed have been put in force by notices sent out by the individual defendants through the agents throughout the United States.

They deny that by reason of any illegal or oppressive measures the Northwest Transport Line has at any time been prevented from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic or forced to carry said traffic at a financial loss, and they say that said Northwest Transport line is still continuing in said steerage business and has a fair and reasonable share thereof, and if it has suffered loss in said business the sole reason therefor is the inferior character of its service and its excessively low rates, which have at all times been lower than any rates of the defendants.

They deny that in pursuance of any unlawful combination, conspiracy or agreement, or to prevent other persons or corporations from engaging in any traffic they have agreed that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who shall act as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with the defendant lines. They deny that any such agreement or manner of employing agents is adopted as a part of any illegal or 344 oppressive attack upon the Northwest Transport Line or any other steamship line; but they say that the defendant lines have agreed not to employ as agents persons who act as agents for steamship lines which have been engaged or are threatening to engage in unfair competition with the lines of the defendants, and they say that this is reasonable and necessary for the proper protection of themselves and their business and as a means to safeguard the interests of intending passengers against irresponsible steamship lines and their agents, and to prevent fraud and injury to such passengers.

17. They deny that at any time and in pursuance of any combination, conspiracy or contract, or otherwise, they have arbitrarily fixed their rates for steerage transportation for the purpose as alleged in the petition, or otherwise, and they deny that in fixing their rates they have deprived or are depriving the public of any benefit whatsoever; and they say that on the contrary the public has had the benefit of exceedingly low rates and of superior facilities, and that such rates and such facilities are far more favorable to the public than would have resulted had the defendants not entered into the lawful and reasonable agreement with reference to the conduct of their business as hereinbefore set forth.

DENIAL OF PENAL ENFORCEMENT OF THE TERMS OF ANY UNLAWFUL CONTRACT

18. They deny all the allegations of the petition with reference to penal enforcement of the terms of the contract between the defendants and all duress upon or between the parties to said contract as alleged 347 in the petition, and for the terms of said contract they refer to the original thereof when the same shall be produced on the trial hereof.

VI

DENIAL OF MONOPOLY

19. They deny that by any unlawful contract or unlawful practices the defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual or other monopoly of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United 348 States and foreign nations or of any part thereof. They are not informed as to the percentage of steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines, and therefore leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised. They deny that such steerage passenger traffic, or any portion thereof, is regulated, limited or restrained by means of any unlawful contract whatsoever, and they say that they are not informed as to what percentage of the steerage passenger traffic is conducted in accordance with the terms of the contract of February 5, 1908, and therefore leave the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it may be advised.

20. Further answering, these defendants say that the business of transportating passengers between European ports and ports in the United States is international in its character, and as such is not subject to regulation by the laws of any one nation but can be regulated only by international agreements or treaties.

21. Further answering, these defendants say that in enacting the Act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, the Congress of the United States did not intend to, and did not thereby, make agreements entered into by persons or corporations engaged in the transportation of passengers between European ports and ports of the United States unlawful. 350

22. Further answering, these defendants say that in so far as the business of transporting passengers from Europe to the United States is concerned, no part of said business is transacted within the United States, but said business is wholly transacted in foreign countries and on the high seas. The only part of said business performed in the United States is the landing of said passengers at ports in the United States, which right has been granted by treaty between the United States and the several nations to whose flags said steamers belong; and as to the whole of said business of transporting passengers from European ports to ports in the United States the act of Congress aforesaid has not and cannot have any application, force or effect whatsoever. 351

23. Further answering, these defendants say that certain of the steamers of the defendant lines, namely, the New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis and St. Paul of the American Line, are American vessels hailing from New York and flying the American flag; that the cost of building and operating steamships under the American flag is about forty per cent higher than that of building and operating foreign vessels; that by the laws of the United States all officers of vessels of the United States are required to be citizens of the United States; that the rate of wages paid to officers and crews shipped in the United States is far higher than in the European countries; that under the provisions of the Ocean Mail Act of March 3, 353 1891, pursuant to which the above named vessels are employed in the mail service of the United States, vessels must not only be American built and owned, and officered by American citizens, but must have crews of which at least one-half must be citizens of the United States,—all of which, and many other provisions of law, place especially heavy burdens on American vessels.

Further answering, these defendants say that by said Ocean Mail Act of 1891, the American steamships above named may at any time be taken and used by the United States as transports or cruisers, as in fact all of them were taken in the war with Spain in 354 the year 1898.

These defendants verily believe, and state, that but for the agreement of February 5, 1908, or a similar agreement with owners of other transatlantic steamships it would be impossible for the American Line to engage in ocean transportation in competition with foreign steamship lines, and it would be impossible for it to operate its vessels except at a loss even greater than that at which they are now operated, and that unless the owners of American steamships are permitted to enter into agreements with foreign steamship lines whereby they can secure a part of the business of transporting steerage passengers between the United States and foreign countries at fair and reasonable rates, such American lines would be compelled to cease to operate their steamers or to transfer them from the American flag to foreign flags, and that it is of vital importance to the United States that the few remaining steamers under the American flag engaged in foreign trade should not be withdrawn. And these defendants say that in enacting the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, it was not the intention of the Congress to destroy American shipping and drive the American flag from the seas.

24. In the absence of governmental regulation of ocean transportation between the United States and foreign nations, such as exists as to railroad transportation, agreements among persons engaged in such ocean transportation are essential. Without such regulation or agreements, the weaker lines would be driven out of business and only the strongest would survive. The agreement into which the defendants have entered does not result in undue or unreasonable restraint of foreign commerce. Interpreted reasonably, it does not restrain trade and commerce with foreign nations, nor does it create, or attempt to create, a monopoly. The very nature of the business is such as to make it impossible that a monopoly should be created. Competition on the seas is necessarily limited only by the number of vessels in existence. Any ship owner may employ his vessels where he will. No franchise is needed; all are free to sail the seas; and, unlike any other business, those engaged in ocean transportation may at any time change from one trade to another. Steamers engaged in one trade may enter another temporarily, and, after demoralizing business and ruining those engaged therein, may return to their former routes. Thus, a great steamship company engaged in a worldwide business may, for a period short or long, but sufficient for its purpose, concentrate its forces and by unnatural and cut-throat competition drive out of business the weaker lines regularly established and engaged in the service. In this way it could destroy all of its weaker competitors.

Agreements, therefore, among those engaged in the transatlantic trade, like the agreement of the defendants here, are reasonable and necessary in order to make possible the continuance of the business. The agreement entered into by the defendants here was 359 not for the purpose of creating a monopoly, nor for the purpose of establishing and maintaining excessive and unreasonable rates, nor for the purpose of unlawfully destroying competition or restraining trade and commerce.

The necessity for such an agreement is shown by the history of the transatlantic trade. At times when no such agreement has been effective, those engaged in the business have reduced rates in competition with each other to such a point that the continuance thereof would speedily have destroyed all but the strongest lines, and, in fact, such rate wars have been continued to such an extent that weaker lines have actually been forced out of business.

360 The necessity for such an agreement has also been strikingly shown by the action of the Government with reference to the transportation of steerage passengers by the railroads of the United States. For many years the railroads have divided among themselves by agreement the transportation in the United States of steerage passengers arriving upon the lines of the defendants and others engaged in the transatlantic passenger business. The Interstate Commerce Commission, after a careful investigation of this practice of the railroads, concluded that, in the interest of the public, it should not be disturbed.

The effect of the present agreement between the defendants has not been to cause higher rates, but instead has resulted in steerage passengers receiving far more for their money than formerly. Larger and faster steamers have been put in service with better accommodations for steerage passengers and more frequent sailings, and the facilities for comfort and safety have been greatly increased. All of this has been accomplished notwithstanding the increasingly stringent requirements of the laws of the United States and of the foreign countries from which the steamers sail. The requirements of the United States immigration laws alone have become and are becoming year by year, more and more severe, and impose upon steamship owners greatly increased expenses. Notwithstanding all this, the charges made by the steamship companies for the service have been uniformly fair and reasonable and have not increased proportionately with the cost of the service. The present rates for steerage transportation are not substantially higher than those of former years. Such rates have not kept pace with the increased burdens upon steamship owners, the improved facilities furnished and the generally higher cost of living. The result, therefore of agreements among the steamship companies, such as the agreement of February 5, 1908, has been beneficial to the public, and, instead of restraining foreign trade and commerce, has been to protect and develop it.

25. And these defendants now, having fully answered the petition herein, deny all and all manner of unlawful contract, combination, conspiracy, monopolizing or attempt to monopolize, wherewith they are charged by said petition; without this that if there is any other matter, cause or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for these defendants to make answer to and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed and avoided or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of these defendants or to any of them; all of which matters and things these defendants are ready and willing to aver, maintain and prove as this honorable Court shall direct, and humbly pray to be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

The Joint and Several Answer of the Defendants Gustav H. Schwab, Herman C. Von Post and Gustav Schwab, Junior, to the Petition of the United States of America, Filed Herein on January 4, 1911. 367

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,

In the Second Circuit.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Petitioner,
against
HAMBURG - AMERIKANISCHE PACKET - FARHT - ACTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, and others,
Defendants. 365

The joint and several answer of the defendants Gustav H. Schwab, Herman C. von Post and Gustav Schwab, Junior, the last named being designated as Gustav H. Schwab, Junior, in said petition, to the petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4th, 1911. 369

These defendants answering so much and such parts of said petition as they are advised it is material or necessary for them to make answer unto say:

First. They admit that they, the said three named defendants, are residents of the City, County and State and of the Southern District of New York, and are partners doing business under the firm name and style of Oelrichs & Company, with an office and place of business at No. 5 Broadway, New York City; that they are and since the first day of January, 1909, have been general agents in the United States of the North German Lloyd Line, and in general charge of its affairs within the United States, and hold themselves and their office out to the public as the persons with whom and the place where business may be transacted with the North German Lloyd Line.

They also admit that prior to the 1st day of January, 1909, the said defendants, Gustav H. Schwab and Herman C. von Post constituted said firm of Oelrichs & Company, with an office and place of 371 business in New York City; and that they, the said two defendants, were for many years and up to the said 1st day of January, 1909, such general agents of said line and in general charge of its affairs and held themselves and their office out to the public as the persons with whom and the place where business might be transacted with said Line.

They allege, however, that the said defendant Herman C. von Post, although nominally and for some purposes actually a member of said firm, has taken no part whatever in the business thereof or in the business of said North German Lloyd for twelve years and upwards last past; that said defendant, Gustav 372 Schwab, Junior, did not become a member of said firm till said 1st day of January, 1909, and took no part in the business of said firm or in the affairs or business of said North German Lloyd Line prior to said date.

They also allege that the defendant Gustav H. Schwab has been absent from the City of New York even since the 7th day of March, 1910, and since that date said defendant has taken no active part in the business of said firm or in the affairs and business of said North German Lloyd Line.

And these defendants, each for himself, further says, that he has read or has had read to him the answer of the said Norddeutscher Lloyd, otherwise known as the North German Lloyd Line, to the said petition; that the same is true according to the best of his information and belief, and that he adopts the same in connection herewith as his answer to said petition.

And these defendants having answered fully the petition herein so far as the same contains matter which they are required to answer, each for himself denies all and all manner of unlawful contract, combination, conspiracy, monopoly or attempt or intent 374 to monopolize, and all and all manner of misdoing of every kind wherewith he is or intended to be by the said petition charged without this, that there is any other matter, cause or thing in said petition contained material or necessary for these defendants to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, avoided or denied, is true to the knowledge or belief of these defendants; all of which matters and things these defendants are ready and willing to aver, maintain and prove as this Honorable Court shall direct, and prays to be hence dismissed with their costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained. 375

376 The Separate Answer of the Defendant, Norddeutscher Lloyd, Schwab, Schwab, Jr., and Von Post, to the Petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4, 1911.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

In the Second Circuit.

377 THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Petitioner,
against
HAMBURG - AMERIKANISCHE PACKET - FARHT - ACTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, and others, Defendants.

The separate answer of the defendant Norddeutscher Lloyd to the petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4, 1911.

378 This defendant answering so much and such parts of said petition as it is advised it is material or necessary for it to make answer unto, says:

FIRST: It admits that said defendant is engaged in foreign trade and commerce as common carrier of passengers and freight and incidentally thereto of third-class or steerage passengers between ports of the United States and the City of Bremen, but it denies that it is a common carrier of passengers and freight or of third-class or steerage passengers between inland points in the United States and inland points or any point or place in Europe, Asia or Africa, and it denies upon information and belief that the other defendants are common carriers of passengers and freight between inland points of the United States and other countries or otherwise than between ports of the United States and points and places in other countries, except that the defendant Canadian Pacific Railway Company is also a common carrier operating a railroad in the Dominion of Canada, and it denies that it is in respect to such trade violating the provisions of the Act of Congress, passed July 2nd, 1890, entitled, "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, or any of them; and it denies in respect to the individual defendants, Gustav H. Schwab, Herman C. Von Post and Gustav Schwab, Junior, called in said petition Gustav H. Schwab, Junior, that they or either of them are or is engaged in foreign trade and commerce as common carriers of passengers and freight, either steerage passengers or otherwise, or that they or either of them are violating in respect to such trade or commerce the provisions of said Act of Congress or the acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto or any of them, or that said defendant or the individual defendants above named or any or either of them are engaged in any agreement, contract or combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce between the United States and foreign countries or in any attempt to monopolize, or any contract, combination and conspiracy to monopolize, or in any existing monopoly of such trade and commerce or any part thereof as set forth in the first article of said petition, or otherwise. And in respect to the other defendants named in said petition this defendant leaves them to make such answer to said petition so far as it avers any act, matter or thing done or intended to be done by them respectively as they shall be advised.

SECOND: Said defendant admits that at all the times mentioned in said petition the said defendant Norddeutscher Lloyd in said petition referred to as the North German Lloyd Line, was and now is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the City of Bremen in the Empire of Germany, with an office and place of business and agents in charge thereof in the City, County and State and Southern District of New York, and that at all such times it has been and now is engaged in trade and commerce between the United States of America, and foreign nations, to wit, operating regular lines of 383 steamships from the ports of Baltimore in the State of Maryland and New York, in the State of New York, and the port of Galveston, in the State of Texas, to the port of Bremen, in Germany, and transporting between and to and from said ports on its steamships, freight and passengers for hire, and incidentally thereto that class of passengers ordinarily known and described in the steamship trade as third-class or steerage passengers, and that at all such times it has maintained agencies in divers cities in Europe and in the United States at which it has sold contracts for the transportation of freight and passengers on and by its steamships, to and from said ports in the United 384 States, and from and to the City of Bremen, in Europe, and has maintained agents in charge of said agencies, but it denies that it has by means of, through or by said agents solicited persons to travel to and from Europe upon its said steamships otherwise than is expressly permitted by the laws of the United States and especially those laws which regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; and it admits that in the case of all such passengers transported to the United States from said European port it has docked its steamships and landed said passengers at either the port of New York or Baltimore or Galveston, and in case of such passengers transported to Europe they have embarked upon its steamships at one or the other of said ports.

And said defendant further admits that the defendants, Gustav H. Schwab, Herman C. Von Post and Gustav Schwab, Junior, called in said petition Gustav H. Schwab, Junior, are residents of the State of New York, and of the Southern District of New York, and that the said Gustav H. Schwab, Herman C. Von Post and Gustav Schwab, Junior, are residents of the City and County of New York, and that said three defendants are partners doing business under the firm name and style of Oelrichs & Co., with an office and place of business at No. 5 Broadway, New York City. That ever since the 1st day of January, 1909, said three defendants have, and on and prior to said first day of January, 1909, said Gustav H. Schwab and Herman C. Von Post for many years constituted said firm of Oelrichs & Co., and were, and said three defendants are, the general agents in the United States of the North German Lloyd line and in general charge of its affairs within the United States, and held and hold themselves and their office out to the public as the persons with whom and the place where business may be transacted with the North German Lloyd line except that the said Herman C. Von Post has not within ten years last past taken any active part in said business although still nominally a member of said firm and said Gustav H. Schwab has been absent from the City of New York and taken no active part in said business since March 7th, 1910.

And this defendant further answering said petition admits that the steamship lines mentioned in said petition are to some extent natural competitors in the business of furnishing facilities for the aforesaid steerage passenger traffic, and it admits and alleges that they are now actively competing with each other and with all others in said business in furnishing such facilities, but it denies the existence of the unlawful combination and conspiracy mentioned in the second article of said petition.

THIRD: The said defendant further answering said petition admits that the influx of population from all parts of Europe to the United States has increased from time to time with some fluctuations, and that said traffic back and forth has become large, but it denies that said traffic is or ever has been very lucrative to the steamships engaged therein. It admits that 389 with the increase of this traffic the steamship companies, as the result of a most active competition between them, have extended their facilities for handling it, but it denies that the income from third-class or steerage rates to Europe and North America is one of the most important parts of their revenue. This defendant is ignorant with regard to the accuracy of the averments contained in the third article of said petition as to the average number of third-class or steerage passengers arriving in and departing from the United States, during the last five years, and leaves the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it shall be advised and also with regard to the amount of 390 revenue collected by said steamship companies therefrom, and in regard to the amount of money expended in the United States by immigrants in the purchase of tickets for relatives in Europe to enable them to come to America.

FOURTH: This defendant denies that it has been and upon information and belief that the other defendant corporations named in the petition, or any of them, have been at any time or are now engaged in the United States or in the Southern District of New York, in any unlawful combination or conspiracy to restrain a part of the trade and commerce of the United States with foreign nations, or to monopolize the same or in a combination and conspiracy to destroy all competition among and between themselves in the business of transporting third-class or steerage passengers by steamships between ports in the United States of America and ports in Europe, or in eliminating, suppressing and destroying all competition in such traffic by any and all persons and corporations other than themselves either in the manner set forth in said petition or otherwise.

FIFTH: This defendant admits upon information and belief that on or about the 5th day of February, 392
1908, at the City of London in England, the corporations named in the fifth article of said petition entered into an agreement in writing, a copy of which believed to be correct, is annexed to the petition and marked "Exhibit A," and that thereby each of the corporations named as defendant in said petition other than the Russian-East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, became a member of a voluntary association under the name and style of the "Atlantic Conference," and that said association was by said agreement to maintain an office with a person in charge thereof who should be and is designated and described as Secretary; and the defendant admits on information and belief that the terms of said agreement are 393 with substantial correctness set forth in the division marked "A" in the fifth article of the petition, but this defendant craves leave to refer to the original or a proved copy thereof when produced in Court for greater certainty in respect to the terms thereof.

SIXTH: This defendant has no knowledge whether the said Russian-East Asiatic Steamship Company, known as the Russian-American Line, was, at or about the time alleged in the petition, duly admitted to membership in said Atlantic Conference and to all the benefits of the provisions of said contract, but this defendant denies on information and belief that the share or shares of the other lines, parties to the said contract, were in any respect altered so as to provide a percentage of such traffic by the said Russian-American Line, but the defendant admits that the steerage or third-class passenger business of said Russian-American Line was by agreement with the other members of said association regulated in some way the details of which are unknown to this defendant. And this defendant also admits that the 395 provisions of said agreement of February 5th, 1908, were, at or about the time alleged in the petition, extended to remain effective and binding upon the contracting parties up to and including February 28th, 1911, and thereafter to remain effective and binding upon said parties from year to year, unless notice of intention to withdraw from the terms thereof at the end of any year be given by one or more of the parties thereto on or before the 1st day of December in the year in which such notice was given. But this defendant denies that said agreement was unlawful or in violation of the Act of Congress aforesaid of July 2nd, 1890, or of any amendment thereof or supplement thereto and this defendant alleges that said agree-

396 ment was lawful and valid by the laws of England where it was executed and was also lawful and valid as an agreement respecting navigation and commerce on the sea by the laws of the United States and of the other countries to which the contracting parties to said agreement belonged and by the laws of Germany to which the steamships of this defendant belong.

SEVENTH: This defendant further answering admits, on information and belief, that since the adoption of the aforesaid contract the business of the said defendant steamship lines, parties thereto, and of said

Russian-American Line since its said agreement with said other lines and so far as it became a party thereto, insofar as said business consists of the carriage of steerage traffic referred to therein, has been and at the date of the filing of said petition was carried on by each and every of the said corporate defendants in accordance with the terms and provisions thereof, and in accordance with the terms and provisions of resolutions adopted by said contracting parties at meetings held in pursuance thereof, but it denies that all free and natural competition between said lines in the establishment of rates and the furnishing of facilities for such steerage passengers have been and is thereby eliminated.

EIGHTH: And the said defendant further answering said petition denies, on information and belief, that the successful accomplishment of the objects of said agreement necessarily involved the execution of the terms, scope and intent of said agreement throughout the United States or in the Southern District of New York, or that ever since February 5th, 1908, for the effective accomplishment of the objects of said agreement, each of the individual defendants herein has been or is designated and established by his respective line at his respective office in the United States as agent for such line to carry out and make effective the terms, objects and intent of said agreement in the United States, or that said individual defendants at their respective offices and agencies throughout the United States or in the Southern District of New York at the times mentioned in the petition have carried out and executed acts necessary for the successful accomplishment of the parties of said agreement. But this defendant admits that its said agents in the United States, and upon information and belief that the agents of the other lines in the United States, have from time to time received orders and instructions from their respective principals in Europe in respect to the sailing of their steamers respectively and in respect to rates of passage and other business of the line, and that they have complied with and carried out such orders and instructions, some of which orders and instructions may have related to acts required to be done by said principals under the terms of said agreement of February 5th, 1908.

NINTH: And this defendant denies upon information and belief that at a meeting held March 25th, 401 1908, or at any other time, the defendant steamship lines agreed that they should act together to eliminate and destroy the competition of any and all persons and corporations that might then or thereafter operate lines of steamships to carry steerage passengers between Europe and the United States in competition with all or any of defendant steamship lines in the traffic covered by the terms of the said agreement.

TENTH: This defendant further answering says, that at a meeting of the said defendant lines held at the City of London, in England, on or about the 25th day of May, 1908, in order to meet the low net
402 rates which were then offered by a line of steamships, not party to the said agreement, operating between New York and the continent of Europe, it was agreed that one of the lines, parties to this agreement, should quote low rates in competition with said outside line, but this defendant alleges that said low rates so offered by the parties to said agreement have not generally been as low as the net rates offered by the outside line, nor have the net rates of any outside line been undercut, the advertised rates of outside lines being merely nominal and the actual net rates collected being greatly affected by large commissions allowed, or pretended to be allowed, to their agents, and by the division of such commissions with the passengers, the rates of said defendants being subject only to the fixed commission of two dollars which their agents are forbidden to divide.

ELEVENTH. This defendant answering so much of the petition as relates to the use of what is called in said petition "fighting steamers" and to the alleged acts of the defendant steamship lines with reference to the Russian Volunteer Fleet, the Russian-American Line and the Northwestern Transport Line, denies that said matters are truly or correctly stated 404 in said petition, and alleges on information and belief the facts in relation thereto to be as follows, and not otherwise:

This defendant admits and alleges that for the purpose only of defending themselves against unfair competition on the part of persons or corporations other than defendant steamship lines, said defendant lines arranged for the use from time to time of steamers belonging to said lines, said arrangements being made by the defendants in Europe to be partially carried into effect by a committee representing them in the City of New York for some time after the execution of said contract but afterwards and down to the present time as this defendant is informed, carried out wholly 405
by arrangements made by the defendants in Europe, whereby, in case and only in case a steamship was put up for the Atlantic service in competition with the steamships of the defendant steamship lines at such rates of passage as should necessarily involve the carriage of steerage passengers at a loss and at wholly unremunerative rates, with the obvious purpose of diverting said business from the steamships of the defendant steamship lines, a steamship belonging to some one of the defendant lines was selected for the purpose of meeting and preventing the intended effect of such unfair competition, which steamship so selected, being the same which is called in said petition a "fighting steamer," but which this defendant prefers to call, and with greater truth, a "defending steamer," was selected to meet such competition and the defendant admits that in such case the rate of passage advertised for such defending steamer was less than the ordinary rates of passage on the steamships of the defendant lines, but this defendant alleges that the said defendants have not generally reduced the net rate on said defending steamer to the net rate charged for 407 said outside or attacking steamer, and have never undercut the same.

And this defendant admits on information and belief that it was a part of said arrangement that where the said defending steamer secured more steerage passengers than it could lawfully carry the said defendant steamship lines, through said committee or otherwise, provided for carrying such excess at such reduced rate of said defendant steamer on some other of their steamships.

The defendant also admits that some arrangement was made in Europe between the defendant steamship lines for compensation to the line whose steamers 408 were so selected as defending steamers or for the carriage of such excess for the loss sustained by such line in the difference between its regular steerage rate and the rate charged upon said defending steamer or other steamer taking such excess of passengers, but whether the arrangement for such compensation was made in pursuance of the resolution referred to in the petition this defendant is not informed and leaves the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it shall be advised.

And this defendant admits on information and belief than this system of meeting the competition of outside persons or corporations was adopted and carried into effect with reference to steamships put in competition with those of the defendant lines or some of them, by the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the Russian-American Line before the latter line made some agreement as hereinbefore stated with said other defendant lines.

This defendant admits and alleges that in or about the month of June, 1908, there was competition between the steamships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the steamships of some of the defendant steamship lines, the Russian Volunteer Fleet running its steamers between New York and Libau and touching at Rotterdam, but the defendant denies on information and belief that at that time or afterwards the defendant lines or any committee of said lines selected a steamer to run between the port of New York and the port of Libau.

And this defendant denies on information and belief that in any such competition the net rate of passage charged on the steamer of the defendant lines was ever put at a sum below the net rate charged by the Russian Volunteer Fleet, and it alleges that such net rate so charged on the defendant lines was generally above the net rate charged by the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

411

And this defendant admits on information and belief that the rates which the said defendants were thus obliged to charge to meet the competition of said Russian Volunteer Fleet were in every such instance so low that neither the Russian Volunteer Fleet nor any other steamship company could possibly make the same profitable or remunerative; and this defendant is ignorant as to the amount of financial loss, if any, which said Russian Volunteer Fleet incurred in the conduct of its third class or steerage traffic, and leaves the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it shall be advised if the same is material.

And this defendant admits that in or about the month of July, 1908, the said Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew its steamships from said service between the ports of New York and Libau via Rotterdam, and has never since operated said line, but this defendant denies that said action was any detriment or loss to the public or to persons desiring to procure third-class or steerage transportation between New York and Russia.

And this defendant alleges that since the 1st of January, 1908, up to the time of such withdrawal, the third-class travel from Europe to the United States 413 has been vastly less than in any previous year since about 1898.

And the defendant denies that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was driven out of business by the acts of the defendant steamship lines or any of them.

And this defendant denies that the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet were suitable for the trade between Libau and New York via Rotterdam, and alleges that said ships were built for an entirely different trade and were not suitable or well adapted to the Atlantic service.

This defendant on information and belief further alleges that said Russian Volunteer Fleet upon the 414 withdrawal of its steamers was in some way merged with the Russian-American Line, the particulars of which merger are unknown to the defendant, and that the said Russian-American Line continued for a time thereafter as it had before a similar unfair system of competition with some of the steamships of the other defendant lines.

And this defendant further answering alleges that from the month of March to the month of September, inclusive, in the year 1908, the said Russian-American Line carried on with its steamships a similar unfair competition with some of the steamships of the other defendant lines and that the defendants met said competition in the manner hereinbefore stated with regard to the competition of the Russian Volunteer Fleet; but this defendant denies that at any time the net rates charged upon the defending steamships of the defendant steamship lines were less than or generally as low as the net rates so charged upon the steamers of the said Russian-American Line.

And the defendant admits and alleges that the rates charged upon the steamships of said Russian-American Line as well as upon the said defending steamers of the other defendant lines were so low that neither 416
the Russian-American Line nor any other line could make said business profitable or remunerative, and the defendant is ignorant to what extent, if at all, the Russian-American Line incurred financial loss in the conduct of its third-class or steerage passenger traffic thereby and it leaves the petitioner to make such proof thereof as it shall be advised.

And this defendant further answering admits that in or about September, 1908, some arrangement was made between said Russian-American Line and the other defendant lines under which or in consequence of which its said business was carried on and has since been carried on in harmony with the other defendant steamship lines, but this defendant denies that either 417
the said Russian-American Line or either of the other defendant lines had in said business or in said transactions been guilty of any unlawful or wrongful act whether alleged in said petition or otherwise or became parties of any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy or that the people of the United States have suffered any loss or detriment thereby.

This defendant further admits that at the time alleged in the petition about April 1st, 1909, the party or person or persons calling themselves the Uranium Steamship Company, Limited, whether incorporated under the laws of Great Britain or otherwise, this defendant is ignorant, began to operate and has since operated a line of steamships under the name of New York and Continental Line, afterwards called the Northwest Transport Line, between New York and Rotterdam, carrying third-class or steerage passengers; that said business has been in competition with similar business on the part of some of the defendant lines; that the rates at which said Uranium Steamship Company, Limited, advertised to carry such passengers were below a fair and reasonable rate for the service offered.

419 This defendant further answering admits that this competition was met by the defendant lines in the same manner in which they had met the competition instituted by the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the Russian-American Line as hereinbefore described, and it denies that in any case the net rate charged on the defending steamer in such case was less than or generally as low as that charged by said Uranium Steamship Company for its steamers or that the defendants cut said rates as alleged in said petition.

And this defendant further denies that any such cut rates for such defending steamers or as they are called in the petition "fighting steamers" are now

420 or have since March 1910 been put in force by notices sent out by the individual defendants to the agents throughout the United States for the sale of tickets for third class steerage transportation on the defendant lines or otherwise.

And this defendant further answering alleges that the measures taken by the defendant lines for the purpose of meeting the unfair competition of said Northwest Transport Line has not been for the purpose of excluding said line from a participation in said traffic or for effectuating the restraint or monopoly of said traffic or that said Northwest Transport Line has thereby at any time been prevented from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic or has been forced to carry such of it as it has secured at a financial loss, and that said measures have had for their purpose only the defense of the business of the defendant lines from an unfair attack upon them by the said Northwest Transport Line using its steamships in an attempt by an unfair and ruinous competition to divert said business or some part of it from said defendant steamship lines or some of them.

And this defendant further answering alleges that 422
it has not in any of the measures taken to meet the competition of said Russian Volunteer Fleet, Russian-American Line or said Northwest Transport Line, been guilty of any unfair or unlawful competition, but that by the measures so taken by it, it has only met unfair and unreasonable and ruinous competition by lawful and proper methods of defense.

TWELFTH: And this defendant further answering denies on information and belief that the defendant steamship lines have agreed in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of ticket over its line, any person who shall act as 423 agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with said defendants' lines or that measures provided for thereunder are employed by this defendant or the other defendant lines within the United States or in the Southern District of New York for or on behalf of this defendant or of said other defendants or as a part of any illegal or oppressive attack upon the said Northwest Transport Company, but this defendant alleges that long before said agreement of February 5th, 1908, was made, an agreement was made between some or all of the defendant lines and others that no one of the lines making such agreement would employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line, any person who should act for the sale of tickets over any line other than the lines who were parties to said agreement; that this arrangement was made in self defense and by reason of frauds theretofore perpetrated by ticket agents employed by the lines who were parties to such agreement in betraying the interest of their principals by cutting rates and diverting business from the Lines so employing 425 them and deceiving and defrauding persons applying to them for passage and committing other frauds not only upon their principals but upon the traveling public; that said agreement so made was a perfectly valid and lawful agreement and was not in itself nor constituted any part of any agreement in restraint of trade or in violation of the provisions of said act of July 2, 1890, or any act in amendment of or supplemental thereto; that it has been uniformly so far as this defendant has any knowledge, acted upon by all well conducted Steamship Lines and has contributed largely to the benefit of the public and to the honest conduct of such steerage business as carried on by said defendant lines.

426 And this defendant further answering, denies that this defendant or said other defendant lines have arbitrarily fixed their rates for steerage transportation so as to bring about the arbitrary division of traffic as alleged in said petition or to maintain rates at an artificial level or to yield the highest net return to them, or that by any such action in fixing said rates, this defendant or the defendant lines have deprived or are depriving the public of the benefit of the normal division of traffic between persons and corporations engaged in such traffic according to the needs and convenience of the public, or that the rates charged in said traffic by this defendant or by said other defendant lines have ever been in any respect excessive or unreasonable. On the contrary thereof, this defendant alleges that the rates charged in said steerage business by this defendant and by said other defendants since said agreement of February 5th, 1908, went into effect, have in all cases, been reasonable and no more than a fair equivalent for the services rendered and the accommodations furnished to travelers upon their steamships, that the defendant Steamship Lines do not by the operation under said agreement, or otherwise, fix or agree upon rates, and 428 that the distribution of the said business among them thereby, is not abnormal or unnatural, but as a reasonable arrangement for the stability and convenient conduct of said business, and is greatly for the benefit of the people of the United States.

THIRTEENTH: And this defendant further answering, denies that by the said contract or any practices thereunder described in said petition or otherwise, the said defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual monopoly of any part of the commerce of the United States with foreign nations. It admits upon information and belief, that a large part, but what percentage is unknown to de- 429 fendant, of the total third-class or steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America is now carried in the ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines, but defendant denies that 75% or any part of said total steerage passenger traffic is regulated, limited and restrained by means of said contract.

FOURTEENTH: And this defendant further answering said petition, alleges that steerage or third-class passengers traveling between the United States and the countries to which the ships of defendants' lines sail, have never had better and safer transportation and accommodations at less cost than have been furnished by the defendant lines since the agreement of February 5th, 1908, was entered into, that the rates of steerage passage have not since that time been increased over such rates prior thereto, sufficiently to compensate the owners of the ships for the diminution in the purchasing power of money or for the increased facilities and accommodations offered by them or the increased cost of operation; that since said contract was made, competition between the parties to said contract has been active in increasing the size of their ships and improving 431 the conditions of the service; that this competition has been more active than at any previous time and the effect of it has been constantly to increase and improve the accommodations offered to steerage passengers; that the abrogation or annulment of the contract of February 5th, 1908, would lead to rate wars, destructive competition in the steerage business between the defendant lines and other parties who are free to enter upon said business; that such competition and rate wars would make it impossible to furnish such steerage or third-class passengers the accommodations and service which they now receive, and would be a great detriment to the public; that the 432 effect of such rate war or competition would be the driving out of business many of the weaker lines, and tend to create a monopoly of the business in a very few of the strongest lines, those having greater capital and ability to continue in said business in spite of said ruinous competition; that prior to the making of this contract, there were periods of such destructive competition, actually driving out of business several steamship companies which had long operated between Europe and the port of New York, carrying steerage passengers.

FIFTEENTH: And this defendant further answering, says that in the absence of international agreement or treaty between the United States and the countries to which said ships belong, there is and can be no regulating authority which can authorize the establishment and maintenance of reasonable, stable and equitable rates of passage in said traffic, otherwise than by fair and reasonable agreement in relation thereto by and among the persons or corporations engaged therein, and that to maintain their services to the public on a permanent basis and with security and comfort to their passengers, this defendant and the other defendant lines, parties to the said contract of February 5th, 1908, have been compelled to contract with one another, as was done in said contract, for the reasonable regulation of said traffic, and that the making of said agreement and the acts of the defendants under it have at all times been, and now are, a benefit to the people of the United States and in accordance with the policy of the United States in respect to the carriage of passengers on the sea and particularly in respect to the immigration of aliens to the United States, and that said agreement is not in undue restraint of trade or commerce, but is a valid contract, and so far as it affects the foreign commerce of the United States, is a valid and reasonable regulation thereof, and not a violation of said Act of July 2, 1890, or any amendment of, or supplement thereto, and that said business has not resulted in more than a just and reasonable compensation to this defendant or to the other defendant lines for the expense incurred and the service rendered by them in the carriage of passengers.

Wherefore, this defendant avers that the said agreement of February 5th, 1908, is not, and does not, create or tend to create an undue, unreasonable or unlawful restraint of trade or commerce, nor a monopoly or attempt at monopoly of any part of said commerce.

This defendant having answered fully, the petition herein, denies all and all manner of unlawful contract, combination, conspiracy, monopoly, or attempt or intent to monopolize, and all and all manner of misdoing of every kind wherewith it is or intended to be by the said petition charged, without this, that there is any other matter, cause or thing in said petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby 437 well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, avoided or denied, is true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant; all of which matters and things, this defendant is ready and willing to aver, maintain and prove as this Honorable Court shall direct, and prays to be hence dismissed with its costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK, IN THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against HAMBURG - AMERIKANISCHE PACKET - FARHT - ACTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, and others, Defendants.	In Equity.

440

The separate answer of the defendant The Allan Line Steamship Company, Limited, to the Petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4th, 1911.

This defendant, answering unto so much and such parts of said Petition as it is advised it is material and necessary for it to make answer unto, says:

1. Answering Part I of the Petition, this defendant admits that the defendant steamship lines herein, except the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, are engaged in foreign trade and commerce as common carriers of passengers and freight, including third-class, or steerage passengers, between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, but it denies that it is engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight between inland points in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia and Africa, and it denies upon information and belief that any of the other defendant steamship lines except the Canadian

442 Answer of The Allan Line Steamship Co., Ltd.

Pacific Railway Company is so engaged. In regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, this defendant believes that said Company is not engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, and therefore denies that this is the fact, but this defendant has no information, knowledge or belief as to whether said Canadian Pacific Railway Company is engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight, including third-class or steerage passengers, between inland points in the United States and ports and inland 443 points in Europe, Asia and Africa. This defendant denies that in respect to said commerce in which it is engaged, or otherwise, it is violating, or ever has violated, in any way, any of the provisions of the Act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," approved July 2nd, 1890, and upon information and belief, it makes the same denial as regards the other defendant steamship lines.

2. Answering Part II of the Petition, it admits the allegations contained in paragraph 1.

Answering paragraph 2, it admits that the defendant Bryce J. Allan is a resident of the State of Massa-444 chusetts, and is and for many years has been, engaged in business under the firm name and style of H. & A. Allan, with an office and place of business at the City of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts. It denies that the said Bryce J. Allan has been or now is employed by and acting for the Allan Line in the capacity of general agent and manager of its business in the United States, or has had, or now has, charge of the affairs in the United States, of the Allan Line in connection with its business; but it admits and says that the said Bryce J. Allan is the manager of its business in Massachusetts, and represents himself and his said office, respectively, to be the person with whom and the place at which business may be transacted with the Allan Line in Massachusetts.

It denies each and every allegation contained in paragraph 24, except that it admits that some of the defendant steamship lines are in some respects natural competitors.

Upon information and belief, generally, but without information as to many of such allegations concerning the others defendants, it admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23. 446

3. Answering Part III of the Petition, this defendant admits that the steerage traffic to and from Europe has been large, that the steamship companies engaged in carrying such traffic have extended their facilities for handling the same, and that the income from that description of traffic is an important part of their revenue, and except as to the allegations so admitted, this defendant says that it has no knowledge, information or belief in regard to the allegations contained in said Part "III" of the petition.

4. Answering Part IV of the Petition, this defendant denies each and every allegation contained in said Part IV of the petition, in so far as the same applies to it, and upon information and belief, it denies each and every allegation therein contained in so far as the same applies to the other defendants. 447

5. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision A of Part V of the petition, this defendant admits that on or about February 5th, 1908, at the City of London, England, it entered into an agreement with the other defendant steamship lines, a copy of which agreement is annexed to the petition and marked "Exhibit A." It believes such copy to be substantially correct, but for greater certainty craves leave to refer to the original thereof when the same shall be produced. This defendant denies that in becoming a party to said agreement, it entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or into any conspiracy whatever, or that said agreement was or is unlawful. This defendant says that said agreement was and is lawful under the laws of England where it was made, and under the laws of Great Britain which govern this defendant and its steamships, and that it does not and never did violate the laws of the United States.

449 6. This defendant admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, of Subdivision A of Part V of the petition, in so far as they set forth the provisions of said agreement dated February 5th, 1908, but it denies the allegations contained in the petition in regard to the meaning, legal effect and intent of said agreement, and for greater certainty craves leave to refer to the original of said agreement when the same shall be produced.

7. Answering Subdivision B of Part V of the petition, this defendant admits that at about the time mentioned in the petition the Russian-American Line was admitted to membership in the Atlantic Conference and to the provisions of said contracts, and that the shares of the lines parties to said contract were in some respects altered so as to provide a percentage of said steerage traffic for the Russian-American Line.

It admits that by the terms of said contract of February 5th, 1908, the same was to remain effective up to and including February 28th, 1911, and thereafter, from year to year, unless notice of intention to withdraw therefrom at the end of any year should be given by one or more of the parties thereto on or before the first day of December of the year in which such notice should be given, as in said contract provided.

8. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition, this defendant admits, on information and belief, that since the adoption of the aforesaid contract, the business of the said defendant steamship lines, in so far as it consists of the steerage traffic referred to therein and in so far as said contract applies thereto, has been and at the date of filing the petition was carried on by the defendant steamship lines in accordance with the terms and provisions thereof, and in accordance with the terms and provisions of resolutions adopted by said contracting parties at meetings held in pursuance thereof, 452 but it denies that all free and natural competition between said lines in the establishment of rates and the furnishing of facilities for such steerage traffic has been or is thereby eliminated, and it denies that said contract ever was or is unlawful.

9. Answering paragraph 2 of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition, this defendant denies, on information and belief that the successful accomplishment of the objects of said agreement necessarily involved the execution of the terms, scope and intent of said agreement throughout the United States, or in the Southern District of New York, or that ever since February 5, 1908, for the effective accomplishment of 453 the objects of said agreement, each of the individual defendants herein has been or is designated and established by his respective line at his respective office in the United States, as agent for such line, to carry out and make effective the terms, objects and intent of said agreement in the United States, or that said individual defendants, at their respective offices and agencies throughout the United States, or in the Southern District of New York, at the times mentioned in the petition, have carried out and executed acts necessary for the successful accomplishment of the purposes of the parties to said agreement. It denies that said agreement was or is unlawful or that it was entered into in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy.

10. Answering the first sentence of paragraph 3 of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition, this defendant denies each and every allegation contained therein, except that it admits that its agents in the United States and, upon information and belief, that the agents of the other defendant lines in the United States, have from time to time received orders and in-455 structions from their respective principals in Europe, in respect to the sailing of their steamers and in respect to rates of passage and other business of their lines respectively, and that they have complied with and carried out such orders and instructions.

11. This defendant denies each and every allegation of that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Agreement to Destroy Competition of Independent Lines."

12. Further answering, this defendant says that in order to meet low rates, then offered by a line of steamships not a party to said contract of February 5, 1908,
456 operating between New York and the Continent of Europe, the said defendant lines agreed, at a meeting held at the City of London, in England, on or about May 25th, 1908, that one of such lines should, when necessary, quote low rates in competition with the rates of said outside line.

13. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Arrangement to use so-called 'fighting steamers' to destroy competition," this defendant denies that the facts are correctly stated in the petition and alleges the facts to be as follows:

Answer of The Allan Line Steamship Co., Ltd. 457

It admits and says that in pursuance of said agreement of May 25th, 1908, and for the purpose of defending themselves against competition by steamship lines other than the defendant lines, said defendant lines arranged for the use from time to time of steamers belonging to them, so that in case and only in case a steamship belonging to a line not a party to said contract of February 5, 1908, should be scheduled to sail eastbound from the port of New York to a European port and should offer unremunerative steerage rates necessarily involving the carriage of steerage passengers at a loss, for the obvious purpose of 458 diverting steerage business from the steamships of the defendant lines, a steamship belonging to one of the defendant lines would be selected to sail from the port of New York at about the same time and to carry steerage passengers at rates lower than the ordinary steerage rates on the steamships of the defendant lines, for the purpose of meeting and preventing the intended effect of such competition. Said arrangements with regard to the so-called "fighting steamers" were made by the defendant steamship companies in Europe, and, so long as this defendant was a party thereto, were partly carried into effect by a committee representing them in the City of New York. This defendant denies that so long as it was a party to 459 said arrangements the steerage rates on any steamer so selected by the defendant lines were ever reduced lower than was necessary to meet such competition and to prevent the defendant lines from being deprived of their share of the steerage traffic from New York to European ports. It admits that so long as it was a party to such arrangements whenever any so-called "fighting steamer" secured more steerage passengers than it could lawfully carry, the defendant steamship lines through said committee or otherwise arranged for carrying such excess passengers at the advertised steerage rates of such "fighting steamer" on some other of their steamships and that the line or lines carry such excess steerage passengers at such reduced rates was or were compensated by the other defendant steamship lines by payments amounting for each passenger so carried to the difference between the regular advertised steerage rate of such line and such reduced rate.

This defendant says that on December 16, 1908, it gave due notice of its intention to withdraw from participation in said arrangement to use so-called "fighting steamers" and on January 17, 1908, it did duly 461 withdraw therefrom and since then it has not had and it has not now any connection with or participation in said arrangement or any obligation thereunder.

14. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition entitled "Competitors are crushed" this defendant admits on information and belief that the method hereinabove described of meeting the competition of lines not parties to the Atlantic Conference was employed to meet the competition of steamships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and of the Russian-American Line operating and carrying steerage passengers between the port of New York and 462 the port of Libau in Russia. It denies that said method was employed to suppress the competition of said last mentioned lines or that such competition was crushed thereby, but it says that said method was employed solely to protect the lawful business of the defendant lines and not to effect the objects of any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy whatever.

15. The defendant denies each and every allegation contained in the paragraph of subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "The Russian Volunteer Fleet is Driven out of Business," except that it admits on information and belief that from March to June,

1908, the said Russian Volunteer Fleet frequently advertised its steamships to sail from the port of New York to the port of Libau in Russia, and advertised for and solicited persons to sail as third class or steerage passengers on such ships, and that when such ships were so advertised to sail, said defendant lines selected a steamer and advertised the same to sail from the port of New York on or about the day that the ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was so advertised to sail and advertised a rate for steerage passengers on such steamer lower than the regular steerage rates of the defendant lines and low enough but not lower 464 than necessary to meet the competition of said ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, and except that it admits that in the month of July, 1908, or shortly prior thereto, said Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew its steamships from such service, and has ever since ceased to operate said line. This defendant says that the steerage rates charged on said ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and on the steamers so selected by the defendant lines to meet their competition were so low that neither the Russian Volunteer Fleet nor any other line could derive any profit therefrom and that the business done at such rates resulted in loss.

16. This defendant says that in the year 1908 the 465 business of transporting steerage passengers between the United States and Europe was greatly depressed. Upon information and belief, it says that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was in that year making low steerage rates, west and east bound, in order to create traffic, but the movement of steerage passengers was so light that its voyages were conducted at a loss, as was also the case in that year with the voyages of the ships of the defendant lines. Upon information and belief, this defendant says that the withdrawal of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was occasioned partly by the small volume of traffic and partly by the entrance of the Russian American Line as a competitor into the trade between Libau and New York, and by losses of the Russian Volunteer Fleet in no way due to any act or acts of the defendant lines or of any thereof.

17. Upon information and belief, this defendant says that when the Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew, the Russian American Line took over and assumed its contracts for the carriage of steerage passengers under an arrangement between it and the Russian Volunteer Fleet, of the terms of which this defendant has no knowledge.

18. This defendant believes, and therefore says that the withdrawal of the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet from the service between New York and Libau caused no detriment or loss to the public or to persons desiring to procure steerage transportation between New York and Libau.

19. Answering that portion of subdivision C of Part V. of the Petition entitled "The Russian American Line is driven out of competition and forced into the unlawful combination and conspiracy," this defendant admits and says on information and belief that from the month of March until the month of 468 September, 1908, the Russian American Line was engaged in operating its line of steamships from the port of New York to the port of Libau, in Russia, and carried thereon third class or steerage passengers, and that frequently during said period, it advertised its steamships to sail from said port of New York, and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third class or steerage passengers, and that in each such instance the defendant lines selected a steamer and advertised the same to sail at or about the same time as the ship of the Russian American Line, and advertised a rate for steerage passengers on such steamer lower than the regular steerage rates of the defendant lines and low enough but not lower than necessary to meet the competition of said ship of the Russian American Line. This defendant says that the steerage rates charged on said ships of the Russian American Line and on the steamers so selected by the defendant lines to meet their competition were so low that neither the Russian American-Line, nor any other line could derive any profit therefrom and that the business done at such rates resulted in loss.

It admits that at about the time mentioned in the petition the Russian American-Line became a party to the Atlantic Conference and has since carried on its business under said contract dated Feb. 5, 1908, in 470 so far as the same applies thereto. It denies any unfair or unlawful competition by the defendant lines with the Russian-American Line. By reason of the unremunerative rates charged this defendant believes that the Russian-American Line incurred financial loss in the conduct of its steerage traffic, but denies that the Russian-American Line sought admission to the Atlantic Conference in order to be permitted to continue in said business; or that since its admission to said Conference it has been conducting its said business free from competition with the other defendant lines. It denies that the Atlantic Conference is an unlawful combination or conspiracy, or that the contract of 471
February 5, 1908, was or is unlawful, or that the people of the United States have suffered any loss or detriment therefrom or from any act of any of the defendants thereunder.

20. Answering that portion of Subdivision C. of Part V. of the Petition entitled "Unfair competition against the Uranium Steamship Company," this defendant denies that it has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof except that it denies on information and belief that the defendant steamship lines have agreed in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who shall act as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with said defendant lines or that measures provided for thereunder are employed by the individual defendants within the United States or in the Southern District of New York on behalf of the defendant lines as a part of any illegal attack upon said North West Transport Line. This defendant says 473 that long before said contract of February 5, 1908 was made, an agreement was entered into between some or all of the defendant lines and others that no one of the lines so agreeing would employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who should act for the sale of tickets over any line other than the line so agreeing; that this agreement was made in self defense to guard against frauds by ticket agents in sacrificing the interests of their principals by cutting rates and diverting business from the lines employing them by deceiving and defrauding persons to whom they sold tickets, and by committing other frauds upon the traveling public as well as upon their principals; that said agreement was and is valid and 474 lawful and has promoted the public convenience and the honest conduct of the transatlantic steerage business.

21. This defendant denies each and every allegation contained in that portion of Subdivision C of Part V. of the Petition entitled "Excessive and arbitrary rates are charged by defendants for steerage transportation."

22. Answering that paragraph of subdivision C of Part V. of the Petition entitled "Penal enforcement of the terms of the unlawful contract," this defendant denies that since the adoption of the contract of February 5th, 1908, any of the parties thereto has been subjected to any duress or constraint in conducting its steerage business, and refers to the terms of said contract for the particulars thereof.

23. Answering Part VI. of the Petition this defendant denies that the defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual or any monopoly of any part of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations, and it denies that said contract was or is unlawful, or that it 476 was or is a party to any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever. It says that it has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to what per cent of the total third-class or steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America was carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines at the date of the filing of the Petition herein.

24. Further answering this defendant says that the act of Congress of the United States of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies" does not apply to the business of transporting passengers 477 upon the ocean between ports of the United States and ports of Europe. But it says that even if said acts should be held to apply to such business said agreement among the defendant steamship lines of February 5, 1908, does not come within the prohibitions thereof because said agreement is not an agreement in restraint of trade or commerce with foreign nations and the effect thereof is not to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce. Said agreement is necessary for the protection and development of that portion of the trade and commerce of the United States with foreign nations which consists in the transportation of steerage passengers between ports of the United States and European ports, and is a reasonable regulation thereof tending to promote and not to restrain the same.

25. This defendant further answering says that the practices of unscrupulous agents formerly caused great losses to the steamship companies operating between the United States and Europe, and great losses and hardships to persons travelling in the steerage. As long as there was wholly unregulated competition
479 among the steamship lines and no understanding whatever among them, there were "general steamship agents" in New York City with agencies in the interior of the country, and the latter used to issue orders for tickets from New York to Europe on their connection in New York which did not mention any line or steamer and which the agent sold at a price which was acceptable to him. The agent in New York met purchasers of such orders on their arrival in New York, placed them in a boarding house which he either owned or controlled, where he extorted from them all the money he could get, while with the ticket orders in his pocket he went from steamship office to steamship 480 office seeking the lowest rate at which he could get his passengers transported. The steamship lines fought these vicious methods in every possible way, and the desire to protect steerage passengers from extortion at the hands of unscrupulous agents and to put the business on a decent basis was one of the principal motives which led to the formation of the Atlantic Conference by said agreement of February 5, 1908, and of other Conferences which preceded it.

26. Further answering this defendant says that the history of the transatlantic steamship trade shows that unregulated competition has always led to disastrous rate wars, ruinous to the steamship companies and harmful to the public in that they deprived the public, of improvements in ships and service which the Companies, because of their losses, were unable to make. Another disadvantage to the public was the inability of weaker lines to endure the strain of such wars and the curtailment of service consequent upon their retirement. Prior to said contract of February 5, 1908, a number of important steamship lines which had long operated between Europe and the port of New York, carrying steerage passengers, were driven out of business by the effect of rate wars growing out of unregulated competition. In one of these rate wars steerage 482 rates between New York and Europe went as low as $10 per passenger, out of which sum agents received a commission of $3, $4, and even $5. Only the strongest lines could survive such wars and even they made a precarious living as is shown by the long series of years in which transatlantic steamship lines did not pay any dividends to their stockholders. This defendant says that one of the main objects of said agreement of February 5, 1908, was to prevent the recurrence of such ruinous rate wars which in the past have been so harmful to the public as well as to the steamship companies. It avers that the effect of said agreement is not to destroy competition among the 483 parties thereto, but only to regulate such competition reasonably so that all the steamship companies parties thereto may exercise a reasonable and beneficial control over the agencies for the sale of steerage tickets, and may charge fair, reasonable and stable rates, and thus be able to meet the constant public demand for better ships and better accommodations without substantial increase of rates, and so that the weaker lines may be able to live and compete for and retain fair shares of such steerage traffic.

27. This defendant further answering says that the evils of unregulated competition among American roads have long been recognized and they have been practically done away with since the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act through the regulation exercised thereunder by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The injurious effects of rate wars among ocean carriers are, however, much greater than in the case of rate wars among railroads. The competition to which railroads are exposed is far less intense than that to which ocean carriers are exposed. In order
485 to construct a railroad a very large capital must be provided, a franchise must be secured, a right of way obtained, and tracks must be laid. Every railroad has a substantial amount of local uncompetitive business which helps it to live through a rate war involving its competitive business. No franchise, on the other hand, is required to sail the high seas. All the business of an ocean steamship company is competitive. There are no limits to the potential competition. Any person with capital enough to assemble a few steamers may start a competition which may result in demoralizing the whole transatlantic carrying trade. The need of regulation is, therefore, much greater in the case of the transatlantic steamship com-
486 panies than in the case of the railroads. It is an impressive fact that for many years with the knowledge of all departments of the government the railroads from New York to the west have apportioned among themselves the business of transporting immigrants from New York to their western destinations in accordance with an agreement similar to that among the defendant steamship lines which is attacked in the present suit. The Interstate Commerce Commission in 1904 investigated this so-called immigrant passenger pool of the railroads and decided that under the circumstances it was the best method of handling that class of traffic, not only for the railroads, but for the immigrants themselves. This permitted agreement among the railroads applies to the very same passengers which the defendant steamship lines carry under a similar agreement which the petitioner in this suit charges to be unlawful.

28. The transportation facilities and accommodations for steerage passengers have never been so good as since the formation of the Atlantic Conference under the agreement of February 5, 1908, and the competition of the different lines in providing larger and safer steamers with improved facilities and ac- 488 commodations has never been so active as since the date of said agreement. For the purpose of maintaining and strengthening its position in the transatlantic business this defendant is now constructing two large new steamships at a cost of about $2,000,000 each, which is about four times the cost of the best steamships it had in service a few years ago. Notwithstanding the great betterment of the accommodations provided and the great increase in the cost of steamers, the price for steerage transportation is very little more than the normal rate charged many years prior to the making of said agreement of February 5, 1908, although the accommodations now provided 489 are greatly superior to those then furnished. The slight increase in the rate does not compensate the carriers for the decrease in the purchasing power of money which has taken place, nor for the cost of the improved facilities and accommodations now offered. Improvements of the kind now being made cannot be continued unless the steamship companies have some assurance that reasonably remunerative and stable rates can be maintained and that they will not be exposed to the hazards attendant upon the violent fluctuations of rates which always have accompanied wholly unregulated competition. Such assurance they can only obtain through some form of moderate and reasonable regulation such as is provided by said agreement of February 5, 1908.

29. This defendant further answering says that in the absence of an international agreement there is and can be no regulating authority between the United States and the countries to which the ships of the defendant steamship lines belong which can authorize the establishment and maintenance of reasonable, fair and stable rates for the transportation of steerage passengers except by fair and reasonable agreement
491 in relation thereto by and among the persons or corporations engaged in such transportation, and therefore, in order to provide proper, safe and commodious service for the said steerage traffic this defendant and the other defendant lines, parties to said contract of February 5, 1908, have been compelled to agree with one another, as was done in said contract, for the reasonable regulation of said traffic. The transportation of steerage passengers since the date of said contract has not resulted in more than a just and reasonable compensation to this defendant or to the other defendant lines for the expense incurred and the service rendered by them in the carriage of such passengers.

492 30. This defendant denies each and every allegation contained in the petition and not hereinbefore specifically admitted. Having thus made full answer to all the matters and things contained in the petition, this defendant prays to be dismissed hence with its costs in this behalf incurred.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK IN THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against HAMBURG-AMERIKANISCHE PACKET-FAHRT-ACTIEN-GESELLSCHAFT and others, Defendants.	In Equity. 494

The separate answer of the defendant the Hamburg-Amerikanische Packetfahrt-Actien-Gesellschaft to the petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4th, 1911.

This defendant answering unto so much and such parts of said petition as it is advised it is material and necessary for it to make answer unto, says:

1. Answering Part I of the petition this defendant 495 admits that the defendant steamship lines herein, except the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, are engaged in foreign trade and commerce as common carriers of passengers and freight, including third-class, or steerage passengers, between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, but it denies that it is engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight between inland points in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa, and on information and belief it denies that any of the other defendant steamship lines except the Canadian Pacific

496 Answer of Hamburg-Amerikanische Packet-Fahrt-Actien-Gesellschaft

Railway Company is so engaged. In regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, this defendant believes that said Company is not engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, and therefore denies that this is the fact, but this defendant has no information, knowledge or belief as to whether said Canadian Pacific Railway Company is engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight, including third-class or steerage passengers, between inland 497 points in the United States and ports and inland points in Europe, Asia and Africa. This defendant denies that in respect to said commerce in which it is engaged, or otherwise, it is violating, or ever has violated, in any way any of the provisions of the Act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," approved July 2nd, 1890, and upon information and belief it makes the same denial as regards the other defendant steamship lines.

2. Answering Part II of the petition it admits the allegations contained in paragraph 13.

It admits the allegations contained in paragraph 14,
498 but it says that the term "resident director" as applied to the defendant Emil L. Boas is merely descriptive of his functions as general agent of this defendant in the United States. Said Emil L. Boas is not a member of the board of directors of this defendant and has no authority to represent this defendant outside of the United States.

It denies each and every allegation contained in paragraph 24, except that it admits that some of the defendant steamship lines are in some respects natural competitors.

Answer of Hamburg-Amerikanische Packet-Fahrt-Actien-Gesellschaft 499

Upon information and belief generally, but without information as to many of such allegations concerning the other defendants, it admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23.

3. Answering Part III of the petition, this defendant admits that the steerage traffic to and from Europe has been large, that the steamship companies engaged in carrying such traffic have extended their facilities for handling the same, and that the income from that description of traffic is an important part of their 500 revenue, and except as to the allegations so admitted this defendant says that it has no knowledge, information or belief in regard to the allegations contained in said Part "III" of the petition.

4. Answering Part IV of the petition this defendant denies each and every allegation contained in said Part IV of the petition, in so far as the same applies to it, and upon information and belief, it denies each and every allegation therein contained in so far as the same applies to the other defendants.

5. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision A of Part V of the petition, this defendant admits that on 501 or about February 5th, 1908, at the City of London, England, it entered into an agreement with the other defendant steamship lines, a copy of which agreement is annexed to the petition and marked "Exhibit A." It believes such copy to be substantially correct, but for greater certainty craves leave to refer to the original thereof when the same shall be produced. This defendant denies that in becoming a party to said agreement it entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or into any conspiracy whatever, or that said agreement was or is unlawful. This defendant says that said agreement was and is lawful under the laws of England where it was made, and under the laws of Germany which govern this defendant and its steamships, and that it does not and never did violate the laws of the United States.

6. This defendant admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, of Subdivision A of Part V of the petition, in so far as they set forth the provisions of said agreement dated February 5th, 1908, but it denies the allegations
503 contained in the petition in regard to the meaning, legal effect and intent of said agreement, and for greater certainty craves leave to refer to the original of said agreement when the same shall be produced.

7. Answering Subdivision B of Part V of the petition this defendant admits that at about the time mentioned in the petition the Russian-American Line was admitted to membership in the Atlantic Conference and to the provisions of said contracts, and that the shares of the lines parties to said contract were in some respects altered so as to provide a percentage of said steerage traffic for the Russian-American Line.

It admits that by the terms of said contract of 504 February 5th, 1908, the same was to remain effective up to and including February 28th, 1911, and thereafter from year to year, unless notice of intention to withdraw therefrom at the end of any year should be given by one or more of the parties thereto on or before the first day of December of the year in which such notice should be given, as in said contract provided.

8. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition this defendant admits, on information and belief, that since the adoption of the aforesaid contract, the business of the said defendant steamship lines, in so far as it consists of the carriage of the steerage traffic referred to therein and in so far as said contract applies thereto, has been and at the date of filing this petition was carried on by the defendant steamship lines in accordance with the terms and provisions thereof, and in accordance with the terms and provisions of resolutions adopted by said contracting parties at meetings held in pursuance thereof, but it denies that all free and natural competition between said lines in the establishment of rates and the furnishing of facilities for such steerage traffic has been or is thereby eliminated, and it denies that said contract ever was or is unlawful.

506

9. Answering paragraph 2 of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition this defendant denies, on information and belief that the successful accomplishment of the objects of said agreement necessarily involved the execution of the terms, scope and intent of said agreement throughout the United States, or in the Southern District of New York, or that ever since February 5, 1908, for the effective accomplishment of the objects of said agreement, each of the individual defendants herein has been or is designated and established by his respective line at his respective office in the United States, as agent for such line, to carry out and make effective the terms, objects and intent of said agreement in the United States, or that said individual defendants, at their respective offices and agencies throughout the United States, or in the Southern District of New York, at the times mentioned in the Petition, have carried out and executed acts necessary for the successful accomplishment of the purposes of the parties to said agreement. It denies that said agreement was or is unlawful or that it was entered into in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy.

508 Answer of Hamburg-Amerikanische Packet-Fahrt-Actien-Gesellschaft

10. Answering the first sentence of paragraph 3 of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition, this defendant denies each and every allegation contained therein, except that it admits that its agents in the United States and, upon information and belief, that the agents of the other defendant lines in the United States, have from time to time received orders and instructions from their respective principals in Europe, in respect to the sailing of their steamers and in respect to rates of passage and other business of their 509 lines respectively, and that they have complied with and carried out such orders and instructions.

11. This defendant denies each and every allegation of that portion of subdivision of C of Part V of the Petition entitled "Agreement to Destroy Competition of Independent Lines."

12. Further answering, this defendant says that in order to meet low rates, then offered by a line of steamships not a party to said contract of February 5, 1908, operating between New York and the Continent of Europe, the said defendant lines agreed, at a meeting held at the City of London, in England, on or about May 25th, 1908, that one of such lines should,
510 when necessary, quote low rates in competition with the rates of said outside line.

13. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition entitled "Arrangement to use so-called 'fighting steamers' to destroy competition," this defendant denies that the facts are correctly stated in the Petition and alleges the facts to be as follows:

It admits and says that in pursuance of said agreement of May 25, 1908, and for the purpose of defending themselves against unfair competition by steamship lines other than the defendant lines, said defendant lines arranged for the use from time to time of steamers belonging to them, so that in case and only in case a steamship belonging to a line not a party to said contract of February 5, 1908, should be scheduled to sail eastbound from the port of New York to a European port and should offer unremunerative steerage rates necessarily involving the carriage of steerage passengers at a loss, for the obvious purpose of diverting steerage business from the steamships of the defendant lines, a steamship belonging to one of the defendant lines would be selected to sail from the port of New York at about the same time and to carry steerage passengers at rates lower than the ordinary steerage rates on the steamships of the defendant lines, for the purpose of meeting and preventing the intended effect of such unfair competition. Said arrangements with regard to the so-called "fighting steamers" were made by the defendant steamship companies in Europe, but until March, 1910, were partly carried into effect by a committee representing them in the City of New York. This defendant denies that the steerage rates on any steamer so selected by the defendant lines were ever reduced lower than was necessary to meet such unfair competition and to prevent the defendant lines from being deprived of their fair share of the steerage traffic from New York to European ports. It admits that whenever any so-called "fighting steamer" secured more steerage passengers than it could lawfully carry, the defendant steamship lines through said committee or otherwise arranged for carrying such excess passengers at the advertised steerage rates of such "fighting steamer" on some other of their steamships and that the line or lines carrying such excess steerage passengers at such reduced rates was or were compensated by the other defendant steamship lines by payments amounting for each passenger so carried to the difference between the regular advertised steerage rate of such line and such reducted rate.

14. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition entitled "Competitors are crushed" this defendant admits, on information and belief that the method hereinabove described of meeting the competition of lines not parties to the Atlantic Conference was employed to meet the unfair competition of steamships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet
515 and of the Russian-American Line operating and carrying steerage passengers between the port of New York and the port of Libau in Russia. It denies that said method was devised or employed to suppress the competition of said last mentioned lines or that such competition was crushed thereby, but it says that said method was devised and employed solely to protect the business of the defendant lines and not to effect the objects of any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy whatever.

15. The defendant denies each and every allegation contained in the paragraph of subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "The Russian Volunteer 516 Fleet is Driven out of Business," except that it admits that from March to June, 1908, the said Russian Volunteer Fleet frequently advertised its steamships to sail from the port of New York to the port of Libau in Russia, and advertised for and solicited persons to sail as third-class or steerage passengers on such ships, and that when such ships were so advertised to sail, said defendant lines selected a steamer and advertised the same to sail from the port of New York on or about the day that the ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was so advertised to sail and advertised a rate for steerage passengers on such steamer lower than the regular steerage rates of the defendant lines and low enough but not lower than necessary to meet the competition of said ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, and except that it admits that in the month of July, 1908, or shortly prior thereto, said Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew its steamships from such service, and has ever since ceased to operate said line. This defendant says that the steerage rates charged on said ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and on the steamers so selected by the defendant lines to meet their competition were so low that neither the Russian Volunteer Fleet nor any other line could derive any profit therefrom and that the business done at such rates resulted in loss. 518

16. This defendant says that in the year 1908, the business of transporting steerage passengers between the United States and Europe was greatly depressed. Upon information and belief, it says that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was in that year making low steerage rates, west and eastbound, in order to create traffic, but the movement of steerage passengers was so light that its voyages were conducted at a loss, as was also the case in that year with the voyages of the ships of the defendant lines. Upon information and belief, this defendant says that the withdrawal of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was occasioned partly by the small volume of traffic and partly by the entrance of the Russian American Line as a competitor into the trade between Libau and New York, and by losses of the Russian Volunteer Fleet in no way due to any act or acts of the defendant lines or of any thereof. 519

17. Upon information and belief, this defendant says that when the Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew, the Russian American Line took over and assumed its contracts for the carriage of steerage passengers under an arrangement between it and the Russian Volunteer 520 Fleet, of the terms of which this defendant has no knowledge.

18. This defendant believes, and therefore says that the withdrawal of the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet from the service between New York and Libau caused no detriment or loss to the public or to persons desiring to procure steerage transportation between New York and Libau.

19. Answering that portion of subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "The Russian American 521 Line is driven out of competition and forced into the unlawful combination and conspiracy," this defendant admits and says that from the month of March until the month of September, 1908, the Russian American Line was engaged in operating its line of steamships from the port of New York to the port of Libau, in Russia, and carried thereon third-class or steerage passengers, and that frequently during said period, it advertised its steamships to sail from said port of New York, and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third-class or steerage passengers, and that in each such instance the defendant lines selected a steamer and advertised the same to 522 sail at or about the same time as the ship of the Russian American Line, and advertised a rate for steerage passengers on such steamer lower than the regular steerage rates of the defendant lines and low enough but not lower than necessary to meet the competition of said ship of the Russian American line. This defendant says that the steerage rates charged on said ships of the Russian American Line and on the steamers so selected by the defendant lines to meet their competition were so low that neither the Russian American Line, nor any other line could derive any profit therefrom and that the business done at such rates resulted in loss.

It admits that at about the time mentioned in the petition the Russian American-Line became a party to the Atlantic Conference and has since carried on its business under said contract dated Feb. 5, 1908, in so far as the same applies thereto. It denies any unfair or unlawful competition by the defendant lines with the Russian-American Line. By reason of the unremunerative rates charged this defendant believes that the Russian-American Line incurred financial loss in the conduct of its steerage traffic, but denies that the Russian-American Line sought admission to the 524
Atlantic Conference in order to be permitted to continue in said business; or that since its admission to said Conference it has been conducting its said business free from competition with the other defendant lines. It denies that the Atlantic Conference is an unlawful combination or conspiracy, or that the contract of February 5, 1908, was or is unlawful, or that the people of the United States have suffered any loss or detriment therefrom or from any act of any of the defendants thereunder.

20. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Article V of the petition entitled "Unfair competition against the Uranium Steamship Company," this de- 525 fendant says it has no information as to whether the Uranium Steamship Company is a corporation organized and existing under the Laws of Great Britain. It admits that about April 1, 1909, said company began to operate, and has ever since operated, a regular line of steamships under the name of the North West Transport Line between the ports of New York and Rotterdam, and began to carry and has ever since carried steerage passengers thereby between said ports without being a party to said contract of February 5, 1908. It says that the rates at which said Uranium

Steamship Company advertised to carry steerage passengers were below a fair and reasonable rate for the service offered. It admits that the defendant lines met this competition in the same manner in which they had met the competition of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and of the Russian-American Line, as hereinbefore described. It admits that in March, 1910, the aforesaid committee in New York was disbanded, and that since then the so-called "fighting steamers" have been selected and their rates for steerage transportation
527 have been fixed by the defendant steamship lines in Europe. It denies that such rates are now or since March, 1910, have been put in force by notices sent out by the individual defendants to the agents throughout the United States for the sale of tickets for third-class steerage transportation on the defendant lines. It says that the measures taken by the defendant lines for the purpose of meeting the competition of said North West Transport Line were lawful and necessary for the protection of the business of the defendant lines and were not adopted for the purpose of excluding said North West Transport Line from a participation in said traffic or of effectuating any restraint or monopoly of said traffic. It denies that said North West Trans-
528 port Line has at any time been prevented from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic and as to whether the traffic which it has obtained was or was not secured at a financial loss this defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief.

It denies on information and belief that the defendant steamship lines have agreed in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who shall act as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with said defendant

lines or that measures provided for thereunder are employed by the individual defendants within the United States or in the Southern District of New York on behalf of the defendant lines as a part of any illegal attack upon said North West Transport Line. This defendant says that long before said contract of February 5, 1908, was made, an agreement was entered into between some or all of the defendant lines and others that no one of the lines so agreeing would employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who should act for the sale of tickets over any 530 line other than the lines so agreeing; that this agreement was made in self defense to guard against frauds by ticket agents in sacrificing the interests of their principals by cutting rates and diverting business from the lines employing them and by deceiving and defrauding persons applying to them for passage, and by committing other frauds upon the travelling public as well as upon their principals; that said agreement was and is valid and lawful and has promoted the public convenience and the honest conduct of the trans-atlantic steerage business.

21. This defendant denies each and every allegation contained in that portion of Subdivision C of Part V 531 of the Petition entitled "Excessive and arbitrary rates are charged by defendants for steerage transportation."

22. Answering that paragraph of subdivision C of Part V of the Petition entitled "Penal enforcement of the terms of the unlawful contract," this defendant denies that since the adoption of the contract of February 5th, 1908, any of the parties thereto has been subjected to any duress or constraint in conducting its steerage business, and refers to the terms of said contract for the particulars thereof.

532 Answer of Hamburg-Amerikanische Packet-Fahrt-Actien-Gesellschaft

23. Answering Part VI of the Petition this defendant denies that the defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual or any monopoly of any part of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations, and it denies that said contract was or is unlawful, or that it was or is a party to any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever. It says that it has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to what per cent of the total third-class or steer-
533 age passenger traffic between Europe and North America was carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines at the date of the filing of the Petition herein.

24. Further answering this defendant says that the act of the Congress of the United States of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies" does not apply to the business of transporting passengers upon the ocean between ports of the United States and ports of Europe. But it says that even if said act should be held to apply to such business said
534 agreement among the defendant steamship lines of February 5, 1908, does not come within the prohibitions thereof because said agreement is not an agreement in restraint of trade or commerce with foreign nations and the effect thereof is not to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce. Said agreement is necessary for the protection and development of that portion of the trade and commerce of the United States with foreign nations which consists in the transportation of steerage passengers between ports of the United States and

European ports, and is a reasonable regulation thereof tending to promote and not to restrain the same.

25. This defendant further answering says that the practices of unscrupulous agents formerly caused great losses to the steamship companies operating between the United States and Europe, and great losses and hardships to persons travelling in the steerage. As long as there was wholly unregulated competition among the steamship lines and no understanding whatever among them, there were "general steamship agents" in New York City with agencies in the interior 536 of the country, and the latter used to issue orders for tickets from New York to Europe on their connection in New York, which did not mention any line or steamer and which the agent sold at a price which was acceptable to him. The agent in New York met purchasers of such orders on their arrival in New York, placed them in a boarding house which he either owned or controlled, where he extorted from them all the money he could get, while with the ticket orders in his pocket he went from steamship office to steamship office seeking the lowest rate at which he could get his passengers transported. The steamship lines fought these vicious methods in every possi- 537 ble way, and the desire to protect steerage passengers from extortion at the hands of unscrupulous agents and to put the business on a decent basis was one of the principal motives which led to the formation of the Atlantic Conference by said agreement of February 5, 1908, and of other Conferences which preceded it.

26. Further answering this defendant says that the history of the transatlantic steamship trade shows that unregulated competition has always led to disastrous rate wars, ruinous to the steamship companies and harmful to the public in that they deprived the public of improvements in ships and service which the Companies, because of their losses, were unable to make. Another disadvantage to the public was the inability of weaker lines to endure the strain of such wars and the curtailment or service consequent upon their retirement. Prior to said contract of February 5, 1908, a number of important steamship lines which had long operated between Europe and the port of New York, carrying steerage passengers, were driven out of business by the effect of rate wars growing out 539 of unregulated competition. In one of these rate wars steerage rates between New York and Europe went as low as $10 per passenger, out of which sum agents received a commission of $3, $4, and even $5. Only the strongest lines could survive such wars and even they made a precarious living as is shown by the long series of years in which transatlantic steamship lines did not pay any dividends to their stockholders. Taking this defendant as an example, it is the fact that the Hamburg-American Line paid no dividends whatever in the years 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1884, 1885, 1892, 1893 and 1894. This defendant says that one of the main objects of said agreement of Febru-

540 ary 5, 1908, was to prevent the recurrence of such ruinous rate wars which in the past have been so harmful to the public as well as to the steamship companies. It avers that the effect of said agreement is not to destroy competition among the parties thereto, but only to regulate such competition reasonably so that all the steamship companies parties thereto may exercise a reasonable and beneficial control over the agencies for the sale of steerage tickets, and may charge fair, reasonable and stable rates, and thus be able to meet the constant public demand for better ships and better accommodations without substantial increase of rates, and so that the weaker lines may be able to live and compete for and retain fair shares of such steerage traffic.

27. This defendant further answering says that the evils of unregulated competition among American railroads have long been recognized and they have been practically done away with since the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act through the regulation exercised thereunder by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The injurious effects of rate wars among ocean carriers are, however, much greater than in the case of rate wars among railroads. The competition 542 to which railroads are exposed is far less intense than that to which ocean carriers are exposed. In order to construct a railroad a very large capital must be provided, a franchise must be secured, a right of way obtained, and tracks must be laid. Every railroad has a substantial amount of local uncompetitive business which helps to live through a rate war involving its competitive business. No franchise, on the other hand, is required to sail the high seas. All the business of an ocean steamship company is competitive. There are no limits to the potential competition. Any person with capital enough to assemble a few steamers may start a competition which may result in demoralizing the whole transatlantic carrying trade. The need 543 of regulation is, therefore, much greater in the case of the transatlantic steamship companies than in the case of the railroads. It is an impressive fact that for many years with the knowledge of all departments of the government the railroads from New York to the west have apportioned among themselves the business of transporting immigrants from New York to their western destinations in accordance with an agreement similar to that among the defendant steamship lines which is attacked in the present suit. The 544 Interstate Commerce Commission in 1904 investigated this so-called immigrant passenger pool of the railroads and decided that under the circumstances it was the best method of handling that class of traffic, not only for the railroads, but for the immigrants themselves. This permitted agreement among the railroads applies to the very same passengers which the defendant steamship lines carry under a similar agreement which the petitioner in this suit charges to be unlawful.

545 28. This defendant further answering says that the transportation facilities and accommodations for steerage passengers have never been so good as since the formation of the Atlantic Conference under the agreement of February 5, 1908, and the competition of the different lines in providing larger and safer steamers with improved facilities and accommodations has never been so active as since the date of said agreement. As examples of the result of such competition may be mentioned the steamers Olympic and Titanic of the White Star Line of 45,000 tons each, the Aquitania now in course of construction by the Cunard Line of approximately 48,000 tons, and the 546 three steamers being built by the Hamburg-American Line of the Imperator class of about 50,000 tons. Notwithstanding the great betterment of the accommodations provided and the great increase in the cost of steamers, which twenty-three years ago for the finest steamers was about $2,000,000 each, and now is about $8,000,000 each, the price for steerage transportation is very little more than the normal rate charged many years prior to the making of said agreement of February 5, 1908, although the accommodations now provided are greatly superior to those then furnished. The slight increase in the rate certainly does not compensate the carriers for the decrease in the purchasing power of money which has taken place, nor for the cost of the improved facilities and accommodations now offered. Improvements of the kind now being made cannot be continued unless the steamship companies have some assurance that reasonably remunerative and stable rates can be maintained and that they will not be exposed to the hazards attendant upon the violent fluctuations of rates which always have accompanied wholly unregulated competition upon the ocean. Such assurance they can only obtain through some form of moderate and reasonable regulation such as is provided by said agreement of February 5, 1908.

548

29. This defendant further answering says that in the absence of an international agreement there is and can be no regulating authority between the United States and the countries to which the ships of the defendant steamship lines belong which can authorize the establishment and maintenance of reasonable, fair and stable rates for the transportation of steerage passengers except by fair and reasonable agreement in relation thereto by and among the persons or corporations engaged in such transportation, and therefore, in order to provide proper, safe and commodious service for the said steerage traffic this defendant and the other defendant lines, parties to said contract of February 5, 1908, have been compelled to agree with one another, as was done in said contract, for the reasonable regulation of said traffic. The transportation of steerage passengers since the date of said contract has not resulted in more than a just and reasonable compensation to this defendant or to the other defendant lines for the expense incurred and the service rendered by them in the carriage of such passengers.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK IN THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

554

The separate answer of the defendant Emil L. Boas to the Petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4th, 1911.

This defendant answering unto so much and such parts of said Petition as he is advised it is material and necessary for him to make answer unto, says:

1. Answering Part I of the Petition he admits that the defendant steamship lines herein, except the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, are engaged in foreign trade and commerce as common carriers of passengers and freight, including third-class, or steerage passengers, between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, but he denies that the Hamburg-American Line is or, upon information and belief, that any of the other defendant lines except the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight between inland points in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia and Africa. In regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, he believes that said Company is not engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, and therefore denies that this is the fact, but he has no information, knowledge or belief as to whether said Canadian Pacific Railway Company is engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight including third-class or steerage passengers, between inland points in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia and Africa. He denies that in respect to said commerce in which the Hamburg-American Line is engaged, or otherwise, 557 it is violating, or ever has violated, in any way any of the provisions of the Act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," approved July 2nd, 1890, and upon information and belief he makes the same denial as regards the other defendant steamship lines.

2. Answering Part II of the Petition he admits the allegations contained in paragraph 13.

He admits the allegations contained in paragraph 14, but he says that the term "resident director" as applied to himself is merely descriptive of his functions as general agent of the Hamburg-American Line 558 in the United States. He denies that he is a member of the board of directors of the Hamburg-American Line or that he has any authority to represent it outside of the United States.

He denies each and every allegation contained in paragraph 24, except that he admits that some of the defendant steamship lines are in some respects natural competitors.

Upon information and belief generally, but without information as to many of such allegations concerning the other defendants, he admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23.

3. Answering Part III of the Petition, he admits that the steerage traffic to and from Europe has been large, that the steamship companies engaged in carrying such traffic have extended their facilities for handling the same, and that the income from that description of traffic is an important part of their revenue, and except as to the allegations so admitted he says that he has no knowledge, information or belief in regard to the allegations contained in said Part III of the Petition.

4. Answering Part IV of the Petition he denies each and every allegation contained in said Part IV 560 of the Petition, in so far as the same applies to the Hamburg-American Line or to himself, and upon information and belief, he denies each and every allegation therein contained in so far as the same applies to the other defendants.

5. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision A of Part V of the Petition, he admits that on or about February 5th, 1908, at the City of London, England, the Hamburg-American Line entered into an agreement with the other defendant steamship lines, a copy of which agreement is annexed to the Petition and marked "Exhibit A." He believes such copy to be substantially correct, but for greater certainty craves 561 leave to refer to the original thereof when the same shall be produced. He denies that in becoming a party to said agreement the Hamburg-American Line entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or into any conspiracy whatever, or that said agreement was or is unlawful. He says that said agreement was and is lawful under the laws of England where it was made, and under the laws of Germany which govern the Hamburg-American Line and its steamships, and that it was not and is not in violation of the laws of the United States.

562 Answer of Emil L. Boas

6. He admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of Subdivision A of Part V of the Petition, in so far as they set forth the provisions of said agreement dated February 5th, 1908, but he denies the allegations contained in the Petition in regard to the meaning, legal effect and intent of said agreement, and for greater certainty craves leave to refer to the original of said agreement when the same shall be produced.

7. Answering Subdivision B of Part V of the Petition he admits that at about the time mentioned in the 563 Petition the Russian-American Line was admitted to membership in the Atlantic Conference and to the provisions of said contract, and that the shares of the lines parties to said contract were in some respects altered so as to provide a percentage of said steerage traffic for the Russian-American Line

He admits that by the terms of said contract of February 5th, 1908, the same was to remain effective up to and including February 28th, 1911, and thereafter from year to year, unless notice of intention to withdraw therefrom at the end of any year should be given by one or more of the parties thereto on or before the first day of December of the year in which 564 such notice should be given, as in said contract provided.

8. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition he admits, on information and belief, that since the adoption of the aforesaid contract, the business of the said defendant steamship lines, in so far as it consists of the steerage traffic referred to therein and in so far as said contract applies thereto, has been and at the date of filing this petition was carried on by the defendant steamship lines in accordance with the terms and provisions thereof, and in accordance with the terms and provisions of resolutions adopted by said contracting parties at meetings held in pursuance thereof, but he denies that all free and natural competition between said lines in the establishment of rates and the furnishing of facilities for such steerage traffic has been or is thereby eliminated, and he denies that said contract ever was or is unlawful.

9. Answering paragraph 2 of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition he denies, on information and belief, that the successful accomplishment of the objects of said agreement necessarily involved the execution of the terms, scope and intent of said agreement 566 throughout the United States, or in the Southern District of New York, or that ever since February 5, 1908, for the effective accomplishment of the objects of said agreement, each of the individual defendants herein has been or is designated and established by his respective line at his respective office in the United States, as agent for such line, to carry out and make effective the terms, objects and intent of said agreement in the United States, or that said individual defendants, at their respective offices and agencies throughout the United States, or in the Southern District of New York, at the times mentioned in the Petition, have carried out and executed acts necessary 567 for the successful accomplishment of the purposes of the parties to said agreement. He denies that said agreement was or is unlawful or that it was entered into in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy.

10. Answering the first sentence of paragraph 3 of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition, he denies each and every allegation contained therein, except that he admits that he has from time to time received orders and instructions from his principal in Europe, and, upon information and belief, that the agents of the other defendant lines in the United States, have from time to time received orders and instructions from their respective principals in Europe, in respect to the sailing of steamers and in respect to rates of passage and other business, and that he and they have complied with and carried out such orders and instructions.

11. He denies each and every allegation of that portion of subdivision C of Part V of the Petition entitled "Agreement to destroy competition of independent lines."

12. Further answering, he says that in order to meet low rates, then offered by a line of steamships not a party to said contract of February 5, 1908, operating between New York and the Continent of Europe, the said defendant lines agreed, at a meeting held at the City of London, in England, on or about May 25th, 1908, that one of such lines should, when necessary, quote low rates in competition with the rates of said outside line.

13. Answering that portion of subdivision C of Part V of the Petition entitled "Arrangement to use so-called 'fighting steamers' to destroy competition,"

570 he denies that the facts are correctly stated in the Petition and alleges the facts to be as follows:

He admits and says that in pursuance of said agreement of May 25, 1908, and for the purpose of defending themselves against competition by steamship lines other than the defendant lines, said defendant lines arranged for the use from time to time of steamers belonging to them, so that in case and only in case a steamship belonging to a line not a party to said contract of February 5, 1908, should be scheduled to sail eastbound from the port of New York to a European port and should offer unremunerative steerage rates necessarily involving the carriage of steerage passengers at a loss, for the obvious purpose of diverting steerage business from the steamships of the defendant lines, a steamship belonging to one of the defendant lines would be selected to sail from the port of New York at about the same time and to carry steerage passengers at rates lower than the ordinary steerage rates on the steamships of the defendant lines, for the purpose of meeting and preventing the intended effect of such competition. Said arrangements with regard to the so-called "fighting steamers" were made by the defendant steamship companies in Europe, but until March, 1910, were partly carried into effect by a committee representing them in the City of New York. This defendant denies that the steerage rates on any steamer so selected by the defendant lines were ever reduced lower than was necessary to meet such competition and to prevent the defendant lines from being deprived of their fair share of the steerage traffic from New York to European ports. He admits that whenever any so-called "fighting steamer" secured more steerage passengers than it could lawfully carry, the defendant steamship lines through said committee or otherwise arranged for carrying such excess passengers at the advertised steerage rates of such "fighting steamer" on some other of their steamships and that the line or lines carrying such excess steerage passengers at such reduced rates was or were compensated by the other defendant steamship lines by payments amounting for each passenger so carried to the difference between the regular advertised steerage rate of such line and such reduced rate.

14. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Competitors are crushed" he admits on information and belief that the method hereinabove described of meeting the competition of lines not parties to the Atlantic Conference was employed to meet the competition of steamships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and of the Russian-American Line operating and carrying steerage passengers between the port of New York and the port of Libau in Russia. He denies that said method was employed to suppress the competition of said last mentioned lines or that such competition was crushed thereby, but he says that said method was employed solely to protect the lawful business of the defendant lines and not to effect the objects of any unlawful 575 contract, combination or conspiracy whatever.

574 Answer of Emil L. Boas

15. He denies each and every allegation contained in the paragraph of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "The Russian Volunteer Fleet is Driven out of Business," except that he admits that from March to June, 1908, the said Russian Volunteer Fleet frequently advertised its steamships to sail from the port of New York to the port of Libau in Russia, and advertised for and solicited persons to sail as third-class or steerage passengers on such ships, and that when such ships were so advertised to sail, said defendant lines selected a steamer and advertised the same to sail from the port of New York on 576 or about the day that the ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was so advertised to sail and advertised a rate for steerage passengers on such steamer lower than the regular steerage rates of the defendant lines and low enough but not lower than necessary to meet the competition of said ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, except that he admits that in the month of July, 1908, or shortly prior thereto, said Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew its steamships from such service, and has ever since ceased to operate said line. He says that the steerage rates charged on said ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and on the steamers so selected by the defendant lines to meet their comptition were so low that neither the Russian Volunteer Fleet nor any other line could derive any profit therefrom and that the business done at such rates resulted in loss.

16. He says that in the year 1908 the business of transporting steerage passengers between the United States and Europe was greatly depressed. Upon information and belief, he says that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was in that year making low steerage rates, west and eastbound, in order to create traffic, but the movement of steerage passengers was so light that its 578 voyages were conducted at a loss as was also the case in that year with the voyages of the ships of the defendant lines. Upon information and belief, he says that the withdrawal of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was occasioned partly by the small volume of traffic and partly by the entrance of the Russian-American Line as a competitor into the trade between Libau and New York, and by losses of the Russian Volunteer Fleet in no way due to any act or acts of the defendant lines or of any thereof.

17. Upon information and belief, he says that when the Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew, the Russian-American Line took over and assumed its contracts 579 for the carriage of steerage passengers under an arrangement between it and the Russian Volunteer Fleet of the terms of which he has no knowledge.

18. He believes, and therefore says that the withdrawal of the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet from the service between New York and Libau caused no detriment or loss to the public or to persons desiring to procure steerage transportation between New York and Libau.

580 Answer of Emil L. Boas

19. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "The Russian-American Line is driven out of competition and forced into the unlawful combination and conspiracy," he admits and says that from the month of March until the month of September, 1908, the Russian-American Line was engaged in operating its line of steamships from the port of New York to the port of Libau, in Russia, and carried thereon third-class or steerage passengers, and that frequently during said period, it advertised its steamships to sail from said port of New 581 York, and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third-class or steerage passengers, and that in each such instance the defendant lines selected a steamer and advertised the same to sail at or about the same time as the ship of the Russian-American Line, and advertised a rate for steerage passengers on such steamer lower than the regular steerage rates of the defendant lines and low enough but not lower than necessary to meet the competition of said ship of the Russian-American Line. He says that the steerage rates charged on said ships of the Russian-American line and on the steamers so selected by the defendant lines to meet their competition were so low that neither the Russian-American 582 Line, nor any other line could derive any profit therefrom and that the business done at such rates resulted in loss.

He admits that at about the time mentioned in the petition the Russian-American Line became a party to the Atlantic Conference and has since carried on its business under said contract dated Feb. 5, 1908, in so far as the same applied thereto. He denies any unfair or unlawful competition by the defendant lines with the Russian-American Line. By reason of the unremunerative rates charged this defendant believes that the Russian-American Line incurred financial loss in the conduct of its steerage traffic, but denies that the Russian-American Line sought admission to the Atlantic Conference in order to be permitted to continue in said business; or that since its admission to said conference it has been conducting its said business free from competition with the other defendant lines. He denies that the Atlantic Conference is an unlawful combination or conspiracy, or that the contract of February 5, 1908, was or is unlawful, or that the people of the United States have suffered any loss or detriment therefrom or from any act of any of the defendants thereunder.

584

20. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Unfair Competition against the Uranium Steamship Company," this defendant says he has no information as to whether the Uranium Steamship Company is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Great Britain. He admits that about April 1, 1909, said company began to operate, and has ever since operated, a regular line of steamships under the name of the North West Transport Line and other names between the ports of New York and Rotterdam, and began to carry and has ever since carried steerage passengers thereby between said ports without being a party to said contract of February 5, 1908. He says that the rates at which said Uranium Steamship Company advertised to carry steerage passengers were below a fair and reasonable rate for the service offered. He admits that the defendant lines met this competition in the same manner in which they had met the competition of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and of the Russian-American Line, as hereinbefore described. He admits that in March, 1910, the aforesaid committee in New York was disbanded, and that since then the so-called "fighting steamers" have been selected and their rates for steerage transportation have been fixed by the defendant steamship lines in Europe. He denies that such rates are now or since March, 1910, have been put in force by notices sent out by the individual defendants to the agents throughout the United States for the sale of tickets for third-class steerage transportation on the defendant lines. He says that the measures taken by the defendant lines for the purpose of meeting the competition of said North West Transport Line were lawful and necessary for the protection of the business of the defendant lines and were not adopted for the 587 purpose of excluding said North West Transport Line from a participation in said traffic or of effectuating any restraint or monopoly of said traffic. He denies that said North West Transport Line has at any time been prevented from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic, and as to whether the traffic which it has obtained was or was not secured at a financial loss he has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief.

He denies on information and belief that the defendant steamship lines have agreed in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who shall act 588 as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with said defendant lines or that measures provided for thereunder are employed by the individual defendants within the United States or in the Southern District of New York on behalf of the defendant lines as a part of any illegal attack upon said North West Transport Line. He says that long before said contract of February 5, 1908, was made, an agreement was entered into between some or all of the defendant lines and others that no one of the lines so agreeing would employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who should act for the sale of tickets over any line other than the lines so agreeing; that this agreement was made in self defence to guard against frauds by ticket agents in sacrificing the interests of their principals by cutting rates and diverting business from the lines employing them and by deceiving and defrauding persons to whom they sold tickets, and by committing other frauds upon the traveling public as well as upon their principals; that said agreement was and is valid and lawful and has promoted the public convenience and the honest conduct of the trans-atlantic steerage business.

21. He denies each and every allegation contained in that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Excessive and arbitrary rates are charged by defendants for steerage transportation."

22. Answering that paragraph of Subdivision C of Article V of the petition entitled "Penal enforcement of the terms of the unlawful contract," he denies that since the adoption of the contract of February 5th, 1908, any of the parties thereto has been subjected to any duress or constraint in conducting its steerage business, and refers to the terms of said contract for the particulars thereof.

23. Answering Part VI of the petition he denies that the defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual or any monopoly of any part of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations, and he denies that said contract was or is unlawful, or that the Hamburg-American Line was or is a party to any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever. He says that he has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to what per cent of the total third-class or steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America was carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines at the date of the filing of the petition herein.

24. Further answering he says that the act of the Congress of the United States of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies" does not apply to the business of transporting passengers upon the ocean between ports of the United States and ports of Europe. But he says that even if said act should 593 be held to apply to such business said agreement among the defendant steamship lines of February 5, 1908, does not come within the prohibitions thereof because said agreement is not an agreement in restraint of trade or commerce with foreign nations and the effect thereof is not to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce. Said agreement is necessary for the protection and development of that portion of the trade and commerce of the United States with foreign nations which consist in the transportation of steerage passengers between ports in the United States and European ports, and is a reasonable regulation thereof tending to promote 594 and not to restrain the same.

25. This defendant further answering says that the practices of unscrupulous agents formerly caused great losses to the steamship companies operating between the United States and Europe, and great losses and hardships to persons travelling in the steerage. As long as there was wholly unregulated competition among the steamship lines and no understanding whatever among them, there were "general steamship agents" in New York City with agencies in the interior of the country, and the latter used to issue orders for tickets from New York to Europe on their connection in New York, which did not mention any line or steamer and which the agent sold at a price which was acceptable to him. The agent in New York met purchasers of such orders on their arrival in New York, placed them in a boarding house which he either owned or controlled, where he extorted from them all the money he could get, while with the ticket orders in his pocket he went from steamship office to steamship office seeking the lowest rate at which he could get his passengers transported. The steamship lines fought these vicious methods in every possible way, and the desire to protect steerage passengers from 596 extortion at the hands of unscrupulous agents and to put the business on a decent basis was one of the principal motives which led to the formation of the Atlantic Conference by said agreement of February 5, 1908, and of other conferences which preceded it.

26. Further answering this defendant says that the history of the transatlantic steamship trade shows that unregulated competition has always led to disastrous rate wars, ruinous to the steamship companies and harmful to the public in that they deprived the public of improvements in ships and service which the companies, because of their losses, were unable to make. Another disadvantage to the public was the inability 597 of weaker lines to endure the strain of such wars and the curtailment of service consequent upon their retirement. Prior to said contract of February 5, 1908, a number of important steamship lines which had long operated between Europe and the port of New York, carrying steerage passengers, were driven out of business by the effect of rate wars growing out of unregulated competition. In one of these rate wars steerage rates between New York and Europe went as low as $10 per passenger, out of which sum agents received a commission of $3, $4, and even $5. Only the strongest lines could survive such wars and even they made a precarious living as is shown by the long series of years in which transatlantic steamship lines did not pay any dividends to their stockholders. Taking the Hamburg-American Line as an example, it is the fact that it paid no dividends whatever in the years 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1884, 1885, 1892, 1893 and 1894. This defendant says that one of the main objects of said agreement of February 5, 1908, was to prevent the recurrence of such ruinous rate wars which in the past have been so harmful to the public 599 as well as to the steamship companies. He avers that the effect of said agreement is not to destroy competition among the parties thereto, but only to regulate such competition reasonably so that all the steamship companies parties thereto may exercise a reasonable and beneficial control over the agencies for the sale of steerage tickets, and may charge fair, reasonable and stable rates, and thus be able to meet the constant public demand for better ships and better accommodations without substantial increase of rates, and so that the weaker lines may be able to live and compete for and retain fair shares of such steerage traffic.

27. This defendant further answering says that the 600 evils of unregulated competition among American railroads have long been recognized and they have been practically done away with since the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act through the regulation exercised thereunder by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The injurious effects of rate wars among ocean carriers are, however, much greater than in the case of rate wars among railroads. The competition to which railroads are exposed is far less intense than that to which ocean carriers are exposed. In order to construct a railroad a very large capital must be provided, a franchise must be secured, a right of way obtained, and tracks must be laid. Every railroad has a substantial amount of local uncompetitive business which helps it to live through a rate war involving its competitive business. No franchise, on the other hand, is required to sail the high seas. All the business of an ocean steamship company is competitive. There are no limits to the potential competition. Any person with capital enough to assemble a few steamers may start a competition which may result in demoralizing the whole transatlantic carrying trade. The need of regulation is, therefore, much greater in the case of the transatlantic steamship companies than in the case of the railroads. It is an impressive fact that for many years with the knowledge of all departments of the government the railroads from New York to the west have apportioned among themselves the business of transporting immigrants from New York to their western destinations in accordance with an agreement similar to that among the defendant steamship lines which is attacked in the present suit. The Interstate Commerce Commission in 1904 investigated this so-called immigrant passenger pool of the railroads and decided that under the circumstances it was the best method of handling that class of traffic, not only for the railroads, but for the immigrants themselves. This permitted agreement among the railroads applies to the very same passengers which the defendant steamship lines carry under a similar agreement which the petitioner in this suit charges to be unlawful.

28. This defendant further answering says that the transportation facilities and accommodations for steerage passengers have never been so good as since the formation of the Atlantic Conference under the agreement of February 5, 1908, and the competition of the different lines in providing larger and safer steamers with improved facilities and accommodations has never been so active as since the date of said agreement. As examples of the result of such competition may be mentioned the steamers Olympic and Titanic of the White Star Lines of 45,000 tons each, the Aquitania now in course of construction by the Cunard Line of approximately 48,000 tons, and the three steamers being built by the Hamburg-American Line of the Imperator class of about 50,000 tons. Notwithstanding the great betterment of the accommodations provided and the great increase in the cost of steamers, which twenty-three years ago for the finest steamers 605 was about $2,000,000 each, and now is about $8,000,000 each, the price for steerage transportation is very little more than the normal rate charged many years prior to the making of said agreement of February 5, 1908, although the accommodations now provided are greatly superior to those then furnished. The slight increase in the rate does not compensate the carriers for the decrease in the purchasing power of money which has taken place, nor for the cost of the improved facilities and accommodations now offered. Improvements of the kind now being made cannot be continued unless the steamship companies have some assurance that reasonably remunerative and

606 stable rates can be maintained and that they will not be exposed to the hazards attendant upon the violent fluctuations of rates which always have accompanied wholly unregulated competition. Such assurance they can only obtain through some form of moderate and reasonable regulation such as is provided by said agreement of February 5, 1908.

29. This defendant further answering says that in the absence of an international agreement there is and can be no regulating authority between the United States and the countries to which the ships of the defendant steamship lines belong which can authorize the establishment and maintenance of reasonable, fair and stable rates for the transportation of steerage passengers except by fair and reasonable agreement in relation thereto by and among the persons or corporations engaged in such transportation, and therefore, in order to provide proper, safe and commodious service for the said steerage traffic the Hamburg-American Line and the other defendant lines, parties to said contract of February 5, 1908, have been compelled to agree with one another, as was done in said contract, for the reasonable regulation of said traffic. The transportation of steerage passengers since the date 608 of said contract has not resulted in more than a just and reasonable compensation to the Hamburg-American Line or to the other defendant lines for the expense incurred and the services rendered by them in the carriage of such passengers.

30. He denies each and every allegation contained in the petition and not hereinbefore specifically admitted. Having thus made full answer to all the matters and things contained in the petition, he prays to be dismissed hence with his costs in this behalf incurred.

610 Answer of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK IN THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against	In Equity.
611 HAMBURG-AMERIKANISCHE PACKETFAHRT-ACTIEN-GESELLSCHAFT and others, Defendants.

The separate answer of the defendant the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4th, 1911.

This defendant answering unto so much and such parts of said petition as it is advised it is material and necessary for it to make answer unto, says:

1. Answering Part I of the petition, this defend-612 ant denies that it is engaged in foreign trade and commerce as a common carrier of passengers and freight, including third-class or steerage passengers between ports in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa. It admits that it carries from certain inland points in the United States upon lines of railroad operated by it, persons to whom it has sold contracts for steerage transportation on its steamers sailing from Canadian ports to the port of Liverpool in England, but it says that the contracts for such railroad transportation are entirely separate and distinct from said contracts for steerage transportation. It denies that it is engaged in such foreign trade and commerce between inland points in the United States and inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa. As regards the other defendant steamship lines, this defendant admits, upon information and belief, that they are engaged in foreign trade and commerce as aforesaid between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, but it denies, upon information and belief that they are so engaged between inland points in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa. It denies that in respect to any commerce in which it is engaged, or otherwise, it is violating or ever has violated, in any way any 614 of the provisions of the Act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraint and Monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, and upon information and belief it makes the same denial as regards the other defendant steamship lines.

2. Answering paragraph 9 of Part II of the petition, this defendant admits that at all times mentioned in the petition, it was and now is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the Dominion of Canada, with an office and place of business and an agent in charge thereof in the City, County, State and Southern District of New York; 615 and it admits that at all such times it has been engaged in operating regular lines of steamships from the port of Liverpool in England to the ports of Montreal, Quebec and St. John, in the Dominion of Canada, and continuous, through lines of railroad connecting with said steamship lines at the ports of Montreal, Quebec, and St. John, and operating thence through the Dominion of Canada into the United States to divers points within the States of Maine and Vermont. The only lines of railway operated by this defendant in the United States are the following: Canadian boundary to Mattawamkeag, Maine, a distance of 144.5 miles; Canadian boundary to Houlton, Maine, a distance of three miles; Canadian boundary to Presque Isle, Maine, a distance of 29.2 miles; Canadian boundary to North Troy, Vermont, a distance of 0.72 miles; Richford to Newport, Vermont, a distance of twenty-one miles. It admits that at the times mentioned it has been engaged in transporting between said points in the United States and the said port of Liverpool, by way of said steamships and 617 railway lines, freight and passengers for hire, including that class of passengers known as third-class or steerage passengers. But it says that only a small proportion of the persons to whom this defendant sells in the United States contracts for steerage transportation on its steamers from Canadian ports to Liverpool, England, travel from the United States to Canada on said lines of railway operated by this defendant in the United States, but far the greater number of such persons travel from the United States to Canada on lines of railroad operated by other railway companies and continue their journey through Canada, to the port of their embarkation upon connecting lines of railroad operated either by this de-618 fendant or by other railway companies. It admits that at the times mentioned in the petition it has maintained agencies in divers cities in Europe and in the United States at which it has sold contracts for the transportation of freight and passengers on and by its said steamship and railway lines and other railway lines to and from points in the United States and from and to points in Europe; and it has maintained agents in charge of such agencies who have been and now are engaged in soliciting persons to travel to and from Europe upon said steamship and railway lines. But it says that in every case in which it has sold to a steerage passenger, contracts for through transportation from a point in the United States by railway either upon its own lines of railroad or upon the lines of one or more other railway companies, or partly upon its own lines of railway and partly upon the lines of another company, to one of said Canadian ports and thence by one of its steamships to Liverpool, the contract or contracts for the railway transportation has or have at all the times mentioned in the petition been separate and distinct from the contract for steamship transportation, and the rates for such railway transportation have at all said times 620 been the regular tariff rates fixed pursuant to the laws of the United States and of the Dominion of Canada without reference or relation to the rate charged by this defendant for transportation upon its steamships. The rates charged by this defendant upon the lines of railway operated by it in the United States are those filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and permitted by it, and the rates charged upon this defendant's lines of railway in Canada are permitted and authorized by the Canadian Railway Commission, which has powers similar to those exercised in this country by the Interstate Commission. Whenever this defendant has sold to a steerage passenger upon its steamship line a contract or contracts of transportation 621 for the whole or a part of the journey from a point in the United States to the Canadian port of embarkation over the lines of another railway company or of other railway companies, it has charged the passenger the exact tariff rate of such other company or companies and pursuant to arrangement with it or them has paid the amount so received from the passenger to such other company or companies, deriving no profit to itself from the transaction and rendering the service gratuitously to the passenger for his or her convenience. No person purchasing from 622 this defendant in the United States a contract for steerage transportation upon its steamship line from one of said Canadian ports to Liverpool has ever been required to travel from the United States to the port of embarkation for any part of the journey upon its lines of railway, but this defendant has always given him or her free choice to select the railway route from the point of departure in the United States to the port of embarkation in Canada which he or she preferred, and has provided transportation by the route so selected.

623 It denies each and every allegation contained in paragraph 24, except that it admits that some of the defendant steamship lines are in some respects natural competitors.

Upon information and belief generally, but without information as to many of such allegations concerning the other defendants, it admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23.

3. Answering Part III of the petition this defendant admits that the steerage traffic to and from Europe has been large, that the steamship companies engaged
624 in carrying such traffic have extended their facilities for handling the same, and that the income from that description of traffic is an important part of their revenue, and except as to the allegations so admitted this defendant says that it has no knowledge, information or belief in regard to the allegations contained in said Part "III" of the petition.

4. Answering Part IV of the petition, this defendant denies each and every allegation contained in said Part "IV" of the petition, in so far as the same applies to it, and upon information and belief, it denies each and every allegation therein contained in so far as the same applies to the other defendants.

5. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision A of Part V of the petition, this defendant admits that on or about February 5th, 1908, at the City of London, England, it entered into an agreement with the other defendant steamship lines, a copy of which agreement is annexed to the petition and marked "Exhibit A." It believes such copy to be substantially correct, but for greater certainty craves leave to refer to the original thereof when the same shall be produced. This defendant denies that in becoming a party to said agreement it entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or into any conspiracy whatever, or that said agreement was or is unlawful. This defendant says that said agreement was and is lawful under the laws of England, where it was made, and under the laws of Canada which govern this defendant and its steamships, and that said agreement is not in violation of any law of the United States.

This defendant says that pursuant to the terms of said agreement on November 26, 1910, it gave due notice to the secretary of the Atlantic Conference of its intention of terminating the same at the end of the next February, and that on March 1, 1911, its withdrawal from said agreement became effective and since then it has not been and is not now a member of the Atlantic Conference and has not been and is not now bound by or entitled to the benefit of said agreement of February 5, 1908. This defendant also says that its participation in said agreement up to the time of its said withdrawal therefrom was, as appears by the terms thereof, limited to eastbound traffic.

This defendant admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, of Subdivision A of Article V of the petition, in so far as they set forth the provisions of said agreement dated February 5th, 1908, but it denies the allegations contained in the petition in regard to the meaning, legal effect and intent of said agreement, and for greater certainty craves leave to refer to the original of said agreement when the same shall be produced.

6. Answering Subdivision B of Article V of the petition this defendant admits that at about the time mentioned in the petition the Russian-American Line was admitted to membership in the Atlantic Conference and to the provisions of said contract, and that 629 the shares of the lines parties to said contract were in some respects altered so as to provide a percentage of said steerage traffic for the Russian-American Line.

It admits that by the terms of said contract of February 5th, 1908, the same was to remain effective up to and including February 28th, 1911, and thereafter from year to year, unless notice of intention to withdraw therefrom at the end of any year should be given by one or more of the parties thereto on or before the first day of December of the year in which such notice should be given, as in said contract provided.

7. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision C of Part
630 V of the petition this defendant admits, on information and belief, that from the adoption of the aforesaid contract and so long as it was a party thereto, the business of the said defendant steamship lines, in so far as it consisted of the steerage traffic referred to therein and in so far as said contract applied thereto, was carried on by the defendant lines in accordance with the terms and provisions thereof, and in accordance with the terms and provisions of resolutions adopted by said contracting parties at meetings held in pursuance thereof, but it denies that all free and natural competition between said lines in the establishment of rates and the furnishing of facilities for such steerage traffic was or is thereby eliminated, and it denies that said contract was unlawful. As to the manner in which the business of the other defendant lines has been carried on since March 1, 1911, when this defendant ceased to be a party to said contract it has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief.

8. Answering paragraph 2 of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition this defendant denies that it has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation of said paragraph 2. 632

9. Answering the first sentence of paragraph 3 of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition this defendant denies that it has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation therein.

10. This defendant denies each and every allegation of that portion of Subdivision "C" of Part "V" of the petition entitled "Agreement to Destroy Competition of Independent Lines."

11. Further answering this defendant says that in order to meet low rates then offered by a line of steamships not a party to said contract of February 5, 633
1908, operating between New York and the Continent of Europe, the said defendant lines agreed, at a meeting held at the City of London in England on or about May 25th, 1908, that one of such lines should when necessary quote low rates in competition with the rates of said outside line.

12. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Arrangement to use so-called 'fighting steamers' to destroy competition," this defendant denies that the facts are correctly stated in the petition and alleges the facts to be as follows:

634 It admits and says that in pursuance of said agreement of May 25, 1908, and for the purpose of defending themselves against unfair competition by steamship lines other than the defendant lines, said defendant lines arranged for the use from time to time of steamers belonging to them, so that in case and only in case a steamship belonging to a line not a party to said contract of February 5, 1908, should be scheduled to sail eastbound from the port of New York to a European port and should offer unremunerative steerage rates necessarily involving the carriage of steer-
635 age passengers at a loss, for the obvious purpose of diverting steerage business from the steamships of the defendant lines, a steamship belonging to one of the defendant lines would be selected to sail from the port of New York at about the same time and to carry steerage passengers at rates lower than the ordinary steerage rates on the steamships of the defendant lines, for the purpose of meeting and preventing the intended effect of such unfair competition. Said arrangements with regard to the so-called "fighting steamers" were made by the defendant steamship companies in Europe but until March, 1910, were partly carried into effect by a committee representing them in the City of New York. This defendant denies that so long as it was 636 a party to such arrangements the steerage rates on any steamer so selected by the defendant lines were ever reduced lower than was necessary to meet such competition and to prevent the defendant lines from being deprived of their fair share of the steamship traffic from New York to European ports. It admits that whenever any so-called "fighting steamer" secured more steerage passengers than it could lawfully carry, the defendant steamship lines through said committee or otherwise arranged for carrying such excess passengers at the advertised steerage rate of such "fighting steamer" on some other of their steamships and that the line or lines carrying such excess steerage passengers at such reduced rates was or were compensated by the other defendant steamship lines by payments amounting for each passenger so carried to the difference between the regular advertised steerage rate of such line and such reduced rate.

This defendant says that on June 15, 1910, it gave due notice of its intention to withdraw from said arrangement to use so-called "fighting steamers" upon the expiration of thirty days and on July 15, 1910, its withdrawal from said arrangement became effective and since then it has not had and it has not now 638 any connection therewith nor any obligation thereunder.

13. Answering that portion of Subdivision "C" of Part V of the petition entitled "Competitors are crushed" this defendant admits on information and belief that the method hereinabove described of meeting the competition of lines not parties to the Atlantic Conference was employed to meet the competition of steamships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and of the Russian-American Line operating and carrying steerage passengers between the port of New York and the port of Libau in Russia. It denies that said method was devised or employed to suppress the competition 639 of said last mentioned lines or that such competition was crushed thereby, but it says that said method was devised and employed solely to protect the business of the defendant lines and not to effect the objects of any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy whatever.

14. This defendant denies each and every allegation contained in the paragraph of Subdivision "C" of Part "V" of the petition entitled "The Russian Volunteer Fleet is Driven out of Business," except that it admits that from March to June, 1908, the said Russian

640 Volunteer Fleet frequently advertised its steamships to sail from the port of New York to the port of Libau in Russia, and advertised for and solicited persons to sail as third-class or steerage passengers on such ships, and that when such ships were so advertised to sail, said defendant lines selected a steamer and advertised the same to sail from the port of New York on or about the day that the ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was so advertised to sail and advertised a rate for steerage passengers on such steamer lower than the regular steerage rates of the defendant lines and low enough but not lower than 641 necessary to meet the competition of said ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, and except that it admits that in the month of July, 1908, or shortly prior thereto, said Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew its steamships from such service, and has ever since ceased to operate said line. This defendant says on information and belief that the steerage rates charged on said ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and on the steamers so selected by the defendant lines to meet their competition were so low that neither the Russian Volunteer Fleet nor any other line could derive any profit therefrom and that the business done at such rates resulted in loss.

642 15. This defendant says that in the year 1908 the business of transporting steerage passengers between the United States and Europe was greatly depressed. Upon information and belief, it says that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was in that year making low steerage rates, west and eastbound, in order to create traffic, but the movement of steerage passengers was so light that its voyages were conducted at a loss, as was also the case in that year with the voyages of the ships of the defendant lines. Upon information and belief, this defendant says that the withdrawal of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was occasioned partly by the small volume of traffic and partly by the entrance of the Russian-American Line as a competitor into the trade between Libau and New York, and by losses of the Russian Volunteer Fleet in no way due to any act or acts of the defendant lines or of any one thereof.

16. Upon information and belief, this defendant says that when the Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew, the Russian-American Line took over and assumed its contracts for the carriage of steerage passengers under an arrangement between it and the Russian Volunteer Fleet, of the terms of which this defendant has no knowledge. 644

17. This defendant believes, and therefore says that the withdrawal of the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet from the service between New York and Libau caused no detriment or loss to the public or to persons desiring to procure steerage transportation between New York and Libau.

18. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "The Russian-American Line is Driven Out of Competition and Forced into the Unlawful Combination and Conspiracy," this defendant admits and says that from the month of March until the month of September, 1908, the Russian-American Line was engaged in operating its line of steamships from the port of New York to the port of Libau, in Russia, and carried thereon third-class or steerage passengers, and that frequently during said period, it advertised its steamships to sail from said port of New York, and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third-class or steerage passengers, and that in each such instance the defendant lines selected a steamer and advertised the 645 same to sail at or about the same time as the ship of the Russian-American Line, and advertised a rate for steerage passengers on such steamer lower than the regular steerage rates of the defendant lines and low enough but not lower than necessary to meet the competition of said ship of the Russian-American Line. This defendant says that the steerage rates charged on said ships of the Russian-American Line and on the steamers so selected by the defendant lines to meet their competition were so low that neither the Russian-American Line, nor any other line could de-647 rive any profit therefrom and that the business done at such rates resulted in loss.

It admits that at or about the time mentioned in the petition the Russian-American Line became a party to the Atlantic Conference and has since carried on its business under said contract dated Feb. 5, 1908, in so far as the same applies thereto. It denies any unfair or unlawful competition by the defendant lines with the Russian-American Line. By reason of the unremunerative rates charged this defendant believes that the Russian-American Line incurred financial loss in the conduct of its steerage traffic, but denies that the Russian-American Line sought admission to the Atlantic Conference in order to be permitted to con-
648 tinue in said business, or that since its admission to said Conference this defendant has been conducting its said business free from competition with the other defendant lines. It denies that so long as it was a party thereto the Atlantic Conference was an unlawful combination or conspiracy, or that the contract of February 5, 1908, was unlawful, or that the people of the United States suffered any loss or detriment therefrom or from any act of any of the defendants thereunder.

19. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Unfair competition against the Uranium Steamship Company," this defendant says it has no information as to whether the Uranium Steamship Company is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Great Britain. It admits that about April 1, 1909, said company began to operate, and has ever since operated, a regular line of steamships under the name of the North West Transport Line between the ports of New York and Rotterdam, and began to carry and has ever since carried steerage passengers thereby between said ports without being a party to said contract of February 5, 1908. It says that the rates at which said Uranium 650

Steamship Company advertised to carry steerage passengers were below a fair and reasonable rate for the service offered. It admits that the defendant lines met this competition in the same manner in which they had met the competition of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and of the Russian-American Line as hereinbefore described. It admits that in March, 1910, the aforesaid committee in New York was disbanded, and that from that time until July 15, 1910, when this defendant ceased to participate in the arrangement to use such steamers, the so-called "fighting steamers" were selected and their rates for steerage transportation were fixed by the defendant steamship lines in Europe. As to the manner in which such steamers 651 have been selected and their rates have been fixed since July 15, 1910, it has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief. It denies that it has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether such rates are now or since March, 1910, have been put in force by notices sent out by the individual defendants to the agents throughout the United States for the sale of tickets for third-class steerage transportations on the defendant lines. It says that the measures taken by the defendant lines so long as it was a party to said arrangement for the purpose of meeting the competition of said North West Transport Line were lawful and necessary for the protection of the business of the defendant lines and were not adopted for the purpose of excluding said North West Transport Line from a participation in said traffic or of effectuating any restraint or monopoly of said traffic. It denies that said North West Transport Line so long as this defendant was a party to said arrangement was at any time prevented from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic and as to whether the said traffic which it so obtained was or was not secured at a financial loss 353 this defendant denies that it has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief.

It denies on information and belief that the defendant steamship lines have agreed in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who shall act as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with said defendant lines, or that measures provided for thereunder are employed by the individual defendants within the United States or in the Southern District of New York on behalf of the defendant lines as a part 654 of any illegal attack upon said North West Transport Line. This defendant says that long before said contract of February 5, 1908, was made, an agreement was entered into between some or all of the defendant lines and others that no one of the lines so agreeing would employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who should act for the sale of tickets over any line other than the lines so agreeing; that this agreement was made in self defense to guard against frauds by ticket agents in sacrificing the interests of their principals by cutting rates and diverting business from the lines employing them and by deceiving and defrauding persons to whom they sold tickets and by committing other frauds upon the traveling public as well as upon their principals; that said agreement was and is valid and lawful and has promoted the public convenience and the honest conduct of the transatlantic steerage business.

20. This defendant denies each and every allegation contained in that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Excessive and arbitrary rates are charged by defendants for steerage transportation" in so far as said allegations apply to the time during which it was a party to the Atlantic Conference. 656

21. Answering that paragraph of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Penal enforcement of the terms of the unlawful contract," this defendant denies that so long as it was a party to said contract of February 5th, 1908, any of the parties thereto was subjected to any duress or constraint in conducting its steerage business, and refers to the terms of said contract for the particulars thereof.

22. Answering Part VI of the petition this defendant denies that so long as it was a party to said contract of February 5, 1908, the defendant steamship 657 lines obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual or any monopoly of any part of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations, and it denies that said contract was unlawful, or that it was or is a party to any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever. It says that it has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to what per cent of the total third-class or steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America was carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines at the date of the filing of the petition herein.

23. Further answering this defendant says that the act of the Congress of the United States of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies" does not and never did apply to this defendant in the conduct of its business of transporting steerage passengers on its steamships between said Canadian ports and the port of Liverpool, England, no part of said business being carried on within the territorial limits
659 of the United States.

24. This defendant denies each and every allegation contained in the petition not hereinbefore specifically admitted. It denies that it has ever violated or attempted or intended to violate the Anti-Trust Act or any provision thereof. In as much as it has withdrawn, as aforesaid, from said agreement of February 5, 1908, and from said arrangement in regard to the use of so-called "fighting steamers" it respectfully submits that this Honorable Court is without jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for in the petition or any part thereof or any other relief in the premises against this defendant, and it prays to be dismissed hence with 660 its costs in this behalf incurred.

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK IN THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against HAMBURG-AMERIKANISCHE PACKETFAHRT-ACTIEN-GESELLSCHAFT and others, Defendants. 662	In Equity.

The separate answer of the defendant Bryce J. Allan to the petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4th, 1911.

This defendant answering unto so much and such parts of said petition as he is advised it is material and necessary for him to make answer unto, says:

1. Answering Part I of the petition this defendant admits that the defendant steamship lines herein, except the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, are engaged 663 in foreign trade and commerce as common carriers of passengers and freight, including third-class, or steerage passengers, between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, but upon information and belief he denies that they (except the Canadian Pacific Railway Company) are engaged as common carriers of passengers and freight between inland points in the United States and ports or inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa. In regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, he believes that said company is not engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight between ports in the United States and ports in Europe, and therefore denies that this is the fact, but he has no information, knowledge or belief as to whether said Canadian Pacific Railway Company is engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight including third-class or steerage passengers, between inland points in the United States and ports and inland points in Europe, Asia and Africa. He denies, upon information and belief, that in respect to said commerce in which said defendant steamship lines are engaged, or otherwise, they are violating, or ever have 665 violated, in any way any of the provisions of the Act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," approved July 2nd, 1890.

2. Answering Part II of the petition he admits the allegations contained in paragraph 1.

Answering paragraph 2 he admits that he is a resident of the State of Massachusetts, and is and for many years has been engaged in business under the firm name and style of H. & A. Allan, with an office and place of business at the City of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts. He denies that he has been 666 or now is employed by the Allan Line in the capacity of general agent and manager of its business in the United States or that he has had or now has charge of the affairs in the United States of the Allan Line in connection with its business aforesaid. He admits and says that he is the manager of the business of the Allan Line in Massachusetts and that he represents himself and his said office, respectively, to be the person with whom and the place at which business may be transacted with the Allan Line in Massachusetts.

He denies, upon information and belief, each and every allegation contained in paragraph 24, except that he admits that some of the defendant steamship lines are in some respects natural competitors.

Upon information and belief generally, but without information as to many of such allegations concerning the other defendants, he admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23.

3. Answering Part III of the petition, he admits that the steerage traffic to and from Europe has been large, that the steamship companies engaged in carrying such traffic have extended their facilities for handling the same, and that the income from that description of traffic is an important part of their revenue, and except as to the allegations so admitted, he says that he has no knowledge, information or belief in regard to the allegations contained in said Part "III" of the petition. 668

4. Answering Part IV of the petition he denies, upon information and belief, each and every allegation contained therein.

5. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision A of Part V of the petition, he admits, on information and belief, that on or about February 5th, 1908, at the City of London, England, the steamship lines mentioned in said paragraph entered into an agreement, a copy of which agreement is annexed to the petition and marked "Exhibit A." He believes such copy to be substantially correct, but for greater certainty craves leave to refer to the original thereof when the same shall be produced. He denies that said agreement was or is unlawful. He says that said agreement was and is lawful under the laws of England where it was made, and under the laws of Great Britain which govern the Allan Line and its steam- 669 ships, and that it never was and is not in violation of the laws of the United States. He says that until the commencement of this suit he had no knowledge whatever of the existence of said contract.

6. He admits that the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, of Subdivision A of Part V of the petition, in so far as they set forth the provisions of said agreement dated February 5th, 1908, but he denies the allegations contained in the petition in regard to the meaning, legal effect and intent of said agreement, and for greater 671 certainty craves leave to refer to the original of said agreement when the same shall be produced.

7. Answering Subdivision B of Part V of the petition he denies that he has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof.

8. Answering paragraph 1 of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition, he denies that he has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof except that he denies that all free and natural competition between said lines has been or is eliminated.

672 9. Answering paragraph 2 of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition, he denies each and every allegation thereof.

10. Answering the first sentence of paragraph 3 of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition, he denies each and every allegation contained therein, except that he admits that he has received from his principal and, upon information and belief, that the agents of the other defendant lines in the United States have from time to time received orders and instructions from their respective principals in Europe, in respect to the sailing of steamers and in respect to rates of passage and other business, and that he and they have complied with and carried out such orders and instructions.

11. He denies each and every allegation of that portion of subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Agreement to destroy competition of independent lines."

12. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Arrangement to use so-called 'fighting steamers' to destroy competition," he denies that he has any knowledge or information 674 sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof.

13. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Competitors are crushed," he denies that he has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof.

14. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the Petition entitled "The Russian volunteer fleet is driven out of business," he denies that he has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof. 675

15. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "The Russian-American Line is driven out of competition and forced into unlawful combination and conspiracy," he denies that he has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof.

16. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Unfair competition against the Uranium Steamship Company," he denies that he has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof, except that he denies on information and belief that the defendant steamship lines have agreed in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy that no one of them shall continue in its employ as agent for the sale of tickets over its line any person who shall act as agent for the sale of third-class or steerage tickets over any independent line in competition with said defendant line or that measures provided for thereunder are employed by the individual 677 defendants within the United States or in the Southern District of New York on behalf of the defendant lines as a part of any illegal attack upon said North West Transport Line.

17. He denies each and every allegation contained in that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Excessive and arbitrary rates are charged by defendants for steerage transportation."

18. Answering that portion of Subdivision C of Part V of the petition entitled "Penal enforcement of the terms of the unlawful contract," he denies that he has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation thereof.

19. Answering Part VI of the petition he denies that the defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted to obtain a virtual or any monopoly of any part of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers in trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations, and he denies that said contract was or is unlawful. He says that he has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to what per cent of the total third-class or steerage passenger traffic between Europe and North America was carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines at the date of the filing of the petition herein.

20. He denies each and every allegation contained in the petition and not hereinbefore specifically admitted. Having thus made full answer to all the matters and things contained in the petition, this defendant prays to be dismissed hence with his costs in this behalf incurred.

682 The Separate Answer of the Defendant, The Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd., to the Petition of the United States of America, Filed Herein on January 4, 1911.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK, IN THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against HAMBURG-AMERIKANISCHE PACKETFAHRT - ACTIEN - GESELLSCHAFT, and the CUNARD STEAMSHIP COMPANY, LTD., impleaded with others, Defendants.	In Equity.

683

The Separate Answer of the Defendant, the Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, to the Petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4, 1911.

684

This defendant, answering unto so much and such parts of said petition as it is advised it is material and necessary for it to make answer unto, says:

I.

Answering that portion of the petition numbered "I":

1. It admits that it is a common carrier of passengers and freight between ports of the United States and ports of Europe, but denies that it is a common carrier of passengers or freight between inland points or ports in the United States and inland points in Europe, Asia or Africa.

2. It denies that with respect to said commerce in which it is engaged, or otherwise, it is violating or ever has violated, in any way, any of the provisions of the Act of Congress of the United States, entitled: "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890.

3. It says that it has no knowledge or information or belief as to the averments therein contained concerning the defendants other than this defendant and the defendant, Charles P. Sumner.

II.

Answering that portion of the petition numbered "II" and entitled "Description of defendants and the trade and commerce which they conduct":

4. It says that it has no knowledge or information, saving by hearsay, as to any of the allegations contained in the subdivisions thereof numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22, and therefore leaves it to petitioner to make such proof in that behalf as it may be advised. 687

5. It admits that at the times mentioned in the petition it was, and now is, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, with an agent in the City, County, State and Southern District of New York, and that at all such times it has been, and now is, engaged in trade and commerce between the United States of America and foreign nations, and that it operates regular lines of steamships between the terminal ports of New York and Boston in the United States and the terminal ports of Liverpool in England, Fiume in Hungary, and Trieste in Austria, and that it transports between, and to and from said ports upon its steamships, freight and passengers for hire.

6. It admits that at the times mentioned in the petition it maintained ticket agencies in certain cities in Europe and in the United States, at which it sold 689 contracts for the transportation of freight and passengers on and by its steamships to and from the United States—that is to say, to and from the ports of Boston and New York in the United States and from and to certain ports in Europe, and it admits that in the case of all such passengers transported to the United States from said European ports, it has docked its steamships and landed such passengers at either the port of Boston or the port of New York, and in the case of such passengers transported by it to Europe, they have embarked upon its steamships at one or the other of said two last mentioned ports.

7. It denies that the defendant, Charles P. Sumner,
690 is a resident of the City, County, State and Southern District of New York, and says that he is a resident of Elizabeth, in the State of New Jersey. It admits that said Charles P. Sumner is its general agent in the United States, with an office and place of business at No. 21 State Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City and Southern District of New York, and that said defendant has charge, in the United States, of the business affairs of this defendant, and that he represents himself and his office, respectively, to be the person with whom, and the place at which, business may be transacted in the United States with the Cunard Line.

Answer of The Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd. 691

8. It denies that said defendant, Charles P. Sumner, has been engaged in business as its general agent in the United States for many years, and says, on the contrary, that said Charles P. Sumner was first appointed its general agent in the United States on the first day of August, 1909.

9. It admits the averments contained in the subdivision thereof numbered 24 to the effect that the defendant steamship lines are natural competitors in the business of furnishing facilities for the aforesaid steerage passenger traffic, but only to the limited extent to which their steamers start from the same port 692 on the same date and carry passengers to the same destination, but says that in other respects said defendant steamship lines are not natural competitors and, except as admitted, denies each and every averment in said subdivision 24, and says that this defendant has not entered into or been a party to any unlawful combination, contract or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever, with any or all of the other defendants in said petition described, and denies that it has ever violated or attempted or intended to violate the Anti-Trust Act or any provision thereof.

III. 693

Answering that portion of the petition numbered "III" entitled: "Description of the trade and commerce which the defendants are monopolizing and attempting and conspiring to monopolize":

10. This defendant admits that the traffic in carrying steerage passengers between Europe and the United States has at some periods been large, and that the steamship companies engaged in carrying such passengers have extended their facilities for handling it, and that the income derived from that class of traffic constitutes an important part of their revenue. Except as admitted, this defendant says that it has no knowledge or information or belief as to the other averments therein set forth and leaves it to petitioner to make such proof in that behalf as it may be advised.

IV.

Answering that portion of the petition numbered "IV" entitled "The combination and conspiracy in 695 which the defendants are engaged":

11. It denies that the defendants have been or are engaged in the Southern District of New York, in the United States, or elsewhere, in any combination or conspiracy, unlawful or otherwise, to restrain any part of the trade or commerce of the United States with foreign nations or to monopolize the same, or any part thereof, and it denies that said defendants are or have been engaged in the Southern District of New York, or elsewhere, in any combination or conspiracy to destroy all competition among and between themselves in the business of transporting third-class or 696 steerage passengers by steamships between ports in the United States of America and ports in Europe, or that said defendants at any time have eliminated, suppressed or destroyed, or have attempted to eliminate, suppress or destroy, all or any competition in such traffic by any persons or corporations other than themselves, and this defendant denies each and every averment contained in said paragraph of said petition.

Answer of The Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd. 697

V.

Answering that portion of the petition numbered "V" and entitled "The manner and means of accomplishing the unlawful combination and conspiracy":

A.

12. It admits that on or about February 5, 1908, at the City of London, in England, this defendant and the defendants, the Allan Line, the Anchor Line, the Hamburg-American Line, the North German Lloyd, 698 the Holland-American Line, the Red Star Line, the International Mercantile Marine Company, and the Canadian Pacific Line, entered into a certain contract in writing; this defendant believes that Exhibit "A" of the petition is substantially a true copy thereof, but for greater certainty as to the terms thereof, this defendant craves leave to refer to the same when the same shall be produced, but this defendant denies that in entering into said contract it entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or into any conspiracy whatever, or that said contract was or is unlawful, or that this defendant was or is a member of any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or any conspiracy whatever, as alleged in the petition; and this 699 defendant says on the contrary that the making of said contract was and is lawful when and where made at the City of London, England, and that the making of said contract is not, and never was, a violation of the laws of the United States.

13. This defendant admits that the terms of said contract of February 5, 1908, are of the general purport mentioned in the paragraphs numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, as far as the said provisions are therein set forth, but this defendant in no sort admits the truth of the averments of the petition as to the meaning, legal effect or intent of said contract, and for greater certainty craves leave to refer to said contract when the same shall be produced.

B.

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Defendant The Russian-American Line becomes a party to the illegal contract."

14. It denies that the defendant, The Russian-American Line, was admitted to membership in the 701 Atlantic Conference or to the provisions of said contract at a meeting held by the other defendant lines at the City of Cologne, Germany, on September 1st, 1909, or at any other time or place, and denies that the shares of all the lines, parties to said contract, were in any respect altered, but it admits that an agreement was made with The Russian-American Line with respect to the maintenance of its steerage traffic, subject to provisions, similar to the provisions of the said contract.

15. It admits that by the terms of said contract of February 5, 1908, said contract was to remain effective to February 28, 1911, and was to continue there-
702 after from year to year unless due notice should be given to the Secretary as in said agreement provided.

C.

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Acts pursuant to the unlawful agreement and to effect the purpose of the unlawful combination and conspiracy":

16. This defendant admits that since the making of said contract of February 5, 1908, this defendant has duly made and rendered the accounts required to be made by said agreement, but says that this has been done only in Europe and not elsewhere. It admits that in cases where this defendant has been found to have carried more than its percental participation in the carriage of steerage passengers as defined by said contract, this defendant has made payment in Europe for such excess as required by the terms of the agreement and has otherwise complied in Europe with the agreement. But except as to acts performed in Europe in the financial management of the affairs of this defendant, it denies that it has carried on such portion 704 of its business as related to the carriage of steerage passengers in accordance with any agreement with any other steamship company. This defendant denies that said contract was or is unlawful, or that all free or natural competition between said lines in the establishment of rates or in the furnishing of facilities for steerage traffic has been or is wholly eliminated or unreasonably limited, and says upon the contrary that this defendant and the other defendant lines now are, and at all times since the making of said contract of February 5, 1908, have been, engaged as competitors in the carrying of steerage passengers, and that this defendant and, as it is informed and believes, the other 705 defendant steamship lines, at all times mentioned in the petition, were and now are doing each its utmost to secure as large an amount of said steerage traffic as it can get and handle without inaugurating a war or destructive competition in steerage rates.

17. It denies that the successful accomplishment of the objects of said agreement necessarily involve the execution of the terms or scope or intent of said agreement throughout the United States or in the Southern District of New York, and it denies that since February 5, 1908, its agent in the United States, the defendant, Charles P. Sumner, or his predecessor in that office, has been designated or established by it at his office or elsewhere in the United States, as its agent to carry out or make effective the terms, objects or intent of said agreement, or that said defendant, Charles P. Sumner, or his predecessor, has carried out or executed acts necessary for the successful accomplishment of said agreement; as to the defendants other than this defendant, and the defendant, Charles P. Sumner, this defendant has no knowledge, information or belief, and leaves it to the petitioner to 707 make such proof in that behalf as it may be advised; but this defendant denies that said agreement was or is unlawful or that it thereby or otherwise entered into or became a party to any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever.

18. It denies that it ever instructed or ordered its agent, the defendant, Charles P. Sumner, or his predecessor, in respect to the accomplishment of the objects and purposes of said agreement, and this defendant says that from time to time it has sent instructions to the defendant, Charles P. Sumner, with respect to the rates to be charged upon its ships, and to other matters involving the conduct of its business and the 708 operation of its ships and that said defendant, Charles P. Sumner, has complied with and carried out such instructions.

19. This defendant has no knowledge, information or belief as to whether the other individual defendants mentioned in the petition have ever received orders and instructions from their respective principals respecting said contract of February 5, 1908, or in respect to the accomplishment of the objects thereof, and leaves it to petitioner to make such proof in that behalf as it may be advised.

Answer of The Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd. 709

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Agreement to destroy competition of independent lines":

20. It denies that the defendant steamship lines, at a meeting held March 25, 1908, or at any other time, agreed that they would act together to eliminate or destroy the competition of any or all persons or corporations that might then or thereafter operate lines of steamships or carry steerage passengers between Europe and the United States, in competition with all or any of the steamship lines in the traffic covered by said agreement, and further denies that said agree- 71 ment was or is unlawful, or that it was or is a party to any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever.

21. This defendant says that at a meeting of the defendant lines held at the City of London, in England, on or about the 25th day of May, 1908, in order to meet the low rates which were then being quoted by a line of steamships, not party to the agreement, operating between New York and the Continent, it was arranged that one of the lines, party to the agreement, should quote low rates in competition with said outside line, but this defendant says, however, that said low rates have never been as low as the rate of the 711 outside line, nor have the rates of any outside line been under-cut. This defendant further says that when any steamship company in the North Atlantic business has been willing to conform to the rules and regulations mentioned in said contract, and to the provisions thereof, and, in addition, has shown itself responsible and capable of governing its agents in a responsible and proper manner, it has been admitted to the conference, and to all the rights accruing under said agreement of February 5, 1908.

712 Answer of The Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd.

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Arrangement to use so-called 'fighting steamers' to destroy competition":

22. This defendant denies (except as above specifically admitted) that it or any of its representatives or agents acted in any way at any time in the selection, control or operation of so-called "fighting steamers," or that at the direction of any committee, or otherwise, it reduced on any of its steamers the passage rate to meet outside competition. It says that no representative, official, employee, servant or agent of this 713 defendant was ever appointed or acted in New York, or elsewhere in the United States, as a member of a committee, for and on behalf of the defendant lines, for the selection of so-called "fighting steamers" to sail eastbound from the port of New York to European ports. This defendant is informed and believes, and therefore says, that in no instance were the rates on any of the ships belonging to any of the defendant lines lowered beyond a point necessary to compete with the rates quoted by outside lines, and in no instance were the rates of outside lines under-cut. In no instance have the rates been lowered to a point as low as the rate of the competing outside line, and this de-714 fendant says that the lowering of rates aforesaid was not done pursuant to any unlawful combination or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever.

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Competitors are crushed":

23. This defendant denies that any unreasonable or unlawful method of competition was employed by this defendant or by the other defendant steamship lines to meet or suppress competition in steerage traffic by the Russian Volunteer Fleet or by the Russian-

715

American Line, operating between the port of New York and the port of Libau in Russia, and this defendant says that no instructions were given by it to its American representative or agent with regard to so-called "fighting steamers."

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "The Russian Volunteer Fleet is driven out of business":

24. This defendant admits that from March to June, 1908, the Russian Volunteer Fleet frequently advertised its steamships to sail from the port of New York to the port of Libau in Russia, and advertised for and solicited persons to sail as steerage passengers upon such ships, but this defendant is without knowledge, information or belief as to the equipment of the Russian Volunteer Fleet for handling such traffic and leaves it to petitioner to make such proof in that behalf as it may be advised.

25. This defendant says that no representative, official, employee, servant or agent of this defendant, ever acted as a member of any committee in the City of New York for the purpose of selecting so-called "fighting steamers," and that the rates on its ships were never reduced to meet the compeition of said Russian Volunteer Fleet to any sum less than the rate advertised by the Russian Volunteer Fleet. This defendant has no knowledge or information or belief as to what measures may have been taken by other lines to meet the competition of said Russian Volunteer Fleet, and leaves it to petitioner to make such proof in that behalf as it may be advised.

717

26. This defendant denies that the Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew its steamships from said service between the ports of New York and Libau in the month of July, 1908, and says that said withdrawal took place in the month of June, 1908. It admits that since said withdrawal said line has ceased to operate its ships. This defendant further says that said withdrawal of the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was not due or owing to any unfair or unlawful competition on the part of this defendant, or, upon information and belief, on the part of the other defendant lines.

27. This defendant says that the movement of immigration to the United States in the year 1908 was at 719 a very low ebb. Upon information and belief it says that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was quoting low rates, both westbound and eastbound, in the hope of being able to secure enough passengers to make their voyages profitable, but the freight, cabin and steerage traffic was so poor at that time that said voyages were conducted at loss, as was also the case with the voyages of the ships of the defendant lines, and this defendant says, upon information and belief, that the withdrawal of the Russian Volunteer Fleet was occasioned both by the small amount of traffic and by the entry of the Russian-American Line as a competitor into the trade between Libau and New York, 720 and by reasonable and natural economic causes.

28. Upon information and belief this defendant says that upon the withdrawal of the Russian Volunteer Fleet its contracts for the carriage of steerage passengers were taken over and assumed by the Russian-American Line under and pursuant to an arrangement between said Russian-American Line and the Russian Volunteer Fleet, of the particular terms of which arrangement this defendant has no knowledge.

29. This defendant believes, and therefore says, that the withdrawal of the ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet from the service between New York and Russia resulted in no detriment or loss to the public or to persons desiring to procure steerage transportation between New York and Russia.

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "The Russian-American Line is driven out of competition and forced into the unlawful combination and conspiracy":

30. This defendant admits that from March to September, 1908, the defendant, the Russian-American 722
Line, was engaged in operating its line of steamships from the port of New York to the port of Libau in Russia and in carrying thereon steerage passengers in competition, to a limited extent, with some of the other defendant steamship lines, but it does not know the extent of such competition. It admits that frequently during the said period the Russian-American Line advertised its steamships to sail from the port of New York, and advertised for and solicited persons to travel upon its ships as third-class or steerage passengers, but this defendant denies that the rates on any of its ships were ever lowered to meet or undercut the rates on the ships of the Russian-American 723
Line, or that any of its representatives, officials, employees, servants or agents ever acted in the United States, upon any committee to select a so-called "fighting steamer," to compete with the ships of said Russian-American Line.

31. This defendant has no knowledge or information as to what measures may have been taken by other lines to meet the competition of said Russian-American Line and leaves it to petitioner to make such proof in that behalf as it may be advised.

724 Answer of The Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd.

32. This defendant is without knowledge or information as to whether the Russian American Line, in the year 1908, incurred any financial loss in the conduct of its third-class or steerage traffic. It denies that in the month of September, 1908, the Russian-American Line became a party to the contract of February 5, 1908, or to the Atlantic Conference, or that it has since conducted its trade or commerce or business free from competition with the other defendant lines. It admits that an agreement was made with the Russian-American Line with respect to the main-
725 tenance of its steerage traffic.

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Unfair competition against the Uranium Steamship Company:"

33. This defendant is without knowledge or information as to whether the Uranium Steamship Company, Limited, is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain. It admits that certain steamships run under the name of the Northwest Transport Line, which, it is informed, had earlier been run under the name of the New York and Continental Steam-
726 ship Company and are now run under name of Uranium Steamship Company, began to operate about April 1st, 1909, and have since operated between the ports of New York and Rotterdam, and ever since that date have carried steerage passengers. It admits that the Uranium Steamship Company, Limited, is not and never has been a party to the contract of February 5, 1908.

34. This defendant denies that any of its steamships was ever selected as a "fighting steamer" to carry third-class or steerage passengers at cut rates against the steamships of said Northwest Transport

Line. It says that it has never issued any instructions to any of its agents or representatives in America in connection with said Northwest Transport Line.

35. This defendant is without knowledge or information as to what other companies or individuals may have done in order to compete with the Northwest Transport Line, and leaves it to petitioner to make such proof in that behalf as it may be advised.

36. It admits that the terms of said contract of February 5, 1908, have been enforced and put into effect since March, 1910, by the defendant lines in 728
Europe, but this defendant denies that any of the methods adopted were unlawful or were aimed at the elimination of competition by the Northwest Transport Line with them in the carriage of steerage passengers. This defendant denies that it has ever issued any orders or instructions to any of its agents or representatives in the United States with reference to the Northwest Transport Line or to "fighting steamers" or to competition with said Northwest Transport Line.

37. This defendant has no knowledge or information as to whether the Northwest Transport Line has at all or any times since the institution of its serv- 729 ice, conducted its steerage traffic at a financial loss, but it denies that said Northwest Transport Line has been prevented by any illegal or oppressive measures adopted in concert or otherwise by the defendant steamship lines or by this defendant, for the purpose of excluding said Northwest Transport Line from a participation in said traffic, or for the purpose of effectuating any restraint or monopoly of the said traffic, from obtaining a fair and reasonable share of said traffic.

730 Answer of The Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd.

38. This defendant says that it has in some cases, declined to employ certain persons as agents for the sale of its tickets over its line who were agents for the sale of steerage tickets of certain competing lines, but this defendant denies that such action on its part is other than a necessary, usual and lawful business measure on its part, or that said action is taken in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy or of any conspiracy whatever, or in pursuance of the contract of February 5, 1908.

731 Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Excessive and arbitrary rates are charged by defendants for steerage transportation:"

39. This defendant denies that at all or any times since the adoption of the contract of February 5, 1908, any or all of the defendant steamship lines have arbitrarily fixed their rates for steerage transportation, so as to bring about any arbitrary division of traffic, or so as to maintain rates at any artificial level, or that they have deprived, or are depriving, the public of the benefit of any normal division of traffic between the persons or corporations engaged therein, or of any benefits whatever. This defendant 732 denies that unregulated competition ever has, or ever will or could produce superior facilities to those at present enjoyed by the traveling public, or that lower rates ever have or could result permanently from such unregulated competition. This defendant says that its rates have been at all times, and now are, reasonable.

40. This defendant says that at no time since the establishment of steam navigation have steerage passengers entering and leaving the United States, been able to obtain better transportation and accommodations at less cost than since the agreement of February 5, 1908. Steerage rates have not since that date been increased over the amount of such rates prior thereto, sufficiently to compensate the carriers for the diminution in the purchasing power of money which has occurred during the same period, or to compensate for the increased facilities and accommodations which are offered or the increased cost of operation. Since February 5, 1908, competition between the parties to the contract of that date, in increasing the size of their steamers and in improving the conditions of the service, has been more active than at any previous time. The largest vessels afloat are those owned and operated by the defendant lines in 734 their passenger service between Europe and the United States. Since the making of the contract of February 5, 1908, it has happened ten or more times that one or other of the defendant lines has put in service, or started the construction of, a steamer larger than any of its vessels then in service. The third-class accommodations now provided by this defendant and by some of the other defendant lines are in many respects equal to the first-class accommodations existing twenty-five years ago. The absence of any agreement of the sort contemplated by the contract of February 5, 1908, would invite rate wars and destructive competition in the steerage business. It is only when the lines are living at peace with one another, 735 and not spending their earnings in destructive competition, that they can make improvements in accommodations and service and give the public that benefit which the public is now receiving. Not only have rate wars been followed by serious consequences to the steamship companies themselves, but they are inimical to the interest of the countries between which the passengers are carried.

41. The carrying trade of the ocean is altogether different from the carrying trade on land by rail. On land, it is necessary to go to considerable initial expense in obtaining a franchise, condemning a route, purchasing land, laying tracks and providing rolling stock, while on the sea, the road is open to all who wish to take a part and compete for business. As a necessary consequence, a large company which has through a long period of years devoted great effort and expended enormous sums in building up a trade, building and equipping its steamers and training its officers, crews and agents, is at the mercy of any more or less irresponsible person who may enter the 737 trade with one or two cheaply equipped steamers, manned by inexperienced officers and undisciplined crews, and may have its trade taken away by destructive and speculative competition. The large company, in defense, has to make considerable sacrifice and lose money to retain its trade, while ultimately its competitor may be compelled to withdraw from the trade after suffering loss himself, and bringing the trade he has entered into a demoralized condition. Under such circumstances, the accommodations and facilities offered the public are bound to deteriorate. A rate war or destructive competition may result temporarily in lower rates, but ultimately it will result in 738 the survival of only the largest and strongest companies, in a practical monopoly of the traffic in a few hands, and, finally, in higher rates than are maintained under such reasonable regulation of competition as the contract of February 5, 1908, provides.

42. Within recent years, but prior to the contract of February 5, 1908, such destructive competition has actually driven out of business several steamship companies which had long operated between Europe and the port of New York, carrying steerage passengers. Effective rate wars on land can be conducted only by railroads, the physical location of whose tracks enables them to compete, but on the sea any steamer may compete with any other steamer on any route, and weaker lines may be totally driven out of business by rate wars, which ultimately result in the concentration of the business in the hands of a very few, and in impairment of service. In rate wars, on the land, the railroads will have certain local and non-competitive business on which they may survive, in spite of the war, but a rate war on the ocean takes from the weaker line all its business, and the public suffers accordingly.

43. Most of the westbound steerage passengers carried by the defendant lines are immigrants to the United States, and practically all the relations between each immigrant and the line by which he comes, from the time when the immigrant first applies for passage until he is landed in the United States, and permanently accepted as a proper resident, are now regulated by the United States immigration laws. In recent years, these laws have been greatly extended, particularly as regards the selection and acceptance by the steamship company of only such passengers as are admissible. Before accepting an alien as a passenger, the steamship company is required carefully to investigate the circumstances under which he has immigrated, his physical and mental condition and history, his moral record, his personal and political opinions and his ability to care for himself. Under heavy penalties, the steamship lines are held responsible for mistakes made by their agents in Europe, in accepting as passengers, persons who, upon the completion of the voyage, are found, on examination, to have deceived the steamship company in reference to their admissibility as immigrants. Under the immigration laws, steamship companies are made responsible for the expense of returning all immigrants ultimately found to have entered the United States in violation of law. The responsibilities and expenses imposed on the steamship companies by these laws may continue for three years from the date of landing, in case of all aliens, and in case of some, may continue as long as the alien lives in the United States. For the purpose of complying with these immigration laws of the United States, this defendant has, during recent years, maintained a careful and elaborate system for the education and supervision of persons who sell its steerage tickets in Europe. It has, also, at the 743 principal ports at which its passengers embark, maintained, or arranged for the maintenance of places of abode for detaining immigrants and their families, so as to permit a continued system of medical inspection before such immigrants were permitted to embark. This system for the education and regulation of ticket agents and for the investigation of the records and physical condition of the immigrants before embarkation has caused this defendant great expense and much study and labor, based on long continued experience in the business, and this defendant says that it is practically impossible for a steamship company to comply with the immigration laws of the United States unless it maintains a careful system for the se-

744 lection and inspection of applicants for steerage passage, and that a proper system to accomplish those purposes cannot be maintained by a steamship company unless its rates are relatively stable and are a reasonable compensation for its services to the passenger and to the public.

44. The absence of any such reasonable regulation of steerage traffic as is provided by the contract of February 5, 1908, has led in the past, and would necessarily lead, at short intervals, in the future, to destructive competition and rate wars, and rates are then so far reduced as to attract as immigrants to the United States great numbers of those who are too poor to pay the usual rate. No degree of care will suffice to protect a steamship company or the officers of the United States Bureau of Immigration against the deceptions frequently practiced by that class of immigrants, and a war in steerage rates necessarily results in bringing into the United States great numbers of persons who are not able to support themselves in Europe and who, ultimately, prove unable to support themselves in the United States, although both the officers of the steamship companies and the officers of the United States Bureau of Immigration are unable to detect the fact that the immigration laws of the United States are being violated.

746

45. This defendant and the other defendant lines render an important service to the public and by reason of this, are subject to many requirements of statute regulating the conditions under which they transport passengers, particularly steerage passengers. The statutes of the United States and of Great Britain provide, with much particularity, as to the care and maintenance of steerage passengers, the conditions under which they may be carried, their medical attendance, and the condition of their accommodation. The proper observance of these regulations, and the proper care of the safety and comfort of passengers, entail care and increasing expense on this defendant and on the other defendant lines, and the responsibilities of this defendant and of the other defendant lines to the public cannot be fulfilled unless stable rates can be maintained which will afford a reasonable compensation for the service.

747

46. In the absence of international agreement or treaty on the subject, there is no regulating authority which can authorize the establishment and maintenance of reasonable, stable and equitable rates, and in order to maintain their services to the public on a permanent basis, and with security and comfort to their passengers, this defendant and the other defendant lines have been forced to contract with one another as has been done by the agreement of February 5, 1908, for the maintenance of equitable, reasonable and stable rates, and this defendant says that the making of said agreement and the acts of this defendant and of the other defendant lines, performed in carrying out said agreement, have been and are a benefit to the people of 749 the United States, and have been in accordance with the policy of the United States in respect to the carriage of passengers on the sea, and particularly in respect to the immigration of aliens to the United States. And this defendant says that it is informed and believes that there now exists, and for many years has existed, to the knowledge of the petitioner, and of the officers of its Department of Justice, a pool or combination of railroads operating within the territory of the United States, for the purpose of the regulation and division of the business of carrying immigrants westward after their arrival at the port of New York, and that such combination or pool has been officially examined by the United States Interstate Com-

750 merce Commission and has not been ordered to be dissolved by said Commission.

47. Since the making of said agreement of February 5, 1908, and under the operation of that agreement, the compensation received by this defendant for the carriage of steerage passengers has not been more than a moderate, just and reasonable compensation for the expenses incurred and the service rendered in such carriage. The dividends paid to the stockholders of this company since the making of said agreement of February 5, 1908, have not averaged more than two and three-quarters per cent annually.

Answer of The Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd. 751

48. This defendant therefore avers that the agreement of February 5, 1908, is not, and does not, create or tend to create, an undue, unreasonable or unlawful restraint of trade or commerce, nor does it create or tend to create a monopoly or attempt or tend to do so.

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Penal enforcement of the terms of the unlawful contract:"

49. This defendant denies that since the agreement of February 5, 1908, any duress or constraint has been put upon any of the parties to said agreement with reference to the conduct of its steerage business and refers to the terms of said agreement for particulars thereof. 752

VI.

Answering that portion of the petition entitled "Monopoly resulting from conspiracy."

50. This defendant denies that the defendant steamship lines have obtained or attempted or intended to obtain a virtual or any monopoly of any part of the traffic of transporting steerage passengers between the United States and foreign nations, and it denies that said contract was or is unlawful, or that it was or is a party to any unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy, or to any conspiracy whatever. It admits that at the date of the filing of said petition, about ninety per cent of the total third-class or steerage traffic between Europe and North America was carried in ships belonging to the defendant steamship lines, but it denies that seventy-five per cent, or any per cent of such total steerage traffic is restrained or limited or unreasonably regulated by means of said contract of February 5, 1908, and says that the regulation of said traffic provided for in the contract of February 5, 1908, is reasonable and lawful. 753

VII.

51. This defendant now having fully answered the petition herein, denies all and all manner of unlawful contract, combination, conspiracy, monopolizing or attempt or intent to monopolize, and all manner of misdoing of every kind wherewith it is by the said petition charged, without this, that there is any other matter, cause or thing in said petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, avoided or denied, is
755 true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant; all which matters and thing, this defendant is ready and willing to aver, maintain and prove as this Honorable Court shall direct, and humbly prays to be hence dismissed, with its costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

760 The Separate Answer of the Defendant, Charles P. Sumner, to the Petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4, 1911.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,

In the Second Circuit.

761 THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against HAMBURG-AMERIKANISCHE PACKETFAHRT - ACTIEN - GESELLSCHAFT, and CHARLES P. SUMNER, impleaded with others, Defendants. } In Equity.

This defendant, answering under so much and such parts of said petition as he is advised it is material and necessary for him to make answer unto, says:

762 I. I deny that I am violating or ever have in any way violated, or attempted or intended to violate, any of the provisions of the Act of the Congress of the United States, entitled: "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, or that I am now doing, or ever have done, anything respecting the matters set forth in the petition which was not within my legal right to do. I aver that I am not amenable to the jurisdiction of the United States, or to punishment by its laws, by reason of the dealings or matters set forth in the petition.

II. I was first appointed general agent in the United States of the defendant, the Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, on the first day of August, 1909. I have but little, if any, personal knowledge with reference to the averments of the petition so far as the same relate to matters charged to have occurred prior to August first, 1909.

III. I have no knowledge or information respecting the acts of the other defendants, saving by hearsay. I have heard nothing that leads me to believe that the other defendants have violated or intended to violate said Act of Congress, as alleged in the petition. 764

IV. I am a resident of Elizabeth, New Jersey, and I admit that since August first, 1909, I have been engaged in business as the general agent in the United States of the Cunard Line, with an office and place of business at No. 21 State Street in the Borough of Manhattan, City and Southern District of New York, and that I have charge of the affairs in the United States of the Cunard Line, and represent myself and my office, respectively, to be the person with whom, and the place at which, business may be transacted in the United States with the Cunard Line.

V. I believe that the contract annexed to the petition as "Exhibit A" is substantially a true copy of a contract entered into in London, England, on February 5, 1908, by the defendant steamship companies whose names are signed thereto, but I have never seen said contract and had no part in the making of it. 765

VI. I deny that I am designated by the Cunard Line as agent for it to carry out and make effective in the United States the terms, objects or intent of said contract or of any unlawful agreement, combination or conspiracy or of any conspiracy whatever.

766 Answer of Charles P. Sumner

VII. I deny that since my appointment as aforesaid I have, to my knowledge, carried out or executed acts necessary for the successful accomplishment of any unlawful combination or conspiracy or of any conspiracy whatever. I have never, to my knowledge, received orders or instructions from the Cunard Line in respect to the accomplishment of the objects or purposes of any unlawful combination or conspiracy or of any conspiracy whatever.

VIII. From time to time I have received instructions from the Cunard Line with respect to the rates 767 to be charged upon its ships and with respect to other matters involving the conduct of its business and the operation of its ships, and I have complied with and carried out such instructions; I have never acted as a representative of the Cunard Line, or of any other line, upon any committee in New York or elsewhere to select, control or operate so-called "fighting steamers" or to regulate, fix or control the rates to be charged steerage passengers upon the ships of any of the defendant lines.

IX. None of the ships of the defendant, the Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, sailing from any port of the United States, was, since August first, 1909,
768 or, so far as I am informed, and to the best of my belief, at any time prior thereto, selected by any committee or otherwise as a so-called "fighting steamer."

X. I have been instructed by the Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, not to employ as agents for the sale of its tickets certain persons who act as agents for the sale of steerage tickets of certain competing lines, and I have carried out those instructions, but I do not believe that such action is other than a usual, necessary and lawful business measure on the part of the defendant, the Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, or that such action is taken in pursuance of any unlawful agreement, combination or conspiracy or of any conspiracy whatever.

XI. I deny that I have ever violated or attempted or intended to violate the Anti-Trust Act or any provision thereof, and I humbly pray to be hence dismissed with my costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

772 The Separate Answer of the Defendant, Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited (Russian-American Line) to the Petition of the United States of America, filed herein on January 4th, 1912.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against HAMBURG-AMERIKANISCHE - PACKET - FAHRT - ACTIEN - GESELLSCHAFT, THE ALLAN LINE STEAMSHIP COMPANY, LIMITED, RUSSIAN EAST ASIATIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY, LIMITED (Russian American Line), impleaded with others, Defendants.	In Equity.

774 The separate answer of the defendant, Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, to the petition of the United States of America, filed herein.

This defendant, Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, now and at all times hereafter having and reserving unto itself all manner of benefit and advantage of exception to the many manifest errors, uncertainties and insufficiencies in said petition contained, for answer thereto, or unto so much and such parts thereof as this defendant is advised is or are material or necessary for it to make answer unto, says:

Answer of Russian East Asiatic Steamship Co., Ltd. 775

I.

As to all matters and things alleged in any of the paragraphs of said petition to have taken place on or before the 1st day of September, 1909, the day on which it is charged with becoming a party to the alleged illegal agreement, this defendant for answer thereunto says, that it has no knowledge of the matters and things alleged, and does not understand that it is alleged in said petition that this defendant was in any manner connected with, or interested in, the various transactions alleged in said petition to have taken place prior to September 1st, 1909, but if it is intended to 776 charge this defendant with knowledge thereof, or participation therein, any knowledge thereof, or participation therein is specifically denied.

II.

As to the other matters and things alleged in any of the paragraphs of the petition, this defendant, upon information and belief, denies the same, except that it admits that it is a joint stock company whose articles of association have been approved by His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, and that it is engaged in the carriage of Russian Imperial mail, passengers and freight between the ports of Libau and New York; and that Alexander E. Johnson and Max 777
Straus are its passenger agents.

The Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, further admits that on or about the 1st day of September, 1909, it entered into an arrangement with certain other steamship companies, but denies that the terms of said agreement are properly set forth in the petition, and denies specifically each and every allegation of wrongful intent or wrong doing, so far as such allegations of wrongful intent or wrong doing relate or are intended to relate to or affect this defendant.

778 Answer of Russian East Asiatic Steamship Co., Ltd.

III.

Further answering the petition, the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company alleges that it is engaged in the operation of a line of steamers between the port of New York and the port of Libau in Russia; and that it is independently operating said line without the aid or co-operation of any of the other defendants or in conjunction with them.

IV.

779 Further answering the petition, it alleges that prior to the peace between the Empire of Russia and the Empire of Japan, executed in the year 1905, at the City of Portsmouth, in the State of New Hampshire, it operated a line of steamships between ports in Russia and the Far East, more particularly the port of Vladivostock; that by reason of the changed conditions resulting from said peace it became necessary to find a new and profitable trade for the employment of its vessels then engaged in the Far Eastern trade; that the said vessels were not built especially for the Trans-Atlantic trade and the defendant had no experience in said trade; that the Russian Imperial Volun-
780 teer Fleet was also engaged in the Far Eastern trade, and that it likewise was obliged to seek a new trade for the employment of its vessels.

At the time aforementioned there never had been any regular direct communication or line of steamers maintained between the United States and the Empire of Russia; that mail, passengers and freight to be transported between the said countries were obliged to travel through other countries in order to reach their destination; that the trade between said countries was and is large; and the natural resources of the two nations enormous; that the traffic between the said countries had become accustomed to a well defined means of communication; and that it was necessary and essential for the defendant in order to institute and make said new line successful, to make low and non-remunerative rates. In addition thereto the defendant in instituting a regular line was experimenting, and naturally did not desire to invest large sums of money in new and specially fitted steamers; it, therefore, fitted its steamers for the Trans-Atlantic trade, and while said steamers were seaworthy, they were not modern, and were not in a position to compete successfully with modern steamers and with established lines unless substantial concessions were made by the defendant.

The defendant further alleges that the peasant and artisan of Europe, as denominated in the petition, are clannish, and had become accustomed to established routes of travel, and, therefore, although furnished with a more direct method of communication, did not readily change from their accustomed route.

The defendant further alleges that by reason of the aforesaid facts, in the commencement of its service it did lose money, but denies that said fact forced it into any conference or agreement.

The defendant admits that since it instituted its line it has increased its rates, but alleges that said increase was due to the fact that the Russian Imperial Volunteer Fleet discontinued its service, and by reason of the fact that it became apparent that the traffic between the United States and the Empire of Russia would support the line, and to the fact that passengers and freight became accustomed to a direct method of communication and transportation provided by the defendant.

By reason of the aforesaid facts the defendant, therefore, commenced to build and did build steamers especially fitted for the trade, which steamers, while not ocean leviathans, are equipped in every respect as efficiently as the Titanic or the Mauretania. The defendant further alleges that when traffic became accustomed to move over its line it was enabled to increase its rates, but denies that it has increased its rates in proportion to the increase in facilities and accommodations, or beyond what is essential for it to pay its expenses and a reasonable return on the capital invested.

V.

785 The defendant expressly denies that the Russian Imperial Volunteer Fleet was forced out of the trade by reason of any combination or conference, but alleges that said Russian Imperial Volunteer Fleet voluntarily withdrew from maintaining its service.

VI.

The defendant further alleges that it maintains vessels of modern build, with accommodations especially fitted and in other respects especially equipped for the maintenance of a regular line of steamers between the Empire of Russia and the United States of America,
786 and that it actively competes with all the defendants named in the petition, for passengers and freight, and that to be successful in such competition it is required continuously to increase and improve its service, and to invest large sums of money in new steamers, wharves and other equipment.

Further answering said petition, this defendant says that if there is any other matter or thing in said petition contained, material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein well and sufficiently answered, traversed or denied, that the same is not true, and it is hereby specifically denied, all of which matters and things this defendant is ready and willing to aver, maintain and prove as this Honorable Court shall direct, and humbly prays to be hence dismissed, with its reasonable costs and charges in this cause most unjustly sustained.

792 The separate answer of the defendants Alexander E. Johnson and Max Straus, copartners doing business under the firm name of A. E. Johnson & Company, to the petition of the United States of America filed herein.

These defendants, Alexander E. Johnson and Max Straus, now and at all times hereinafter saving and reserving unto themselves all manner of benefit and advantage of exception to the many manifest errors, uncertainties and insufficiencies in said petition contained, for answer thereunto, or unto so much and such parts thereof as these defendants are advised is or are material or necessary for them to make answer unto, say:

of the paragraphs of the petition, these defendants, upon information and belief, deny the same, except that they admit that the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, is a joint stock company whose articles of association have been approved by his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, and that the said Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, is engaged in the transportation and carriage of mail, passengers and freight between the ports of Libau and New York, and other ports; and that they are its passenger agents, and not its general agents in

III.

These defendants further say that they have no knowledge or information regarding the alleged agreement or participation therein of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, as alleged in said petition, and therefore deny said allegations.

Lord, Day & Lord, Esqs., by Lucius H. Beers, Esq., and Allan B. A. Bradley, Esq., for The Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, Charles P. Sumner.

Ralph J. M. Bullowa, Esq., personally, and Walter Rogers Deuel, Esq., for Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, Alexander E. Johnson, Max Strauss.

839 It is admitted upon the record by all of the defendants that each of the corporations named in the petition herein, are and were corporations as alleged in said petition.

Mr. Spooner: I should like to state that one of the defendants Emil Boas, who has filed an answer in this suit, has died since the cause was at issue.

Mr. Wise: I think that we can agree that that is the fact and will leave it in that way.

Mr. Dorr: Is there any response by The International Mercantile Marine Company to a subpoena, under date of June 4th, 1912, calling for certain letters or letterpress or other copies of letters exchanged between this corporation and its officers or agents or em-
840 ployes in Europe and its officers, agents and employes in the United States at divers times during the years 1908, 1909 and 1910, referring and relating to the formation, the terms and the execution and the maintenance of a certain written agreement entitled "AA," and divers other documents.

Mr. Beecher: We are making search of our correspondence and files and in the brief time since we have gotten the subpoena we have not been able to get the matter in such shape as to bring it. We will produce whatever we can get together; that applies to all the clients we represent.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer the subpoena as an exhibit. 841
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 1.

Mr. Dorr: As to the other subpoena, Mr. Beecher, addressed to the International Mercantile Marine Company under date of the 10th of June, I call for the production of certain agreements therein set forth.

Mr. Beecher: If you will include in your call the subpoenas upon all of the defendants we represent, which are the White Star Line, American Line, Red Star Line, International Mercantile Marine Company, International Navigation Company, British & North Atlantic Steam Navigation Company, Anchor Line and Dominion Line, I will, pursuant to such subpoenas, produce all of the agreements or what purport to be 842 copies of the agreements apparently described in the subpoenas served upon us, all that we have been able to find.

Mr. Dorr: Does that apply to the Holland Amerika and the Anchor Line?

Mr. Beecher: The Holland Amerika has not been subpoenaed to produce any, and on behalf of the Anchor Line, pursuant to the subpoena served upon that company, we produce certain of the papers which apparently correspond in regard to those described in the agreement, being all that the Anchor Line has in its possession or has been able to find.

Mr. Dorr: Have you those now?

Mr. Beecher: For the Anchor Line, International 843
Mercantile Marine Company, International Navigation Company, British-North American Steam Navigation Company, Red Star Line, Oceanic Steam Navigation Company I produce the following papers.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence copy of agreement of January 10th, 1892, between the Hamburg-American Line and Holland American Line and others produced by Mr. Beecher from the various lines represented by him.

844 Mr. Bullowa: I note an objection on the part of the defendants, Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company and Johnson and Strauss on the ground, not that it is is a copy, but on the ground that it is not binding upon these defendants, no allegation in the bill binding these defendants regarding any agreement made in 1892; the defendant Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, was not incorporated at that time.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 2.

Mr. Beecher: Mr. Dorr, in producing these papers which I have, you will understand that we have had no means of verifying the correctness of the documents, and that while we do not intend to object to their admission on the ground that they are not true copies if 845 received, the objection will not be taken on that ground, subject to any correction in the future.

Mr. Dorr: The Government has no objection on that ground as to any of the defendants.

Mr. Wise: Can we have on the record that they are produced from the files of your clients?

Mr. Beecher: They are produced from the files of our clients or the files of our agents and representatives here, but without an opportunity to confirm the correctness of the various documents produced.

Mr. Wise: It is stipulated that an objection when taken by counsel for any one of the defendants shall inure to the benefit of all unless repudiated by some one 846 or other of the defendants.

Mr. Spooner: The defendants object to the admission of this agreement of 1892, Exhibit 2, as incompetent and irrelevent and not being within the issues made by the pleadings.

Mr. Beers: In order to save time and to avoid the frequent repetition of objections can it not be understood that the defendants object to the admission of evidence in regard to all agreements other than the Agreement "AA" (which is set forth in the bill), upon the ground that such evidence is irrelevant, immaterial and incompetent and not within the issues in this suit.

Mr. Wise: That is entirely satisfactory; it is understood that such an objection is reserved to all the defendants whenever any evidence of any agreement other than the Agreement "AA" is offered by the government today or at any subsequent time in the hearing of the cause. 847

Mr. Dorr: I should like to have it appear on the record that these documents produced are produced in obedience to that subpoena, and I would like to have the subpoena in the record to show what it calls for. That this subpoena is similar to all the others issued. I think we will stand upon the subpoena in regard to the Agreement "AA", Mr. Beecher, if you have it.

Mr. Beecher produces Agreement "AA."

Mr. Dorr: We offer in evidence as Exhibit No. 3 an Agreement "AA" produced by Mr. Beecher, the agreement mentioned in the petition, dated February 5th, 1908. 848

Mr. Bullowa: The defendants Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited and Johnson and Strauss make the same objection on the same ground.

Mr. Wise: Suppose we stipulate on the record that you are saved an objection on that ground to all evidence that is offered relating to anything that transpired prior to the time when your pleading admits your client became a member of the pool.

Mr. Bullowa: That will be satisfactory to me; especially any agreements made prior to our creation. 849

Mr. Wise: All right.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence an agreement entitled "Agreement L" under date of January 1st, 1904, relating to a so-called eastbound pool and produced by the International Mercantile Marine Company, White Star Line, American Line, Dominion Line, International Navigation Company, Limited, pursuant to subpoenas of June 10, 1912. The parties to this pool being the N. D. L. V., the Trans-Atlantic and the American Line.

850 Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 4.

Mr. Spooner: I ask that these be marked subject to the same objection so far as the agreements are concerned, it is not necessary to repeat them.

Mr. Dorr: I offer "Agreement G" between the Hamburg-American Line, Holland-Amerika Line, Norddeutscher Lloyd, Red Star Line and the Trans-Atlantic under date of 1903 or the early part of 1904; it does not appear in the agreement itself; it is the latter part of 1903 and prior to March, 1904, the exact date does not appear; this paper being produced by defendants, International Mercantile Marine Company, White Star Line, American Line, Dominion Line and International Navigation Company.

851 Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 5.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence copy of the agreement of February 8th, 1909, produced in obedience to the subpoena before mentioned by the lines before mentioned, relating to the Mediterranean steerage traffic, the Italia, La Veloce Lloyd Italiano, Lloyd Sabaudo, Navigazione Generale Italiana & Sicula Americana, Anchor Line, Fabre Line, Hamburg-Amerika Line, Norddeutscher Lloyd and White Star Line.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 6.

Mr. Beecher: Special Agreement B mentioned in the subpoena we have not been able to find.

Mr. Dorr: I offer what purports to be a copy of 852 "Special Agreement B;" if there is any objection on the ground that it is not properly proved I will withdraw the offer at this time; it is a copy which has come into my possession from other lines.

Mr. Beecher: It is all subject to confirmation?

Mr. Dorr: Yes. If there is any objection to this not being proved at this time we will withdraw the offer at this time.

Mr. Beers: The files of my clients do not contain a copy of the "Special Agreement B." What date do you understand it is.

Mr. Dorr: October 1908 I think it is. 853

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 7.

Mr. Dorr: There is no special objection to that on the ground of lack of proof?

Mr. Beers: On behalf of the Cunard Line I make special objection to "Special Agreement B," Petitioner's Exhibit No. 7, on the ground that it is an agreement entirely foreign to the agreement set forth in the petition, and appears to be between parties who are not parties to this action, and relates to such matter not included in this proceeding, and is immaterial and irrelevant and incompetent, but there is no objection on the ground of its being merely a copy.

Mr. Dorr: Not that it is not sufficiently proven?

Mr. Beers: No, we make no objection as to the 854 method of proof.

Mr. Dorr: I now offer "Special Agreement A" produced by Mr. Beecher in response to the subpoenas above mentioned; this agreement purporting to be under date of September 12th, 1908.

Mr. Beers: That is the one beginning October 1st, 1898?

Mr. Dorr: Yes, I think that is obviously an error in the subpoena, because it appears to be signed on December 12, 1908, and February 6th, 1909, and to have been printed on February 18th, 1909. This contract has been made from the 1st of June, 1909, to the 30th of June, 1911. 855

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 8.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence "Agreement N," Agreement between the N. D. L. V. and the Austro-Amerikano, under date of November 13th, 1904, copy of which has been produced by Mr. Beecher pursuant to the subpoenas before mentioned. I have here what purports to be the original German copy of that agreement and I would suggest that they go in together. This appears to be a translation.

856 Mr. Burlingham: Put them together in two parts. English copy marked Petitioner's Exhibit 9A. German copy marked Petitioner's Exhibit 9B.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence "Agreement W," being an agreement for second-class business between the Allan Line, American Line, Anchor Line, Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Compagnie Generale Trans-Atlantique, Cunard Line, Dominion Line and Donaldson Line, Hamburg American Line, Holland Amerika Line, Norddeutscher Lloyd, Red Star Line and White Star Line dated February 5th, 1908, with "Appendix 1" under date of April 28th, 1908, and "Appendix 2" under date of August 7th, 1908.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 10.

857 Mr. Beers: I make the same objection.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence "Agreement V," agreement for first-class business between the Allan Line, American Line, Anchor Line, Atlantic Transport Line, Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Compagnie Generale Trans-Atlantique, Cunard Line, Dominion Line, Hamburg American Line, Holland Amerika Line, Leyland Line, Norddeutscher Lloyd, Red Star Line, White Star Line, under date of February 5th, 1908, with "Appendix 1" under date of April 28th, 1908, "Appendix 2" under date which does not appear, "Appendix 3," with an amendment to the "Appendix 1" under date of August 7th, 1908, all of 858 which are produced by Mr. Beecher under the above mentioned subpoenas.

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to on the ground that it is not within the issues made by the pleadings; it relates entirely to first-class business and is therefore incompetent and irrelevant.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 11.

Mr. Dorr: Have you produced the minutes of meetings held at Paris on the 29th of January, 1909, by the members of the N. D. L. V.?

Mr. Beecher: No, we have not. 859

Mr. Dorr: Have you produced the minutes of meetings by the representative of the various Conference Lines held on March 25th, 1908?

Mr. Beecher: No, we haven't any.

Mr. Spooner: I would like to say as far as I have been able to ascertain the clients that I represent here were not served with any subpoena duces tecum.

Mr. Dorr: That was an oversight on our part if they were not.

Mr. Spooner: I don't make any suggestions of showing error on your part, but exculpating ourselves.

Mr. Dorr: Here is a subpoena endorsed by the Marshal showing that it has been served on the Allan Line by service on L. J. Garcey, as agent of the Allan Line 860 (presenting it to Mr. Spooner, a copy of subpoena).

Mr. Spooner: That is on somebody who does not represent us at all; it is an entirely different corporation.

Mr. Dorr: You represent the Allan Line, Mr. Spooner (showing subpoena)?

Mr. Spooner: Yes. I never heard of him before.

Mr. Dorr: He is the agent, is he not?

Mr. Spooner: I never heard his name as an agent. That can be easily adjusted; all I say is we have not known of it.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence agreement of January 29th, 1909, and a translation, minutes of meeting 861 of the Conference at Paris, on January 29th, 1909, produced by Mr. Beecher under above mentioned subpoenas.

English translation marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 12A.

German copy marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 12B.

Mr. Waters appears on behalf of Funch Edye & Company and states that they have none of the papers and are not a party to the action referred to in the subpoena.

862 Mr. Beecher: The Anchor Line produces "Agreement B" and "Mediterranean Steerage Traffic Agreement" of February 8th, 1909, and "Special Agreement A", pursuant to the subpoena, those being the only papers or copies or purported to be copies that they are able to find.

Mr. Dorr: The Cunard Steamship Company has been subpoenaed to produce certain letters and letterpress copies of correspondence with regard to "Agreement AA" and other matters.

Mr. Beers: I am informed by my client, that is by the New York agent of our company in the city here, that so far as he could find he has not in his office any 863 of the papers called for in this subpoena under date of June 12th, 1912, in the same form of Petitioner's Exhibit No. 1 addressed to the Cunard Company. I understand that the correspondence relating to the rates to be charged in the company's business is intended to be called for by the subpoena, Petitioner's Exhibit 1. I ask that a more definite subpoena be issued by the Government specifying the nature of the document, and I will accept service on behalf of my client.

Mr. Dorr: Does that refer to that part of this subpoena where it says "Agreements entered into by said corporations at London, England, on or about March 25th, 1908, relating to the operation of said lines of 864 ships in competition with the ships of lines not party to said Agreement 'AA' and to operation of 'fighting,' 'opposition,' 'competitive,' or 'defending' steamers by said corporations, parties to said Agreement 'AA' from time to time in the years 1908, 1909, 1910, and the fixing and payment of compensation therefor, and to the rules made by said lines as to the employment of their agents as agents of other lines and the enforcement of such rules"?

Mr. Beers: I understand that it does.

Mr. Dorr: Do you complain the subpoena is not sufficiently definite in that regard?

Mr. Beers: I am informed by the New York agent of my client that he has not in his office any papers relating to the operations of the Cunard Line and to the operation by said lines of ships in competition with the ships of lines not party to said Agreement from time to time in the years 1908, 1909, and 1910, and the fixing and payment of compensation therefor. 865

Mr. Dorr: I think Mr. Beers that probably the best way of making the thing definite and certain would be to examine the agent as to the information that he has as to that and any alterations that may be necessary in the subpoena can be made.

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Beecher, in regard to the Anchor Line, you are having a search made for such letters as may be covered by the subpoena? 866

Mr. Beecher: The same as to all of our lines; we will make search and produce them.

Mr. Dorr: The Norddeutscher Lloyd, the Government produces subpoena and proof of service on the North German Lloyd Line calling for letters and copies of letters relating to Agreement "AA" and relating to the operation of fighting ships during the years 1908, 1909 and 1910, dated the 12th day of June, 1912, being in the same form as Exhibit No. 1.

Mr. Shipman: The agents are making search through their files for the letters called for and have not been able to complete it as yet.

Mr. Dorr: I will call the subpoenas again after reasonable opportunity has been given. 867

Mr. Spooner: As far as the defendants I represent are concerned all of these letters are mingled with general correspondence from all sections, and it is a sifting process to produce them.

Mr. Dorr: Is Mr. Strauss here?

Mr. Bullowa: I appear for him.

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Strauss was served with subpoena to produce certain agreements under date of June 10th, 1912, to produce an agreement or copy thereof between the Russian American Line and the Atlantic Confer-

868 ence, admitting the said Russian Line as a member of said Conference, dated on or about September 1st, 1908; also all other correspondence and documents for the year 1908 in any way relating to the admission of said Russian American Line to said Conference; and, also, all correspondence relating to the withdrawal of A. E. Johnson & Company of New York from lists of persons eligible as agents of Conference Lines in New York, said correspondence being dated on or about the 3rd day of September, 1908.

Mr. Bullowa: We have been making search for such correspondence but so far I do not believe we can gather any correspondence relating to these things.

869 Mr. Dorr: We will examine Mr. Strauss then this afternoon or tomorrow regarding the correspondence

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Richard of C. B. Richard & Co., agent of the Lloyd Italiano S. S. Co. and formerly agent for the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Mr. Richard: Here.

Mr Dorr: You have been asked to produce certain papers in obedience to subpoena duces tecum.

(Witness produces papers from his files and hands same to Mr. Dorr.)

Mr. Dorr: I ask that these be marked merely for identification, and I will call Mr. Richard later on as a witness. Those are the only papers which you could find (addressing Mr. Richard)?

870 Mr. Richard: Those are all I could find.

Papers produced by witness marked Petitnoner's Exhibits Nos. 13 and 14 for identification.

871

LAWSON SANDFORD, sworn on behalf of the Petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Sandford, as secretary of the various steamship conferences in New York City, have you been served with a subpoena duces tecum? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you produced any papers in obedience to that subpoena? A. I am unable to produce as I have not custody or control of any of the Conference papers.

Q. Did you at one time have the custody of any of the papers mentioned in this subpoena? A. Some, not by any means all.

Q. To whom did you turn over the custody of those papers? A. No one in particular. I resigned from the Conference a short time ago and I left the office and turned over the papers and files to no one in particular.

Q. Who is your successor, do you know that? A. I don't think my successor has been appointed.

Q. Did you leave the office that you had been occupying? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you left the papers there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In whose custody? A. I don't know; I left the office.

Q. To whom did you turn over the key of the office? A. I don't believe I ever had a key of the office myself.

873

Q. Did you leave it unlocked with these papers in it belonging to the Conference when you left? A. I should say, in answer to your question, I think I understand what you mean, that the Managing Committee of the Conferences had charge of the office here.

Q. This is the Managing Committee; who are the members of the Managing Committee? A. Mr. Walker, Mr. Toppin, Mr. Sickel and Mr. Hartfield.

874 Q. Mr. Sandford, how long have you been in the steamship business, connected with it? A. About 17 or 18 years.

Q. What was your first connection with it, in what capacity? A. In Conference work. I was appointed secretary of the Continental Conference about 1893 or 1894, and subsequently as the different conferences were formed or otherwise I was appointed secretary of them as well.

Q. Who were the members of this Continental Conference in which you were appointed secretary? A. At that time?

875 Q. At that time? A. It is rather long to remember; I should think the membership then was the North German Lloyd, Hamburg, Red Star, Holland and French Line.

Mr. Spooner: What is the name of the French Line in French? A. Compagnie Generale Trans-Atlantique.

Q. What were your duties as secretary of that Conference?

Mr. Spooner: Weren't your duties defined in writing?

The Witness: No, simply appointed secretary as I recollect it in a letter containing possibly three lines.

876 Q. Did that Conference keep minutes? A. Yes.

Q. Where are those minutes, do you know? A. They are presumably at the Conference office.

Q. That is the Continental Conference? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That Conference is still in existence? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you remained secretary of it until when? A. Until April of this year.

Q. And those minutes were among the papers that you turned over to the managing committee? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What other Conferences were you secretary of if any? A. Two other passenger conferences—

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as incompetent and immaterial and not within the issues.

Mr. Dorr: I stand on the question.

A. Two other conferences concerning passenger business; the Mediterranean Conference and the North Atlantic Passenger Conference and a Freight Conference.

Q. What was the name of the Freight Conference?

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

878

A. Trans-Atlantic Associated Freight Conferences.

Q. Did all of these conferences have their office in the same room? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the members of the North Atlantic Conference at the time of its formation and what was the date of its formation?

Mr. Spooner: That is a matter of record.

A. That is all a matter of record.

Mr. Spooner: That is set forth in the minutes.

The Witness: Yes; shall I try to recollect it?

Q. Yes, if you will? A. About 1896 the North Atlantic Passenger Conference was formed; the lines belonging to it were those in the trades between the United States and Canadian ports, the United Kingdom and Scandanavia.

Q. Did it include the lines which were in the Continental Conference? A. No, it did not.

Q. Any of them; an entirely distinct set of lines? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has that Conference continued until the present time? A. Yes.

880 Q. How about the Mediterranean Conference; who were the members of that Conference and when did that begin? A. The Mediterranean Conference, as is true with the other passenger conferences, was formed prior to my coming into the business, but I think the Mediterranean Conference was originally formed about 1887 with four or five members.

Q. When did you become secretary of it? A. Probably about 1895.

Q. And who were the members at that time? A. Anchor line—

881 Mr. Spooner: We want to make a general objection to the testimony of this witness relating to matters which occurred prior to the date of the agreement upon which this suit is based, and as incompetent and immaterial and not within the issues of the case.

A. (Witness continuing): Anchor Line, French Line, Holland Amerika Line, Red Star Line, North German Lloyd, Hamburg American Line and Navagazione Generale Italiano.

Q. Did that Conference continue continuously until the present day? A. With interruptions it has been more or less in existence ever since.

882 Q. Was there an interruption in 1907 or 1908? A. Possibly; I don't remember.

Mr. Spooner: Did it continue during the interruption?

The Witness: The office was continued, sir.

Q. Did your salary continue? A. Yes, assuredly.

Q. But there was no agreement during that time? A. The office was a great deal more than purely a routine organization for keeping minutes of meetings; we had to keep in touch with all of the various departments of the government, all of which I outlined to you on previous occasion.

Q. I show you Government Exhibit 2 and ask you whether you have seen that agreement, or a copy of it, or what purported to be a copy of it before? A. I have never had a copy of this in my possession.

Q. Have you ever seen it? A. I probably have seen it; I am quite sure I never read it through.

Q. Was the North Atlantic Conference of which you have spoken connected in any way to your knowledge with this agreement? A. Our work in America?

Q. Yes? A. Entirely distinct and separate.

Q. It had no relation whatever to the agreement? A. As far as the secretary was concerned it had no relation to the agreement whatever.

884

Q. You had no relations at all? A. Personally not.

Q. Do you know whether there was a conference of which the same parties were members in Europe?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent.

A. I don't think I am competent on that.

Q. Do you know of any such Conference? A. I know by hearsay there was a Conference in Europe, of course.

Mr. Spooner: Objected to.

Q. From whom did you hear it? A. I heard it—

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as incompetent.

Q. From whom did you derive any such information as you had in regard to this matter? A. One very good source of information was the newspaper.

Q. Was that a source from which you derived it? A. Not necessarily the only source.

Q. Did you derive it from officers and agents and employees of the various lines which were members of the Conference in New York?

886 Lawson Sandford

Mr. Beers: Objected to as hearsay.

A. I did.

Q. With what officers and employes—

Mr. Beers: There is a general objection entered to all these questions as hearsay?

Mr. Dorr: Yes, I understand so. I have not yet asked what the nature of these hearsay communications were. With whom did you have these communications as to the existence or non-existence of a conference in Europe of which the same lines were members 887 that were members of the Conference in New York of which you were secretary? A. I was secretary of the New York Conference and as such dealt only with the New York representatives—I want to change that; I was secretary of the Conference in America described and it was entirely distinct and separate from any work done in Europe. I naturally received instructions from committees or individuals in respect to the work in America, but had nothing to do whatever with the work in Europe.

Q. Yes, but I am asking you now, Mr. Sandford, whether or not you had conversations with the agents and representatives of these various lines who were 888 members of Conference in America as to the existence of a conference on the other side? A. Undoubtedly I did, but I cannot recall now any particular conversation.

Q. You do not recall the particular conversation? A. No.

Q. What were the substance of those conversations as to the existence of a conference on the other side of which the same lines were members that were members of the conference in New York of which you were secretary?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as incompetent.

Mr. Beecher: Calling for hearsay and conversations with unnamed and unknown persons.

Q. These conferences were with the representatives of these various lines in New York?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading and improper therefore.

A. I met the representatives of the lines in America very frequently. To endeavor to recall any particular instance at this late date is rather difficult for me to do.

Q. You had conversations, did you not, with them about the existence of a conference on the other side? A. I have said that I knew by hearsay that there was a conference in Europe, but I had nothing to do with it.

Q. Then I understand that—

Mr. Spooner: Do you know it at all except by hearsay?

The Witness: If I understand what hearsay means I am only speaking now about hearsay.

Mr. Spooner: You don't know it of your own knowledge?

The Witness: No, sir; I do not.

Mr. Dorr: Of course, the Government believes that it is competent for this witness to testify to communications made to him by the defendants and their agents.

Mr. Spooner: But it is not usually competent for the Government to cross-examine its own witnesses.

Mr. Door: This particular witness having been in the employ of the defendants for some seventeen years he can hardly be regarded as a friendly witness for the Government.

892 Lawson Sandford

Mr. Spooner: He has not been unfriendly. He has been frank as far as he knows.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. What was the substance of the communications that you received or information that you received, from the representatives of these various lines as to the existence in Europe of a conference of which the same lines were members that were members of the Conference in New York of which you were secretary.

Mr. Spooner: Let the witness state from 893 whom he received any information on that subject.

Mr. Beecher: Objected to wholly as hearsay and as calling for a conversation with unnamed and unknown persons whose relations to the defendants are not shown and whose knowledge of the subjects of which they are alleged to have spoken is not shown.

Mr. Spooner: I object to this on the ground that unless he can state from whom he received the information—

The Witness: Will you give me a specifice instance? How many years ago are you referring to now?

894 Q. Well, we will go back to the N. D. L. V. Conference and its members at the time you became secretary and thereafter? A. I am afraid it is too general for me to try to give anything like a specific answer.

Q. Well, give a general answer then? A. I think I have already tried to do so.

Q. Repeat it; perhaps I have not understood it? A. I wouldn't try to repeat something that is already on the record.

Q. Without further fencing, Mr. Sandford, suppose you answer the question as to what was the subject of the conversations with the representatives—will you repeat, you have already given it, what the subjects of the conversations you had with the agents or representatives of the various lines which were members of the N. D. L. V. Conference in New York were as to the existence of a conference in Europe of which the same or other lines were members. 895

Mr. Spooner: And when and with what representative, if he had any such conversation.

A. I am at a loss, Mr. Dorr; I don't want to be considered as fencing, but I certainly am at a loss how to answer you.

Q. Beginning with the year you became secretary of the N. D. L. V., when, if at all, did you learn by information from representatives of these foreign lines that there was a conference in Europe of which the same lines were members? A. I never was secretary of the N. D. L. V. 896

Q. Of the North Atlantic Conference?

Mr. Beecher: It is understood that our objection applies to all this line of testimony?

Mr. Dorr: Yes.

A. I probably heard from time to time of arrangements that were current in Europe, but it gave me no duties to perform. 897

Q. I understand that, you testified to that three times; just answer my question if you will the best you can; when did you first learn that there was an organization in Europe of which the same parties, or other parties, were members which was engaged—

Mr. Spooner: I object to that on the ground that it assumes that he did learn the fact.

Q. When did you first learn? A. What particular arrangement do you refer to?

898 Lawson Sandford

Q. I am referring now to the N. D. L. V.? A. I take it the N. D. L. V. is an abbreviation for a continental agreement made abroad many years ago, and it is utterly impossible for me to answer your question when I heard about it.

Q. Did you ever hear about it? A. Certainly.

Q. And what was it that you heard; can you fix the date generally? A. No, sir.

Q. Was it after you became secretary of the North Atlantic Conference? A. Unquestionably.

Q. How long afterwards? A. I don't know.

899 Q. Was it within a few years A. Probably, quite promptly after it was made effective.

Q. What did you hear from the representatives of the lines which you were representing as secretary in the conferences here were the duties of this conference abroad.

Mr. Beecher: We repeat our objection.

Mr. Spooner: The same objection.

A. If I am correct you are referring to something that was established abroad many years ago.

Q. Just answer the question if you will; what did you understand were the duties of this conference or what were you informed that they did in regard to 900 the business of the lines which were represented in that conference? A. If you are referring to the N. D. L. V. arrangements made in Europe many years ago I think I can answer it; is that what you want to know?

Q. I am referring to the period when you were secretary and you know what they did during the period that you were secretary which you learned from the various representatives of the various lines? A. Tell me what you mean?

Q. No? A. It is very difficult for me to give a definite answer when I have no clue to the specific point.

Q. Well, in regard to the steerage business, or in regard to the apportionment of steerage business between the various lines represented? A. By hearsay I certainly know that the N. D. L. V., which was formed many years ago in Europe, had to do with the apportionment of third-class traffic among the continental lines.

Q. What did you do as secretary of the conference on this side, what did you have to do with that apportionment, if anything? A. Nothing whatever. 902

Q. Did you make any reports of the number of steerage passengers that were carried by the various lines? A. I did.

Q. Did you keep statistics? A. Yes, I did.

Q. From what sources did you gather that information? A. It would sound rather strange at this day to make this reply, but it is a fact, when I came in the business there were none of these things whatever between the steamship companies—

Q. Just answer my question; from what source did you derive that information? A. From the steamship lines themselves.

Q. Did you receive weekly reports from those lines? 903
A. I received a report of the passenger carryings of each steamer West and Eastbound after her Eastbound departure.

Q. Did you tabulate that information? A. Weekly reports, quarterly reports, annual reports were developed by slow degrees.

Q. What did you do with these reports that you so tabulated? A. Distributed them among the steamship lines, also to the Government and largely by request to the newspapers and used as an index of the trans-Atlantic passenger movement.

904 Lawson Sandford

Q. Did you send copies to anyone abroad? A. I think the mailing list probably shows the names of 70 to 80 people.

Q. Was Dr. Peters on that mailing list? A. He probably was.

Q. Do you know what Dr. Peters' business was? A. He was secretary of the N. D. L. V. as far as I know.

Q. And secretary of the conference on the other side? A. Of the N. D. L. V.

Q. And you sent him as part of your duties, did you not, a report of the steerage passenger movement?
905 A. No, it was not part of my duties; I sent the passenger figures to a great many people; I have not been allowed to explain how I developed the passenger—

Q. It was not part of your duty to send it to Dr. Peters? A. It was not.

Q. Did you send it regularly? A. Quite so.

Q. How frequently? A. The mailing list worked automatically whenever a report of these figures issued—

Q. And whenever any report was sent to anyone he got it? A. Unquestionably, but may I explain to you how the passenger figures were established?

Q. I don't think we are interested in that; if the 906 defendants are they may bring it out.

Mr. Spooner: What is that?

The Witness: I wanted to explain how the passenger figures were developed.

Mr. Spooner: Well, never mind.

907

JOHN PETER ZURMAND, sworn on behalf of Petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Zurmand, you have been connected with the Holland-American Line for how long? A. About 20 years.

Q. Are you familiar with the correspondence which passes back and forth from the home office to the New York office? A. Only part of it.

Q. Are you familiar with the letter books of the line? A. Only part of the letter books.

Q. Are you sufficiently familiar to state whether or not these are the letter books of the New York office of the Holland-American Line? A. I presume they are, although I never wrote in them.

Mr. Dorr: I ask that these be marked for identification, each one having a separate number.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibits Nos. 15, 16, 17 and 18 for identification.

Q. I show you what purport to be originals of certain letters from the home office of the Holland-American Line to the New York office and ask you whether you can identify those as letters which were—

909

A. They look very much like originals.

Q. Examine these if you will? A. The same thing.

Q. These appear to you to be originals letters received by the Holland-American Line in New York from the home office? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: Will you consider those marked for identification?

Mr Burlingham: Yes.

Recess taken until 2 o'clock P. M.

Afternoon session.

910 Lawson Sandford

LAWSON SANDFORD, recalled.

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. In calling your attention again to Exhibit 2, the Agreement of 1892, page 6, Article 3, which begins on page 5 and continues on page 6, and the commentary, will you state what the British Lines are that are mentioned there; what British Lines were concerned in that contract?

Mr. Beers: It is understood that our objection applies to all this testimony.

911 Mr. Dorr: Yes.

A. I don't know.

Q. Have you any information about the matter at all? A. No; I see it is dated in 1892.

Q. You were secretary of a conference which was composed of the lines that I mentioned in that Agreement? A. I had nothing to do with this Agreement at all.

Q. Yes, but were you secretary of a conference which was composed of the lines that are mentioned in that Agreement? A. I was secretary of a conference in America of Continental Lines of whom I see a number mentioned here.

912 Q. That is, they appear to be the same lines that were in the Continental Conference? A. Probably.

Q. Do you know or do you have any information as to whether or not a certain portion of the steerage business was being allotted to the British Lines, did you ever hear any conversation about that or have any conversation with any representative of the lines about it, Mr. Sandford? A. Perhaps so, but I do not remember.

Q. To be specific, do you remember whether you received information from any representatives of the White Star Line? A. I don't remember.

Q. The Cunard? A. I don't know.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer in evidence letter of June 21st, 1904 to the Holland-Amerika Line, New York, from the Holland-Amerika Line.

Mr. Beers: We object to this as immaterial and irrelevant, relating to a period and to transactions not within the issues or referred to in the pleadings.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 19.

Mr. Dorr: This is a letter produced from the letters that were identified this morning.

Q. Do you read Dutch, Mr. Sandford? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether or not in 1904 rules had been adopted by the North Atlantic Conference and the Continental Conference in regard to forbidding agents who were acting for the conference lines from doing business for any other line? A. I was not in the conference employment in 1904, 1905 and 1906.

Q. Just answer my question if you will. (Question read).

Mr. Burlingham: Do you mean adopted in that year?

Mr. Dorr: No.

Q. That had theretofore been adopted? A. Prior to that time, yes; many years prior.

915

Q. And they had been continued in force during the time you were secretary? A. Yes.

Q. And temporarily in 1904 and 1905 you were— A. I was away from the company.

Q. What was your employment at that time? A. I was in the Cunard Company's service.

Q. Do you recall whether or not at that time Cunard Company was a member of the Conference?

Mr. Beers: Objection renewed.

916 A. Yes, the Cunard Company was a member of the Conference all through the period I was with the Cunard Company.

Q. I ask you to read this letter, or I will read a portion of it, and see if it refreshes your recollection: "With regard to the cable correspondence which took place between you and us last week, with the result that Hapag (Hamburg-American Line) has reduced its eastbound steerage rate until further notice to $20, and that we have reduced the same rate for the sailing of S. S. Rotterdam June 21st to also $20 we are quite anxious to know what the effect of these reduc-917 tions will be. With regard to the part of your cable of the 18th instance saying: 'Enforcement Conference Rules forbidding agents booking Cunard Line all services, we beg to observe that considering such action at this moment not free from danger to our own interests we have abstained from following your suggestion. We strongly fear that by enforcing Conference Rules we would drive Cunard to freely use Anti-Trust Legislation against us in whatever way this would be possible and with Mr. Sandford as a Cunard employee we may be certain that if any evidence against us could be presented, it certainly would be expert evidence.'" Does that refresh your recollection as to whether or 918 not the Cunard was a member of the Conference? A. The Cunard was a member of the conference in New York, The North Atlantic Passenger Conference, during the years I was in the Cunard service.

Q. What is your information as to whether or not they were sharing with the other lines the pro rata of the steerage business during that time? A. No, they were not a party to the pool.

Q. They were not a party to the pool during that time and their participation then in the Conference was merely in matters of general interest other than matters connected with that pool? A. The Conference in America never handled pool matters at all.

Q. Never had anything to do with pool matters; never took any steps to carry out pool arrangements? A. As far as our conference work was concerned not.

Q. You are quite positive of that Mr. Sandford? A. I am quite positive of it.

Q. This Conference had certain rules as to forbidding agents who were acting for conference lines from acting for any other line, non-conference lines? A. Yes.

Q. And it had penalties too, didn't it; there were 920 rules providing for penalties? A. Yes.

Q. Were those rules enforced by the Conference? A. What conference do you mean?

Q. Well, by all the conferences which you had to do with? A. Yes.

Q. Were the rules substantially the same as to all the conferences which you have mentioned this morning? A. Yes.

Q. And the same policy was followed by the various conferences? A. Yes.

Q. In imposing penalties and enforcing those penalties as against the agents who disobeyed those conference rules? A. Yes.

Q. Well, now, what was the application of the Con- 921 ference Rule then to the Cunard business at that time? A. I don't know; I have only heard a very brief extract from the letter.

Q. Take it and look at it? A. The Holland-Amerika Line is and then was a member of the Continental Conference and the Cunard Company a member of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference, separate associations of the steamship lines, but having one common headquarter.

Q. Well, under the rules of the Continental Conference then if the agent who represented any of the members of the Continental Conference sold tickets for the Cunard, which was not a member of that Continental Conference, they would be subject to the penalties provided by the rules of the Continental Conference? A. If you will read the rule in the circular.

Q. That is what I am asking you? A. May I read the rule?

Q. Isn't that your understanding of the rule? A. No, that is not my understanding.

Q. What is the rule as you understand it? A. My understanding is that any reputable line owning its 923 own ships has never had any difficulty with joining one conference or another in America.

Q. I am asking you about your understanding of the rules; never mind about your understanding of what difficulties the independent lines have or have not been having, that is not my question; I am asking you whether there was a rule in the Continental Conference which forbade the agents who were acting for the lines in that conference from acting as agents for the lines which were not in that conference? A. There is a rule—

Q. Was there such a rule prior to 1904? A. I would like to read the rule.

Q. Have you got it? Is that it? (Handing wit-924 ness paper.) A. Yes.

(Witness is shown paper under date of May 1st, 1906 produced by the Government.)

The Witness: The Conference Rules—

Q. Are you speaking of the Continental Conference? A. It is a rule common to all of the Passenger Conferences.

Q. That is there is a rule in each Passenger Conference and the substance of that rule is the same? A. Yes.

Q. How does that rule read? A. Agents are prohibited from booking passengers for any steamer except those for the lines members of the Continental, the Mediterranean and the North Atlantic Passenger Conferences unless the Conference gives express permission in writing. Agents are prohibited from selling passenger tickets under false representations as to line or the route by which the passenger is to be transported.

Q. Was that the form of that rule in 1904? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. You are positive about that? A. I think so.

926

Q. And you are positive that the Cunard was a member of the North Atlantic Conference? A. Yes.

Q. Then how could this rule be enforced against the Cunard? A. I don't know that it was.

Q. How could it be if the pool was as you say? A. I don't know; you had better ask the Holland Line, who wrote the letter, I don't know.

Q. Do you know whether as a matter of fact that rule was enforced against the Cunard? A. I don't think it was.

Q. It was never attempted to enforce it? A. I don't know.

Q. That is your information? A. I had no information.

Q. Is that also a notice to agents? A. Yes.

Q. Of the Continental Conference? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I offer a circular containing rules of the North Atlantic Conference in evidence, dated 1906.

Mr. Beers. We make objection to the proposed Exhibit 20 on the ground that it is immaterial and irrelevant and not within the issues.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 20.

The Witness: The rule was adopted back in eighteen—

Mr. Dorr: I now offer one of the Continental Conference of June 1st, 1903.

Q. What is this typewriting on the side of this Exhibit 20; did you place that on there? A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it on the circular as issued? A. No.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer this exhibit, then, without the typewriting on the side.

929 Q. Were circulars of this kind issued and distributed by the North Atlantic Passenger Conference? A. Distributed by the members of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference to their agents.

Q. That is the agents who were acting for the Conference lines? A. Acting for them.

Q. They were conference lines, were they not? A. I don't think I grasp that. Each line issued its circulars—

Q. Did you distribute the circulars to any agents who were not acting for the conference lines? A. I never distributed the circulars, the steamship companies individually distributed the circulars to their agents.

930 Q. Did they distribute circulars to agents who were not agents of conference lines? A. I don't suppose so.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence circular No. 12, Third Series, Continental Conference, under date New York, June 1st, 1903.

Mr. Beers: I make the same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 21.

Q. Circulars in the form of Exhibit 21 were circulated in the same way as the others, Exhibit 20? A. Yes.

931

Q. I show you circular No. 15, Third Series, under date of August 15th, 1905, of the Continental Conference? A. Simply another edition of the earlier circular; simply another edition of the same general circular.

Q. And circulated in the same way? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence Continental Conference circular of August 15th, 1905.

Mr. Beers: I make the same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 22.

Q. After 1906, I think that is the last Exhibit which has been offered in evidence, did you from time to time, or did the conferences which you represented, from time to time issue notices to agents in form and substance substantially the same as Exhibits 20, 21 and 22? A. If an edition of a circular was exhausted and lines required more copies a new one was made bearing the date when it was issued; probably later editions were made; I don't remember.

Q. There have been circulars since 1906, have there not? A. Yes, but they would have the same form.

Q. Down to what time—are they still issued, do you know? A. Yes.

Q. The same form? A. Yes.

Q. Have you got any other later copies? A. No.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular or agreement of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference of 1896 and ask you whether you have seen that before? A. Yes.

Q. Did you get that up or assist in getting it up, preparing it? A. It was gotten up by the lines who subscribed to it.

Q. Did you have anything to do with its preparation? A. Simply as secretary.

Q. And as secretary was it prepared under your direction? A. I prepared it probably from notes that the lines wished taken.

Q. Was that issued? A. That was simply a set of minutes of the meeting containing a proposed set of rules.

Q. Were those rules put in force by the lines concerned? A. Yes, or amended rules later.

Mr. Door: I will offer this in evidence.

Mr. Spooner: We object to so much of this paper marked 23 for identification, but not yet introduced, as refers to business other than steerage business, upon t[illegible] ground that it is not within the issues made by the pleadings, and is 935 therefore not only irrelevant but incompetent, and we object to the paper as a whole because it is not within the issues and therefore irrelevant.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 23.

Q. What is the American Atlantic Conference, Mr. Sandford? A. The American Atlantic Conference is simply a convenient name—

Mr. Spooner: We object to the question as irrelevant and not within the issues and incompetent.

A. (Witness continues.) The American Atlantic Conference is simply a name used conveniently to settle 936 matters arising in America of common interest to the Continental group, and the North Atlantic Passenger Conference group, largely an association on railroad forwarding matters and to conduct through committees the work with the various departments of the Government.

Q. Did it hold separate meetings from the Continental Conference and the North Atlantic Conference? A. No, as a matter of fact, the roads found it convenient to get together.

Q. When did the Association of the Atlantic Conference begin? A. The American Atlantic Conference was started as joint proceedings.

Q. When was that? A. In June, 1908.

Q. Did that result from the adoption of the agreement which has been known as Agreement "AA," agreement of February 5th, 1908? A. I made the suggestion to the lines that they should do this; it was quite my own suggestion, because of our relationship with the railways where it requires so much detail work, it was thought to have a meeting of the Continental Lines to handle some matter which also interested the British Lines, was simply a waste of time, and if one meeting attended by all could be held the business was expedited.

Q. You knew at that time, did you not, that there had been a general pool agreement which took in members of the Continental Conference and the members of the North Atlantic Conference?

Mr. Spooner: Object to the question as incompetent and irrelevant.

A. I had heard that there had been an arrangement in Europe during that year, but I am not at all certain that the lines interested in our work here were the same as the lines interested in the work in Europe.

Q. Have you ever looked at the pool Agreement "AA"? A. I have never had a copy of "AA."

Q. Have you ever seen it? A. I have seen it, but I think I have never read it through. 939

Q. Have you ever observed who the parties to it were? A. No, I have not particularly done so.

Q. Will you look through it and see if there are any parties to that agreement which were not members of the two conferences that you speak of? A. This contract "AA" has a less number of lines than our work in America.

Q. Just confine your answer, if you will, to my question? A. For instance, the conference work in America is participated in by—

Q. Just confine yourself to the question (question read)? A. They were all members.

Q. Were there any members of the Continental Conference in 1908, which were not members of this agreement, and if so, what were their names? A. No.

Q. Were there any members of the North Atlantic Conference in 1908, which were not parties to this agreement, and if so, what were they? A. Wait a minute, I am wrong; yes, the Austro-Americano is a member of the Continental Conference; I don't see its name here.

941 Q. You knew there was an agreement with the Austro-Americano, did you not, along these same lines?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as irrelevant and incompetent.

A. I don't think so.

Q. You never heard that at all? A. I have heard it was made later.

Q. Were there any members of the North Atlantic Conference who were not members of this agreement or parties to this agreement?

A. "AA"?

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

942 Q. Yes, in 1908? A. The records will show; I think there were.

Q. What were they? A. I don't remember, but I think so.

Q. You cannot recall any lines which were members of the North Atlantic Conference which were not members of this agreement? A. I think some of the Canadian lines were not members; I think some of the Canadian lines were then members of the Continental Conference or North Atlantic Conference here, whose names are not found in that book.

Q. You knew those Canadian lines were parties to a special agreement covering Canadian traffic, did you not? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Never heard of it? A. I did; I have heard of it, but it was not coincident with this agreement.

Q. Prior to this agreement "AA," Exhibit 3, did you know of any agreement between the members of the Continental Conference and the members of the North Atlantic Conference in regard to the division of steerage business? A. Here?

Mr. Spooner: I make an objection.

944 Q. Anywhere? A. I am not sure that there were; I don't believe there were.

Q. Then, so far as your information went this is the first? A. This is hearsay pure and simple.

Q. And so far as your knowledge and information goes of this agreement "AA," that was the first agreement in which there was a provision for division of steerage business between the members of the Continental Conference and the members of the North Atlantic Conference? A. The members of the North Atlantic Conference, if you mean the lines in America, and the members of the Continental Conference, if you mean the lines in America, have never had any arrangement in regard to pooling traffic.

945 Q. I don't understand, Mr. Sandford, that the Cunard Company or the White Star Company have different corporate existences in America from what they have in Europe, do you? A. I do not either.

Q. What do you mean then by the lines in America not having any agreement, but that the lines in Europe may have an agreement? A. The agreements in respect to business done in America have been concerning the division of the traffic.

Q. This particular agreement "AA" concerns both the east and westbound traffic in steerage passengers from America to the Continent and points in the British Isles, does it not?

Mr. Spooner: I object to this as incompetent. The agreement is in writing; it is the best evidence.

A. The agreement was not made in America and it is confusing to me to have to answer a question which refers to a conference which is of American formation and management; it is something which was done in Europe and has nothing whatever to do with the American Conference—

947 Q. Go back to the original question?

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question on the ground that the best evidence of what the agreement effects is the agreement itself, and that it is incompetent to rely upon this witness for a construction of it.

Q. Do you know of any other agreement prior to the agreement "AA" in which the lines which were members of the Continental Conference and the North Atlantic Conference shared pro rata the steerage business in which they were engaged? A. As far as I know the membership in the Conference maintained in 948 America was not always the same as the membership in the various arrangements that exist in Europe; I am therefore not able to answer your question categorically.

Q. Answer it the best you can; do you know of any earlier agreement than this? A. You have shown me an arrangement made back in 1892, which seems to be an answer to your question.

Q. Then your answer is that from 1892 down, there has been such an arrangement? A. I don't know.

Q. Then this is the earliest agreement of which you have any knowledge? A. You showed me an agreement made here in 1892, which concerns both—

Q. Excluding any information which you may have derived from the court room, or from the exhibits which have been offered in evidence, have you any information as to any earlier agreement? A. I have no definite information from which I would testify.

Q. At the time that agreement "AA" was formed, do you recall whether or not the fact of the formation of that agreement was communicated to you? A. I heard of it, certainly.

Q. Do you recall whether or not there was any discussion as to the action which should be taken under it at the meeting of the Continental or the North Atlantic Conference, or the American Atlantic Conference?

Mr. Spooner: Except enquiry by him.

A. The matter may have been referred to, but I am not sure at all anything done in Europe required any joint action in America.

Q. That is not the question; the question is whether there was any discussion at that time? A. There may have been informal resolutions; that you can see in the record.

Mr. Spooner: I want to submit to you that you ought to make those questions sufficiently definite to afford some opportunity, if the interests of the defendants require it, to contradict it; I submit that as a matter of fair play.

Mr. Derr: I am simply laying a foundation; I will be specific enough in a minute. I offer in evidence a letter of date of February 7th, 1908, in the letter press copy book of the Holland-Amerika Line.

Mr. Spooner: I object to that as incompetent on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. Bullowa: Of course, my general objection carries to this letter.

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Burlingham, so as not to deface your book suppose we have it simply referred to as of the date, without marking the particular page?

Mr. Burlingham: That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. Beers: Note the general objection that it is immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent.

Letter marked Petitioner's Exhibit 24 and read.

953 Q. E. B. and W. B. means eastbound and westbound? A. Probably.

Q. Did you make any memorandum? A. If I did it was in the record; I don't remember it.

Q. What did you do with the record, if you did make it; did you preserve it? A. Copies were distributed for the lines.

Q. Did you preserve a copy of it yourself? A. Unquestionably.

Q. And in what form did you preserve it? A. From the regular record.

Q. Did you keep a special minute book? A. On the files, yes.

954 Q. Can you recall whether that meeting was a meeting of the American Atlantic or the North Atlantic or the Continental? A. I told you that the American Atlantic Conference was not formed until June, 1908.

Q. So that it may have been a joint meeting of the two? A. I don't remember; I will have to look it up if I can.

Q. Did you keep the minutes of general meetings distinct from each other? A. Each one was kept by itself intact.

Q. I show you certain papers which purport to be minutes of the American Atlantic Conference, and of the Continental Conference, and ask whether these papers are in fact minutes of the American Atlantic Conference and of the Continental Conference as kept by you? A. They are.

Q. Have you got the minutes of that particular meeting? A. I have no minutes whatever any more; I am no longer connected with the conference.

Q. Are the minutes of the meetings that is referred to in the last exhibit introduced by the Government among the minutes which I now show you? A. I don't know without looking at it.

Q .Look at it and ascertain. Do you recall whether or not you turned these particular minutes over to the counsel for the Government? A. I don't know. 956

Q. Do you recall turning over certain minutes? A. I turned over whatever was asked for.

Q. Did you turn over these papers? A. That is over two years ago; it is hard to remember.

Q. Did you turn over these papers? A. I think so; they seem to be a set I made up.

Q. Did you at that time turn over any minutes of the North Atlantic Conference? A. I don't remember. Mr. Pitkin came down to the conference office and was given access to everything he wanted.

Q. Do you recall whether you left any minutes of the North Atlantic Conference in that office when you left? A. I do not know. 957

Mr. Dorr: I will offer these for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 25 for identification.

Q. Are these the minutes of the Mediterranean Conference (handing witness paper)? A. They are minutes of the Mediterranean Conference.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer these for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 26 for identification.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence letter dated May 28th, 1908, addressed to the Holland-Amerika Line, Rotterdam, from the Holland-Amerika Line in New York.

Mr. Beers: Same objection. It is immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 27.

Mr. Dorr: I offer this in the first place as an admission by the Holland-Amerika Line to the 959 facts stated; I also shall urge that it is admissible as proof of the facts stated therein if it per se is established by other proof and the Holland-Amerika is shown to be one of the conspirators; in that event I take it that it is a declaration made in the course of conspiracy and is, therefore, admissible as proof of the facts stated against the other party.

Mr. Burlingham: I call your attention to the fact that in this Exhibit 25 you not only have minutes of the American Atlantic Conference. but you have some minutes tacked on of committees; do you want those in too?

Mr. Door: I will ask the witness if he can 960 identify them.

Q. I show you what purports to be the minutes of a standing complaint committee of the Continental Conference? A. Yes.

Q. And I ask whether these were minutes produced by you? A. They were.

Q. What is the standing complaint committee of the Continental Conference or what was it in 1908 and thereafter? A. A meeting of the passenger managers was held occasionally to act upon complaints against agents and to dispose of them.

Q. And these were the minutes of those meetings? A. These were the minutes of those meetings.

Mr. Dorr: I ask that those be considered part of Exhibit 25 for identification.

Q. Mr. Sandford, do you recall anything about the appointment of a so-called small committee by either the Atlantic Conference or the Continental Conference or the North Atlantic Conference on or about May 28th, 1908? A. Yes.

Q. Were you present at a meeting at which such a committee was appointed? A. I am not sure I was present; I had nothing to do with the work. 962

Q. Do you recall at which of these conferences such committee was appointed? A. Not at any conference held in New York.

Q. Are you sure of that? A. I am fairly sure of it.

Q. Let us see if this will refresh your recollection (showing witness letter book)?

Mr. Beers: I object because the book shown is not yet in evidence.

A. That is very plain.

Q. Does that refresh your recollection? A. No, it does not refresh it particularly. 963

Q. Does it make you question the accuracy of it? A. I don't question the accuracy of it.

Q. Do you think that the statement in this letter "Immediately upon receipt of the second cable, a meeting was held by the general managers and passenger agents of the different lines, and the last cable was taken up first. As this cable is very explicit, only little discussion took place, the main point being to appoint a small committee for the selection of the competitive steamers. This committee consists for the present of three members; Mr. Winter of the North

964 Lawson Sandford

German Lloyd, Mr. Farley of the I. M. M. Co. and our Mr. Nyland; the passenger managers and will serve in rotation."

Mr. Spooner: You don't know which of these conferences that refers to?

Q. Do you know? A. I can't tell you.

Q. Seems to have been one of them? A. I don't think it was a conference meeting, judging from the text.

Q. "Immediately upon receipt of the second cable a 965 meeting was held by the general manager and passenger agents of the different lines and the last cable was taken up first."—

Mr. Spooner: Doesn't the cable say, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. Dorr: It does not say which conference.

Q. "Immediately upon receipt of the cable a meeting was held by the general managers and passenger agents. As this cable is very explicit, only little discussion took place"—do you say that that was not a transaction of a conference? A. I am not sure that it was.

Q. Well, let us go on, "Subsequently, the first cable 966 was taken up and the apparently interminable question of Zotti's disqualification laid before the lines" &c.; does that refresh your recollection at all? A. No.

Q. Look at your last cable, "Atlantic conference lines are unanimously agreed that under present conditions it is highly essential that the conference regulations should be strictly enforced against agents and request New York Conference to act accordingly, and in case of doubt refer same to arbitration." Now, here is a cable asking that the New York Conference take certain action, action that was then within the scope of the powers of that conference, was it not?

A. No, my hearsay knowledge is that was action taken abroad which the American representatives carried out.

Q. Do you mean to say the New York Conference —it was not part of their duty to enforce against the agents conference regulations?

Mr. Spooner: I object to this as cross-examination by the government of its own witness.

A. Their own conference regulations, yes.

Q. What regulations do you take it they referred to? A. I take it from the text that that is a bona fide letter, that they are sending out a small committee to meet competition. 968

Q. What has that got to do with disqualification of Zotti? A. That was a sore point with lines for a long time because he was thought by some to be a demoralizer—

Q. Wasn't that a matter of discussion amongst your New York conference A. A great many times.

Q. And by this letter it would appear that after this cable had been received asking that the New York Conference should strictly enforce the conference regulation this matter of Zotti's disqualification was taken up; now, it would appear that that was a transaction at the New York Conference would it not? A. I will look at the record if I may have access to the conference records and see what they are on the subject; that is over four years ago. 969

Q. Looking at it you would interpret it that way would you not, that this was a matter that had been discussed among the New York Conference? A. It has been, yes.

Q. And it was on that occasion? A. But it does not show what the meeting—who were represented or what group of lines it was a meeting of.

Q. After having read that letter are you still prepared to say that you think the appointment of a small committee for the selection of competitive steamers was not taken up in the New York Conference? A. It was certainly taken up in New York and as I understand from hearsay it was to carry out action taken abroad.

Q. Was it taken up in conference or in a conference which you were secretary of if you cannot recall which one? A. It does not say where it was taken up; it doesn't say where the meeting was held.

971 Q. You are prepared to say then it was not a question of selecting a small committee to select fighting ships and was not taken up at any meeting of the conference of which you were secretary?

Mr. Spooner: I object to it on the ground that counsel is cross-examining his own witness.

Q. What is your answer: Are you then prepared to say now, after having read this letter, that the question of the appointment of a small committee to select fighting or competitive steamers was not taken up at one of the conferences which you have mentioned and of which you were secretary in New York on or about 972 May 28th, 1908? A. The mere fact that a meeting has been held does not necessarily say that it came within my cognizance, and I have replied that if a meeting did take place four years ago, and I am asked to try to remember offhand what happened four years ago, which is hard for me to do, I believe that the action referred to in that letter which I now see was to carry out something that had been prescribed abroad and was not the action of the conference of which at that time I happened to be secretary.

Q. Do you say then, get it definite Mr. Sandford, I understood you previously to testify that if there was the appointment of a committee to select fighting ships on or about May 28th, 1908, it was not at a meeting of the New York Conference of which you were secretary; did I correctly understand your testimony; is that your testimony? A. I think I testified that a great many things might be done by the steamship representatives in America which would not be under my knowledge or control in any way whatsoever.

Q. Do you now say that the New York conference did not appoint a small committee to choose fighting ships on or about May 28th, 1908? A. I would say that I imagine—

974

Mr. Spooner: Not what you imagine what you know.

The Witness: All this is hearsay. I am asked about it—I am asked to go into a lot of things.

Q. Do you say you were not present at such a conference? A. I don't say I was not present.

Q. That is what I am trying to get out Mr. Sandford? A. That is was necessary of a conference of which I was secretary.

Q. Was there the appointment—was a small committee appointed at a meeting of the conference at which you were present to select fighting ships? A. I may have been in the room, yes, but I may not have been in attendance at the meeting.

975

Q. Is that a matter which in the ordinary course of business you would have recorded in your minutes? A. I don't think so.

Q. It would not be? A. I don't think so.

Q. Did you learn either at that time or subsequently from one of the agents of the defendant lines that a small committee had been appointed to select fighting ships? A. Yes, I knew a small committee existed.

Q. From whom did you learn that? A. I don't remember who told me or how it came about.

976 Lawson Sandford

Q. Do you recall who the members of that committee were? A. I have just had them read to me.

Q. Were they the members? A. I imagine so.

Q. To you recollection? A. I don't recollect, but I imagine so.

Q. Mr. Nyland, was he a member? A. I don't know, except that I read in this book the names.

Q. You have no recollection about that, independent of what is in the book, as to who were members of that small committee? A. I know that they are passenger men and had probably served on such a 977 committee.

Q. Have you any recollection, independent of what is in this book, as to who were the members of this small committee? A. I think they probably were the members of the committee.

Q. Have you any recollection? A. It is coming to me better now that I have some data to remember things; that happened over four years ago.

Q. What is your recollection now. A. I would not care to testify under oath that they were or were not.

Q. Have you recollection, faint or otherwise? A. They probably were; I would rely entirely on the record, not my mind for those things.

Q. Do you recall that certain ships were design-
978 nated as fighting or competitive ships by these small committees, from time to time after May 28th, 1908? A. I know that they were by hearsay, because I had nothing to do with the small—

Q. Did you say that they had not? A. I had nothing to do with this small committee work.

Q. From whom did you hear that the fighting ships had from time to time been appointed? A. A steamship line notified the conference for mutual information whenever a rate was changed, and in that way I knew when special rates were made to meet competition.

Q. And the name of the steamer which had been selected? A. The name of the steamer and the rate.

Q. You would never receive any direct communication from the members of that committee that a certain ship had been selected? A. If I did I stopped it because I did not care to have anything to do with it; I had too many things and it was routine.

Q. That is, you did not permit them to tell you the name of the ship they had selected? A. It was not a part of my conference work.

Q. Did the small committee make any reports to the conference in general as to the selection which it was making? A. No, but I think they informed the lines interested.

Q. Was there any discussion in the conference itself as to the selections which the small committee made from time to time? A. There was discussion among the lines from time to time whether a certain ship would be efficient to meet competition of passenger steamers.

Q. That is as to whether it would be a suitable ship to select as a fighting ship? A. Whether it happened to be sailing at a time which was suitable.

Q. Did you make any record in your conference minutes as to those discussions? A. No, there was no record on the conference about the matter as I recall.

Q. Did you keep any records of the ships which were in fact selected, the dates of their sailings and the rates which were charged? A. Yes, in the regular record containing the changes in rates of all of the lines.

Q. Where is that record, is that in permanent form? A. I think that the regular file is maintained and has been for many years.

Q. And that file was kept by you as secretary of the conference? A. It was kept in the conference office.

982 Lawson Sandford

Q. And that file, I suppose, was turned over by you to the conference? A. Yes.

LAWSON SANDFORD, recalled:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. I was asking you yesterday about the designation of the so-called small committee by the American Atlantic Conference in New York; what is your recollection on that point this morning? Do you recall whether or not a small committee—a so-called small committee—was designated by the American Atlantic Conference in New York in about May, 1908, or subsequent or prior thereto? A. My recollection is the same as yesterday, that the so-called small committee was designated by action taken abroad and not by action taken in America. 986

Q. According to your recollection then the statments contained in the letter of May 28th, 1908, which was shown to you yesterday, Exhibit 27, are not accurate as to the appointment of a small committee at a hearing in New York? A. My belief is, as I said yesterday, that that was action of the representatives in America of the parties to the arrangement in Europe, not conference action by the Americans. 987

Q. And that that selection was made at a meeting of the conference? A. I am quite sure it was not made at a meeting of the conference.

Q. Are you quite sure that the members of the conference were not present at the time that selection was made? A. I am trying to recall whether the meeting was held in the conference rooms, but I am not clear on the subject.

Q. Can you suggest any other place where it might have been held? A. No.

Q. The only place you can think of where such a meeting would be held would be in the conference room, is that right? A. Not at all necessary; they may meet, interested groups of lines, on various subjects elsewhere.

Q. Do you take it from reading this letter that there were two meetings held, one in which the selection of the small committee was made and another in which the question of the qualification or disqualification of Mr. Zotti was taken up?

Mr. Spooner: I object as cross-examination of his own witness, and incompetent as calling upon the witness to construe a letter and to give his opinion as to what it means.

A. It would appear from the text of the letter that both subjects must have been discussed at the same occasion.

Q. And the question of the disqualification of Zotti to act as an agent would be a matter within the purview of the American Atlantic Conference, would it not? A. Yes, I think the question of the disqualification of Zotti originated considerably prior to that time 990 and from the context of the letter it may have been incidentally referred to.

Q. Do you recall at this meeting as it appears from this letter, it took up two matters arising from two cables each purporting to have been received from Mr. Peters in London, the first cable relating to the enforcement of the conference regulations against agents and containing a request that the New York Conference act accordingly; do you recall that this letter indicates that that cable was taken up and action taken thereon?

Mr. Spooner: Was that the letter from the Holland American Conference to members here?

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Gips—

Mr. Burlingham: Mr. Dorr, have you shown that he attended any such meeting?

Mr. Dorr: He couldn't say whether he had or had not yesterday; he said it was something which he could not swear to positively one way or the other. I think he said his recollection was coming back to him—

The Witness: I didn't say my recollection was coming back; it was only— 992

Mr. Burlingham: Do you understand what the question is?

The Witness: His question now appears to be—

Q. Just answer the question (question read)?

Mr. Spooner: I make the same objection.

A. I am sorry, but I cannot recall; I will have to refer to the letter.

Q. Where is the letter? If you will, read the whole letter through, Mr. Sandford, if it is necessary? A. The letter reminds me of this, that the lines considered among themselves—whether they did it in the conference rooms I am not prepared to swear one way or the other—measures to enable themselves to maintain the discipline of their agents against outside competition. 993

Q. Just answer this question; does the reading of this letter now recall to your mind that the agents of the various lines who were members of the conference discussed in the conference rooms or elsewhere, the two cables which are referred to in that letter, or the subject-matter of them? A. I am sorry, but I cannot give very good testimony on it.

994 Lawson Sandford

Q. You have no recollection as to whether any such discussion was held or not? A. The letter is certainly very sound in its statements, and I am quite prepared to refresh my memory from it and presume that that was one of the incidents of the period, but it is over four years ago.

Q. So far as your recollection goes then, so far as you have any, it is in accord with the statements in that letter? A. In a general way, yes.

Q. And you will notice that the cable which was first referred to in that letter received from Mr. Peters, 995 whom I think you testified yesterday was secretary of the steerage pool abroad, requests the New York Con-the steerage pool abroad, requests the New York Conference to take action? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any other New York Conference to which that could refer other than the American Atlantic Conference of which you were secretary, or at the meeting of the Continental Conference and the North Atlantic Conference? A. The New York Conference would probably be a convenient designation of the cable. The North Atlantic or the Continental Passenger Conferences had in membership all of the passenger lines and all of the ports, not necessarily New York alone, therefore it could not have been a 996 conference meeting to be held in New York unless all of the members of the conferences were present.

Q. Just answer my question. Do you know of any other place to which that designation "New York Conference" could refer other than the American Atlantic Conference of which you were secretary, or joint meeting of the Continental Conference and the North Atlantic Conference, of which you have stated you were also secretary, and which you have also stated was composed of the same lines as composed the American Atlantic Conference? A. I construed the cable to mean—

Q. Just answer that question? A. My construction of the cable—

Q. Now, you answer that question yes or no? A. I cannot answer yes or no—

Q. What is there in it that you cannot answer yes or no? A. It is rather involved for me to answer yes or no; I would have to make an explanation.

Q. What is there in the question which is inaccurate or misstates what you have testified to.

Mr. Spooner: He says he cannot answer the question categorically, and he is not obliged to do it. 998

Q. I am asking you what there was in it that was incorrect? A. I feel, Mr. Dorr, my answer must be that I construed the cable to mean—

Mr. Spooner: You mean to construe the cable? I object to your construing the cable; you have not been asked about that.

Q. What is there in that language that prevents your answering it yes or no? A. It is simply the technical way in which the business was to be done constantly by the various lines.

Q. Do you know of any other conference which might be understood, might be meant by that New York Conference, other than the conferences employed here? A. Yes, it would mean in my judgment a meeting of the representatives in America of the parties to the arrangement referred to in Europe. 999

Q. Did such meetings go under the name of the New York Conference? A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear them describe it in that way? A. No; as a matter of fact there is no New York Conference.

Q. Then whatever it might be though it might have meant some other conference or some other meeting, 1000 it would ordinarily mean to your mind a meeting of the Atlantic Conference or a joint meeting of the Continental Conference and the North Atlantic Conference, would it not? A. To my mind that cable meant a meeting of the American representatives of the interested lines.

Q. And the interested lines were the members of the American Atlantic Conference who were also members of the Continental and North Atlantic Conference, were they not? A. Yes, but there were other lines as I understand it who were not members of the 1001 arrangement in Europe who were members of the American arrangement.

Q. What lines were those at that time, May, 1908? A. Some of the Canadian Lines, the Austro-Americano and probably the French Line; I am not sure that the French Line was a party to the arrangement in Europe which we are discussing.

Mr. Spooner: At that time?

The Witness: At that time.

Q. I call your attention to the appendix three to the agreement "AA" and ask you whether that refreshes your recollection as to the French Line being a member of the pool agreement? A. That is true, I didn't see it at the beginning of the document.

1002 Q. It does refresh your recollection, does it not? A. No, my recollection is naturally not very clear for I have not had jurisdiction over those agreements.

Q. You do not desire to be understood as testifying now that the French Line was not a party to agreement "AA"? A. I have never tried to testify that it was not; I simply did not see the French Line there.

Q. You know that the French Line was a member of the New York Conference but it was not a member of the pool agreement "AA"? A. Merely from reading the list of lines said to be parties in the beginning of the document.

Q. And your information was merely based on that? A. Surely.

Mr. Spooner: You do not claim that you have shown the French Line became an original member of the Agreement "AA", do you? You have had evidence together in this proceeding for a long time that it became a member before this suit began.

Mr. Dorr: We have not had this appendix three until produced by Mr. Beecher yesterday. 1004
That was not in the copy of the Agreement which was produced for the Government in the previous investigation, and it was not until we insisted upon the production of this original yesterday that we got it. There are two things which are in this Agreement "AA" produced yesterday which are not in the copy of the agreement which has heretofore been produced for the Government. If a complete copy of Agreement "AA" had been produced, I have no doubt the French Line would now be a party of this proceeding.

Mr. Burlingham: Who was ever asked to 1005 produce that agreement?

Mr. Dorr: A director of a certain line which is now a defendant and who is now dead; I don't see any occasion to mention the name.

Mr. Burlingham: None of the papers, we claim, were ever asked to be produced until we received the subpoena and when we received the subpoena we produced it.

Mr. Dorr: I am not casting reflections on anyone; I am merely stating the fact in response to Mr. Spooner's suggestion that the French Line should have been a party to this proceeding. No party who is present before this Court was subpoenaed to produce it.

Q. As to the Canadian Lines which you mentioned as being members of the Conference, but not parties to this Agreement, what were those lines? A. In 1908?

Q. In 1908? A. I don't see the Donaldson Line mentioned in the arrangement; I think the Donaldson Line was a member of the Conference.

Q. I call your attention to the first page of the Agreement? A. You asked me to read the contract "AA". I don't see this (examining Agreement 1007 "AA").

Q. After having looked at the second page of Agreement "AA" have you any question that the Donaldson Line was a party to this agreement? A. I have no question about the Donaldson Line.

Q. What other Canadian Lines were there that were members of the Conferences of which you were secretary who were not parties to this Agreement which related to the North Atlantic Steerage Traffic? A. I was under the impression I was not correctly designating the Donaldson Line's position; I think now from reading the document that the Donaldson Line was present but not really a party.

1008 Q. It appeared that the Donaldson Line took part in this Conference, did it not, which resulted in this Agreement? A. Certainly, but I don't see its name as a party.

Mr. Spooner: Why do you call that a Conference; what conference?

Mr. Dorr: The London Conference.

Q. What other lines have you in mind, if any? A. The Austro-Americano.

Q. Do you know whether or not that was engaged in the North Atlantic Steerage Traffic in 1908? A. Yes, by way of the Mediterranean.

Q. Did they thereafter become a member or a party to this Agreement? A. I am not informed.

Q. Never had any information about that? A. I am not informed about it.

Q. You have had no information from anyone connected with the defendant lines as to whether or not the Austro-Americano Line has or had, either in 1908 or thereafter, an arrangement with the other lines mentioned in the Agreement "AA"? A. My information is from Mr. Phelps, the agent of the Austro-Americano, that his Company in some way was Associated with these other lines, but the precise association I am not familiar with.

Q. Do you recall the provision in the so-called Beschlusse II, that six per cent dividends of the Austro-Americano Lines were to be guaranteed by the lines that were members of this conference?

Mr. Spooner: I object to that as not within the pleadings and therefore irrelevant and incompetent.

A. I am familiar with it.

Q. Were there any other lines? A. The only way I can be sure would be to take the list of what you construe the parties to Agreement "AA" and verify that with an official list of the members of the Conference in 1908.

1011

Q. Have you such an official list in your possession? A. No.

Q. Now, Mr. Sandford, to come back to that letter of May 22nd, 1908, Exhibit 27, from that letter, which I think you have said you regard as accurate, in substance it appears that Secretary Peters cabled over to New York requesting that the discipline of agents should be taken up by the New York Conference, did he not? A. That is very evident.

Q. And it appears from that letter that the question of the enforcement of the rules against agents and the disqualification of Mr. Zotti in particular was considered at a meeting held in New York at which the representatives of the various lines did appear to have been parties to the Agreement "AA"? A. Yes.

Q. You have also testified to that? A. Yes.

Q. Now, the enforcement of rules as to the disqualification of agents was one of the matters which was within the purview of the American Atlantic Conference, was it not, and on which they repeatedly took action? A. Yes.

1013 Q. With those facts in mind, have you any question that the meeting in which the question of the enforcement of the rules of the Conference in regard to agents in which the question of Mr. Zotti's disqualification was taken up was in fact a meeting of the American Atlantic Conference? A. I would not care to testify under oath to that effect but—

Q. You would not testify that it was; you certainly would not testify that it was not, would you, Mr. Sandford? A. I mean I wouldn't care to testify of my knowledge and belief, but on hearsay or on my recollection. A meeting of the New York representatives would naturally mould the general feeling of 1014 the trade.

Q. That is not my question. Have you any doubt that the meeting which it appears from this letter was held in New York in which the question of the enforcement of Conference rules was taken up and the disqualification of Mr. Zotti was discussed, was a meeting of the American Atlantic Conference? A. I think it was not a meeting.

Q. That was a matter which was regularly within the purview of the American Atlantic Conference, was it not? A. My recollection is that the so-called—agency discipline, yes. My recollection is that the joint work of the Continental and North Atlantic Conferences did not begin until the end of June, 1908.

Q. Just answer my question? A. A matter of

Q. Prior to that time how was the joint work—how were matters which affected both the Continental and the North Atlantic Conference carried on? A. In whichever conference a matter first came up it was customary for that conference to consider it and inform the other conference of its decision.

Q. Do you take it, then, that this meeting which is referred to in this letter, was a meeting of either the North Atlantic or the Continental and not a joint meeting of the two? A. I think that meeting was unquestionably one arranged by both the Continental and North Atlantic Line's American representatives; the Zotti case had probably up to that time been dealt with purely by the Continental Conference.

Q. But at this time, under that arrangement as it existed on February 5th, 1908, it was a matter of common concern for both the North Atlantic and Continental, was it not? A. It was at all times a matter of common concern because Zotti represented practically all the Trans-Atlantic Lines.

Q. You attended that meeting as secretary? A. I may; I may not; I don't know.

Mr. Spooner: What meeting was that?

Mr. Dorr: The meeting last referred to in which the question of Zotti's disqualification was taken up and in which the other matter was taken up.

Q. Now, let me ask you as to your relations as secretary of the Conference to this small committee; what were your relations; put it in your own words? A. My relations were not to have anything to do with the committee; the committee in the Conference or group or lines would handle its own work.

Q. That is, you had nothing officially to do with the small committee? A. I personally had not.

Q. You never had any official relations in regard to it whatever? A. Communications may have come to me but I handled them in the routine.

Q. In what capacity would they come to you? A. Simply as a sort of clearing house of information for the steamship lines.

Q. What was your cable address? A. At that time I think it was "Memorable."

Q. Are you sure that it was not "Tranconfer"? A. It may have been; we had two cables.

Q. I show you a certain cablegram, or what purports to be a copy of a certain cablegram of June 17th, 1909, and ask you whether you received that? A. That would be a cable to the Conference office, and if it referred to—

Q. It would come to you, would it not? A. Not necessarily to me personally; I had a staff of eight people.

Q. Were you the head in charge? A. Yes.

Q. And as secretary of the conference that would remain in your custody, would it not? A. It would be on the files that concerned the subject.

Q. Did you carry on any independent business at that office other than secretary of the conference? A. No.

Q. That is, the records which you had there were conference records? A. Yes.

Q. And you had them as secretary of the conference? A. Yes.

Q. And when I say secretary of the conference, I mean secretary of the American Atlantic and of the Continental and of the North Atlantic or the Mediterranean? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall receiving this cablegram? A. I am quite sure that it came to the conference office.

Mr. Dorr: I offer this in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 28.

The Witness: What date is it, Mr. Dorr?

Q. Under date of June 17th, 1909? A. I went west in June, 1909; I remember I went west near the middle of June, 1909; I don't know that I was west on that date.

Q. Do you know what minute 22 is, referred to in that cablegram? A. I think it must refer to some European minute, because we have no conference minutes on the small committee in America.

Q. Minute 22 then, you take to be a minute adopted by a conference in Europe? A. I think so. 1022

Q. How would you designate that conference? A. I am sure it must be part of the work of the European Agreement of 1908.

Q. That is the Agreement "AA"? A. Yes.

Q. And have you seen minute #22? A. I think a copy of minute 22 was sent to me and I handed it to the people concerned.

Q. So that a copy of minute 22 was at one time at any rate in this country? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall the contents of minute 22? A. I think it was the minute adopted abroad appointing a small committee in America on the part of the European officers of the "AA" members. 1023

Q. Did you retain a copy of that minute 22 in the offices of the members of the conference lines? A. I am quite sure not, because the small committee work was not considered New York or American Conference subjects at all, simply was a subject concerning a particular group of lines with which the conference was not concerned.

Q. And you as the secretary communicated this minute 22 to the various lines? A. To the line which it concerned.

Q. In the United States? A. Yes.

1024 Lawson Sandford

Q. And those lines were the members of the Agreement "AA"? A. I don't remember now definitely whether I did anything in fact on that subject; I am simply speaking from general recollection.

Q. You received minute 22 as secretary of the New York Conference, did you not? A. Not as secretary I take it.

Q. How did you receive, in your individual capacity, Mr. Lawson Sandford? A. No; simply in the capacity of a clearing house for general information.

Q. That is the capacity in which you received it, 1025 is it? A. Yes; that has been the work I have done largely.

Q. Did you receive a salary for being a clearing house for general information? A. The place is largely a clearing house for general information.

Q. Where did you receive your salary from? A. I received my salary and expenses from the individual lines making their own individual payments.

Q. Who were members of the conference? A. Who were members of various conferences.

Q. Did they prescribe any duties to you other than as secretary of the conference? A. The formal duties prescribed were those mentioned, for instance, in 1896 or 1897 North Atlantic Minutes which you had 1026 yesterday.

Q. I don't think we had those? A. 1896 or 1897.

Q. And those are the duties which you had and which you received a salary for? A. Yes; those were the regular duties which constituted my appointment, but my office acted as a sort of general clearing house for information on matters of general news to any one who wanted it.

Q. Who is the secretary referred to in this cablegram? A. A code word for Mr. Peters.

Q. Who is the secretary of the—I think you said of the conference—abroad? A. Mr. Peters in Jena.

Q. He was the secretary of the conference abroad? A. He was secretary as I understand it of all of the arrangements abroad concerning Continental and British Lines.

Q. And he sent this cablegram to you to be communicated to the various lines? A. Yes.

Q. Who were members of the same agreement? A. Yes.

Q. In communicating the action of the conference abroad to the members of the New York Conference you were made the conduit for that information? A. Occasionally matters from the other side were sent to the conference office in New York for distribution, but not regularly.

Q. To come back for one question to this minute 22; did you receive a letter enclosing that minute? A. Probably so, yes.

Q. Did you preserve that letter if you received it? A. Probably so; or passed it to the line.

Q. The original letter would be addressed to you in the ordinary course, would it not? A. It would be addressed to the conference, yes.

Q. And that letter in the ordinary course you would have left among the conference papers when you ceased to be secretary? A. Yes.

Q. And so far as you know none of those conference papers were sent out of the country? A. None.

Q. None had been removed from this country up to the time you ceased to be secretary? A. None.

Q. That is the only definition of your duties that was ever made (referring to 10 of the general rules for steerage passengers in Petitioner's Exhibit 23)? A. Yes; that is typical.

Q. Mr. Sandford, I show you what purports to be a copy of a cablegram under date of September 17th, 1909, addressed to "Tranconfer" signed secretary, and ask you whether you received that? A. I think

I recall that these copies were prepared for your office some years ago.

Mr. Dorr: I offer these in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 29.

Q. Did you preserve copies of all the cablegrams received or sent by you? A. Up to the point where they seemed to be of any consequence and afterwards to relieve the accumulation they were destroyed.

Q. When did you destroy the accumulations? A. Probably at the end of each year we would try to strip our files of subjects that were not likely to be referred 1031 to again.

Q. Do you recall whether or not any of the cablegrams of 1908 were preserved? A. It is very evident they were because we supplied them to the District Attorney on his request about two years ago.

Q. These two are under date of 1909? A. I think Mr. Dorr, we supplied Mr. Pitkin with copies of every communication the conference had exchanged with Mr. Peters during the period in which you were interested, some of which we had to write to the other side to obtain.

Q. Do you recall what this cablegram refers to: "small committee. Your cable June 9—" A. No, 1032 sir; I do not. It must have referred to the general subject; there must have been some cable from the New York manager.

Q. And it had something to do with either the constitution or the operations of the small committee in New York? A. Yes; under rule 22 in Europe.

Q. Rule 22 of the London Conference? A. Yes.

Q. And did that small committee to your knowledge have any other duties than to arrange for the sailings and rates of the so-called fighting ships? A. I think the small committee's duties were to find what steps were necessary by steamers already scheduled to sail to meet the tactics of outside lines.

Q. That is, in order to protect the Cunard Line, and the Hamburg American Line, and the North German Lloyd Line, and the French Line, and the Holland Amerika Line from competition of such a line as the Northwest Transport Line it was necessary for them to adopt defensive measures? A. Yes.

Q. And the International Mercantile Marine Lines; and in order to protect themselves against this threatening danger from the Northwest Transport Line they conceived it necessary to adopt defensive measures to put on defending ships, is that what I understand the idea was, Mr. Sandford? A. There has been a great deal of discussion on the subject by much better posted and brighter minds than mine; I simply know from my own experience that the protection of the traveling public— 1034

Q. Never mind that? A. You asked for an opinion.

Q. No; you were volunteering something.

Mr. Spooner: Let him finish.

The Witness: I don't want to offer anything—

Q. I think you are offering something beyond what my question calls for? A. I understood you wanted in a sort of sarcastic way to have me construe the enormity of opposition and I know from my personal experience of all my life not only in the conference, but employed by— 1035

Mr. Dorr: I have a right to introduce an objection to this witness.

Mr. Burlingham: You have a right to move to strike out a man's answer when he has answered.

Mr. Dorr: As soon as a witness's answer ceases to be responsive the Government has a right to interpose an objection. This witness is now endeavoring to give expert testimony as to a certain matter and I object to the witness giving expert testimony.

Mr. Beers: Having given your objection he is entitled to go on.

Mr. Dorr: I object to this witness proceeding to volunteer information which he claims to be his expert opinion on certain matters as to which he has not been interrogated by the Government.

Mr. Beers: With that objection on the record, Mr. Sandford, go right on.

1037 The Witness: Mr. Dorr has accused me of not trying to answer his question, but when I found out what he wants I am very glad to answer it as fully and truthfully as he pleases.

Mr. Dorr: I would suggest then that any other things you desire to add in that matter be left to the cross-examination.

Q. (Question read.)

Mr. Burlingham: You listen to the question read and then go on with your answer.

Mr. Dorr: I object to counsel instructing the witness called for the Government at this 1038 time. Of course, it is quite obvious that he is regarded as a witness for the defense.

(Answer of witness read.)

Mr. Burlingham: Go on from there if you wish to.

The Witness: Well, to finish the sentence, requires that they and their agents are given equal opportunites as to rates.

Q. Now, Mr. Sandford, these steamers that you mention were designated by the small committee, were they not, was that your information? A. In part probably, and not always.

Q. During what period were they designated by the small committee? A. I am not thoroughly posted; my recollection is not clear because I have not handled the work of the small committee.

Q. Did you as secretary of the conference have anything to do with the designation of the fighting steamers? A. No, sir.

Q. I show you a certain cablegram, or what purports to be a copy of a certain cablegram, under date of June 9th, 1909, and ask you whether that cablegram was sent by you? A. That was sent unquestionably by direction of the small committee in effect at that time; it is June, 1909. 1040

Q. Sent by you at the direction of the small committee? A. Sent at the conference office; not necessarily personally by me.

Q. You were in that conference office, were you not? A. I know, but I couldn't attend to every detail that came into that establishment.

Q. It was, however, your duty to supervise the action of your office; a cablegram of that nature would hardly be sent off without your knowledge, would it? A. Entirely so.

Q. If you were away? A. No; even if I were there. It would not be necessary at all for me to see a cable of that sort. 1041

Q. Perhaps this will refresh your recollection as to whether or not you had anything to do with that particular matter (handing witness letter)? A. Absolutely clear. A letter from the Holland Amerika Line—

Q. Never mind about the contents. Does that refresh your recollection? If it does not all right; if it does what is now your recollection as to whether you personally were concerned in the matter to which this cablegram of June, 1909, referred to? A. It absolutely bears out what I said. It says we—

Q. I asked you whether your recollection was refreshed by that letter; do you recall now whether or not you had anything to do with the matter which is referred to in this cablegram? A. In respect to despatching it?

Q. Yes? A. No; I don't think so. I suppose the small committee, whatever the instance, sent it through the office.

Q. To your office? A. Yes.

1043 Q. And would it be sent if you were present in the office without your knowledge? A. The office has about five rooms.

Q. To whom would the small committee submit a cablegram of this sort for transmission in the regular course of business at that time? A. They probably sent it to Mr. Morse, because he handled small committee matters personally.

Q. Mr. Morse handled those matters for you? A. No; I simply presume it was handed to Mr. Morse.

Q. Where is Mr. Morse now? A. He is in the office of the conference.

Q. Is he in the offices of the conference still? A. Yes.

1044 Q. And the office is at the same address, of course? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer in evidence letter from one of the press copy books heretofore identified as being the letter book of the Holland America Line under date of May 24th, 1909, purporting to be signed A. G.; it may appear on the record that A. G. represents Adrian Gips.

Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent and irrelevant and not binding in any way upon the defendants other than the Holland America Line.

Received as Exhibit #30.

Mr. Dorr: I now offer in evidence copy of a cablegram identified by the witness under date of June 9, 1909.

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit #31.

Q. I show you cablegram under date of August 3rd, 1909, and ask you whether that was received by you? A. From the code word it was undoubtedly received and supplied to your office at your request.

1046

Mr. Dorr: I offer this in evidence; addressed to Transconfer, signed Secretair.

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit #32.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence letter press copy of letter from Adrian Gips to the Holland American Line under date of August 3rd, 1909, on page 322 of the letter book.

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Received as Exhibit #33.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence what purports to be an original letter from the Holland American Line Home Office to the Holland American Line of New York, under date of August 12th, 1909.

1047

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit #34.

Q. Now, Mr. Sandford, do you recall now, after an inspection of these exhibits, do they refresh your recollection as to the fact that you were the medium of communication—your office was the medium of communication—between the small committee in New York and the secretary of the conference abroad? A. On those occasions, yes.

1048

Q. By your answer do you mean to imply that those were the only occasions? A. On such occasions.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence letter press copy of April 27, 1909, from Adrian Gips on page 235 of the letter book.

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Received as Petitioner's Exhibit #35.

Mr. Dorr: And the original letter of reply of May 4th, 1909.

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit #36.

1049

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence letter of March 29th, 1909, purporting to be an original letter from the Holland American Line, Home Office, in Rotterdam, to the Holland American Line of New York, being one of the letters identified by the witness yesterday.

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit #37.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence letter of May 25, 1909, original letter, from the Holland American Line at Rotterdam to the Holland American Line at New York.

Mr. Spooner: This is objected to and I am going to move to strike out those that have

Mr. Dorr: On the ground of lack of proof?

Mr. Spooner: On the ground that they are irrelevant and incompetent, not, however, for want of proof of authenticity or genuineness.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 38.

Q. Mr. Sandford, do you recognize the handwriting in that Exhibit No. 38? A. I don't know it.

Mr. Dorr: I offer three further letters from the Holland American Line in Rotterdam to the New York office, one under date of August 4th, 1908, and one under date of August 31st 1908.

Mr. Spooner: I make the same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 39.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 40.

Q. Mr. Sandford, in 1908, do you recall what lines were engaged in the North Atlantic Steerage business which were not members of the conference? A. Apparently from the papers we have seen—

Q. I am asking you for your recollection; if you do not recall, say so? A. I would like to have opportunity to look it up; it is four years ago. 1052

Q. Do you recall whether there are any other lines than the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the Russian East Asiatic Line? A. All established lines were in the conference; there were mushroom lines in and out of the business all the time.

Q. Never mind about your characterization of lines; just answer the question. Do you recall whether there were any lines other than the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company which were not members of the conference? A. I would like to have opportunity to look that up.

Q. You have no recollection one way or the other? A. I have some recollection. 1053

Q. Then state such recollection as you have? A. I think that—

Mr. Beecher: I object. The witness has stated he is ready and willing to look it up and testify in regard to it. Now, to ask him to give the best recollection which he might have at this time, seems to me hardly fair.

Mr. Dorr: I will suggest this, Mr. Beecher, that if the witness finds that his recollection is in error, I will be very glad to afford him an opportunity to correct it.

Mr. Beecher: I will say, Mr. Dorr, that I don't think that we ought to take his time or waste our energy in getting the witness's possible recollection only to be subsequently corrected. Let the witness look the matter up and give his testimony.

Mr. Dorr: This witness, I think, has been so many years with the conference, that even a somewhat distant recollection should be of value.

The Witness: I am giving you the best recollection I can. I must take exception to your attitude—

Q. I want it; what is the best you have got? A. Every time I try to make an explanation, you shut me off—

Q. What is your recollection, Mr. Sandford? A. My recollection is very plain that the growth of the Atlantic business in the last 20 years is such that no man can remember it.

Q. Your recollection is very plain that you haven't got any recollection? A. I can if you want me to give it to you in black and white.

1056 Q. Do you now recall whether there was any other line in the North Atlantic Steerage business in February and March and April and May, 1908, which were not members of the conferences of which you were secretary, other than the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the Russian East Asiatic Line? A. It is difficult to—

Q. Do you recall any other? A. I don't think the Russian East Asiatic was running in 1908; I don't remember those things.

Q. You cannot remember whether there was such a concern at that time? A. To testify under oath—

Q. You have no recollection on the matter? A. I have some recollection.

Q. What is your recollection? A. I think there was some—

Q. What is your recollection about the Russian East Asiatic Fleet? A. I am confused by—

Q. Never mind what you are confused by, what is your recollection such as it is? A. I will have to say it in my own way. I am confused because the names of those outside lines changed so frequently and they ran for spasmodic periods and not regularly. I can't remember whether that was a mushroom line, was running under one name or another, or had been running.

Q. If you have no recollection, it is a very simple matter for you to say so. Now, have you any recollection as to whether the Russian Volunteer Fleet was running in 1908? A. I think so.

Q. Have you any recollection as to whether the East Asiatic was running in 1908? A. I am mixed—

Q. Have you any recollection? A. I think it was either the Russian East Asiatic or the Northwestern Transport, I don't remember which, offhand; I am trying to think what lines were—

Q. Then you have no definite recollection as to whether the East Asiatic was running at that time or not? A. I think it was, but I am not sure whether it was the Russian East Asiatic or the Northwest Transport.

Q. You have given us the best recollection you have; now, have you any recollection as to whether the Northwest Transport was running at that time? A. I think it may have been.

Q. What is your best recollection? A. I haven't got much recollection on it for the reasons I have stated.

1060 Q. Have you any recollection as to whether the New York Continental was running at that time? A. That's the trouble, they changed their names so often. How can I remember now, four years back?

Q. We don't care for your difficulty; we want your knowledge; if you have any, say so? A. I have very little of it.

Q. Mr. Sandford, have you any recollection now as to whether the New York Continental Line was running in 1908; have you or have you not? A. You have tried to confuse me on the Russian East Asiatic and Northwest Transport and New York Continental 1061 and everything else.

Q. I have not tried to confuse you. Answer that question, and answer it without comment, if you please? A. My recollection is not—

Q. You have no recollection on the point? A. My recollection is not worth regarding when I offer to look it up.

Q. You are not the judge as to whether your recollection is worth anything; that may be a matter of opinion, but what I want is the fact of whether or not you have any recollection on that point? A. Will you state it one line at a time?

Q. Do you recall whether or not the New York
1062 and Continental Line was running in 1908? A. I think it was, under that name, for several months, and then it stopped.

Q. It was running in 1908? A. Yes, it chartered steamers.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the Russian East Asiatic Line became a member of the conference? A. Yes.

Q. When was that? A. I think it was in the autumn of 1908 or 1909; I couldn't say definitely.

Q. Did you receive that cablegram (showing witness cablegram)? A. Yes, but the year is blurred; it looks like 1908.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Bullowa: I object to this as no proof of entering into any agreement, simply hearsay evidence of the worst character; I especially object to what he was informed of the action of the defendant the Russian East Asiatic Company.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 41.

Q. After the receipt of that cable, do you know whether or not representatives of the Russian East Asiatic Line appeared at the meetings of the conference of which you were secretary? A. My recollection is that the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company applied in writing to the New York office of the American Conferences and it was upon that action, that application, that they were admitted to membership in the Continental Conference. If it was in 1908, I was in Europe about that time.

Q. Then you have no personal recollection as to the transaction? A. No, but I remember the fact that the Russian American Line joined the conference.

Q. Did you, Mr. Sandford, ever see the agreement which is mentioned in this cablegram? A. What agreement is it?

Q. That, I will have to ask you (showing witness cablegram)? A. No, I have not.

Q. Were the terms of that agreement stated to you by any person?

Mr. Bullowa: Objected to as hearsay and incompetent.

A. I have never heard the particulars of the relationship in Europe between the Russian American Line and the other lines.

1066 Q. Did any person ever state to you whether or not a certain proportion or pro rata proportion of the North Atlantic Steerage traffic was allotted to the Russian East Asiatic Lines?

Mr. Bullowa: It is understood that my objection applies to all these questions?

Mr. Dorr: Yes.

A. I understood that the Russian Line was a party in Europe to their traffic arrangement, possibly in connection with the division of the third class business.

1067 Q. And that a certain proportion of the steerage business was allotted to the East Asiatic Line? A. Probably.

Q. And you obtained this information from— A. Hearsay.

Q. From the officers and agents of the various defendant lines? A. The general talk, yes.

Q. That is, among the members of your conference; do you recall any particular person who told you this? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you learn or did you hear from some source the proportion of business, steerage business, which was allotted the East Asiatic? A. I don't think 1068 I ever knew.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence press copy of letter under date of August 28, 1908, from Adrian Gips to the Holland Amerika Line. Rotterdam.

Mr. Spooner: Same objection that has been made to the other letters of Mr. Gips to the Holland Amerika Company, or from the Holland Amerika Company to Mr. Gips which have been offered in evidence.

1069

Mr. Bullowa: I make the same objection, and the further objection that no letter written by an officer of the Holland Amerika Line to anybody else is binding upon the defendant, the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, or Johnson and Straus, there being no proof that the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company entered into any agreement.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 42.

Q. Do you recall whether thereafter a circular was circulated among the agents, conference agents, this circular which I now show you, was it there- 1070 after circulated among the conference agents? A. It is a regular conference circular issued in the customary manner, circular dated September 1st, 1908.

Q. That circular purports to be issued, among others, by the Russian American Line; how did you obtain authority from the Russian American Line to the issuance of that circular? A. I am afraid you have not read the record. If you would read this record you would see that the situation is all defined that you are asking me to give.

Q. I show you a circular under date of September 1st, 1908, and it indicates that it appears to be signed by the Russian American Line? A. Yes.

Q. This was issued by the conference? A. It is the usual language. I can refresh my memory as to how it was done by looking at the official record (reading), "A meeting was held on the 3rd day of September, 1908, at which was present, a representative of the Russian American Line. The first action at the meeting of September 3rd, 1908, was as follows—"

Q. Do you recall what member of the Russian American Line was present? A. It is stated here in the record.

Q. I want your recollection? A. It is on the record.

Q. Mr. Sandford, if you will give me your recollection? A. I read from the record, Mr. Max Straus.

Q. Mr. Sandford, you will not read from the record unless asked to do so? A. Four years, this period, I can't remember whether I was personally present at that meeting or not.

Q. Unless you have some recollection in addition to that of the written record, it is not proper for you to state what occurred at that meeting; it is subject to other proof? A. At this date, I cannot state 1073 if I was present at this meeting.

Q. Do you recall whether at that time or thereafter, Mr. Straus attended meetings of the conference in New York? A. Yes, he did.

Q. Did you make that particular minute of September 3rd, 1908? A. I couldn't say now.

Q. And you cannot vouch personally for it? A. No, it is confirmed by the chairman as a correct record.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence the circular.

Mr. Beers: Objected to as irrelevant and immaterial and not within the issues.

1074 Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 43.

Q. How long did Mr. Straus attend the conference meetings? A. From that time up to the early part of April of this year sometime.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Sandford, when the Russian Volunteer Fleet withdrew its ships? A. Sometime in 1908, probably mid-summer.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer in evidence letter of Holland Amerika Line at Rotterdam to the New York office under date of June 19th, 1908.

Mr. Beers: Same objection as to that, but the objection as to incompetency does not extend as to the genuineness of the letter.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 44.

Q. Mr. Sandford, you recall whether or not from time to time, penalties were imposed on the agents at conference lines who sold tickets for other lines, not conference lines? A. Yes, they were always given the option of choosing between conference lines and non-conference.

Q. Can't you answer that question, yes or no? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike out the rest of it.

Q. Just, if you can, Mr. Sandford, we will get along faster where you can answer the question yes or no; confine yourself to that monosyllable.

Mr. Dorr: I have prepared a list of minutes of the American Atlantic Conference and of the Continental Conference which I desire to offer in evidence and I suggest that you examine those outside of the court room (addressing counsel for the defense). I have no doubt they are on control of agents, but they relate to some other matters beside that.

Q. Mr. Sandford, have you any recollection with regard to the making of certain arrangements with certain passenger associations? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall when the Conference Agreement was entered into about a conference with the passenger association and what passenger association that was, which one?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as irrelevant and not within the issues.

1078 Lawson Sandford

A. In the latter part of the nineties, about 1897, between the United States ports steamship lines and the Western Passenger Association of Railroads.

Q. Do you recall whether or not that agreement provided for the so-called commercial allowance by the railroads to the steamship lines? A. Yes.

Mr. Spooner: That agreement is in writing?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I haven't it; if you will produce it.

1079 Q. How long was that agreement acted on? A. The agreement has continued ever since. The agreement has run in the intervals without any deviation.

Q. And with what passenger association was that agreement?

Mr. Beers: I wish to note on the record an objection to any evidence with reference to any railroad passenger association, or any understanding or agreement between any such association and any steamship line or lines, or with reference to commercial allowances, upon the ground that such evidence is incompetent, 1080 irrelevant and immaterial, and not within the issues in this suit.

Mr. Dorr: Very well, it is understood that any such evidence is objected to on those grounds. But the government claims that such evidence is admissable on the question of monopoly, and as showing control of the whole railroad situation by the steamship companies.

A. The railroads in the Western Passenger Association territory.

Q. What was the Western Passenger Association territory if you recall? A. In general the gateways are—

Q. I think perhaps we can prove all of that in a shorter way? A. St. Louis and west of the Missouri River. There is a map which shows all the passenger associations of America; I think I sent it to you.

Q. Is that the map to which you refer (handing witness map)? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 45.

1082

Q. Do you recall whether or not in December, 1909, there was an agreement entered into with regard to east and westbound traffic with the Central Passenger Association? A. Eastbound traffic?

Q. Is this that agreement of December 3rd, 1908? A. I supplied those papers to you; those are copies of the record.

Mr. Dorr: The so-called agreement of December 3rd, 1908, is offered in evidence as one exhibit.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 46.

1083

Q. I show you what purports to be a copy of a certain letter addressed to H. A. Eschenburg, and ask you if that is a copy of a letter sent by you as secretary of the conference? A. Yes, I supplied that to you some time ago.

Letter dated November 12th, 1908, offered in evidence by Mr. Dorr.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 47.

Q. Under subpoena? A. I am not sure whether it was under subpoena or not.

Q. Are the facts correctly stated in that letter? A. I will have to read it now; I think it is.

1084 Lawson Sandford

Q. Read it afterwards, and if there are any matters that you desire to correct let me know. Was this letter sent in pursuance of your duties as secretary to the conference? A. I could not tell you until I read it over.

Q. I show you what purports to be proceedings of a joint meeting between the railroad committee of the Steamship lines and the advisory committee of the claims division of the Western Passenger Association and other interested lines, held on February 25th, 1909, and ask you whether that is a copy of those proceedings? A. That is a record made by the railroad in 1085 the customary form.

Q. Can you answer my question? A. It is a copy by the railroad sent to me and I supplied it to your office.

Q. Can you answer the question, whether that is a copy of the proceedings mentioned? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I offer it in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 48.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the provisions of these various agreements to which your attention has been called and which have been marked in evidence were actually executed?

1086

Mr. Beers: It is understood that my objection applies to all this testimony?
Mr. Dorr: Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Was there from time to time collected by the steamship companies so-called commercial allowances from the railroads on east and westbound steerage traffic of the railroads? A. On vouchers.

Q. Will you explain the method by which claims for those allowances were made and collected? A. It was done by the railroad association individually with the transporting steamship lines; it was never done through the conference office, the clearing of orders and the settlement of the—

Q. It was not done through your office? A. No.

Q. That is, when the steamship company had arranged for the transportation of third-class passengers they would submit a voucher for that transportation with the railroad companies and receive the allowance? A. Are you speaking of east or westbound?

Q. I am speaking of both? A. The system might be different.

Q. Explain it if you are familiar with it? A. Westbound it is found necessary to either book all the passengers who are proceeding to interior destinations in the United States because upon their arrival— 1088

Q. Without comment on whether it is necessary or unnecessary, state what is done, if you can? A. Would you like to cross out what I started to say?

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike out that part as unresponsive.

A. On the arrival of the passengers due in the United States from the Canadian port he presents—

Mr. Spooner: You can go on and state it if you want to.

Q. Go on and explain it. Perhaps if I ask questions it will be a little better—

Mr. Burlingham: Let him explain it himself.

Q. Just explain it, what is done by the steamship companies. When the steamship companies sell in this country a ticket for transportation of a steerage passenger who is located in Europe—the so-called prepaid —does it at the same time when the passenger is destined to an interior point make some provision for 1090 that transportation within the United States by the railroad? A. Yes.

Q. In what form does it make that arrangement with the person who purchases a prepaid ticket? A. The same as a ticket sold in Europe, a separate ocean contract and a separate rail order is issued and is handed to the passenger; that rail order which acknowledges the receipt of the fare from the seaboard to the final destination of the passenger is for just the amount of it to the emigrant or whoever else may be using it. Upon arrival at the United States—

1091 Q. If I may interrupt one minute: The amount paid by the passenger or person who purchases the prepaid or inland transportation is the published rate of the railroads from the point of arrival in this county to the point of destination in this country? A. Yes.

Q. And the purchaser on the Continent or in England pays the published rate of the steamship company for the Atlantic transportation, plus the published rate of the railroad company from port of arrival in this country to the point of destination in this country, is that it? A. Right.

Q. Now then, upon the arrival of a passenger— A. Whether in the first, second or third class, the possession of that railroad order insures the forward-

1092 ing to the proper destination by the joint action—

Q. Just a minute, Mr. Sandford; what does the holder of that ticket do in order to get railroad transportation; just describe it in that way? A. It is valid at any railroad ticket office in the world.

Q. When he presents it to a railroad office the railroad gives him a ticket in exchange to his destination? A. Or at Ellis Island in the case of third class passengers to this port.

Q. Do you know whether or not the name of the steamship company which has sold the trans-atlantic transportation is stamped on that order? A. It is an official document of the steamship with the name of the steamship company printed on it. 1093

Q. Now, as to the eastbound, in what form does the steamship company arrange for or sell through transportation, or inland transportation? A. The issue of an ocean ticket by an agent in the interior of the United States for eastbound transportation, accompanied by a voucher coupon, verified by the railroad, provides for a system equivalent to westbound what might be termed through transportation, so that the passengers come through and they are known on the way as steamship passengers and the business is expedited by these operations. 1094

Q. Describe the machinery of it, without commenting, if you can refrain from it? A. As stated—

Q. If an eastbound steerage passenger goes to a steamship office he gets two papers, one a steamship ticket and the other what is in effect a railroad ticket? A. The passenger is supplied usually directly by some agent with an official railroad ticket to the seaboard, usually in conjunction with a steamship ticket of such a number and date.

Q. Is that railroad ticket which he receives an official railroad ticket of the railroad? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any stamp or other writing put upon that ticket to show that has been purchased in conjunction with the steamship passage? A. I think that it is provided that the passenger must show the ocean ticket whenever called for during the journey. 1095

Q. That is, it is a special form of ticket? A. It is usually separate class and mixed class emigrants rail ticket.

Q. Does it in any way designate the steamship line by which the passenger is ultimately to travel? A. I don't think so. That originates in the interior and they are not so familiar with it.

1096 Q. Now, the rate on eastbound which the railroad passenger pays is the published rate of the railroad from the interior point to the port of departure? A. Yes.

Q. Plus the published rate of the steamship company for the trans-atlantic voyage, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. By published rate of the steamship company I mean merely the rate which the company itself is advertising to carry passengers for on the steamship in question from the port of departure in question to the point of arrival? A. Yes.

1097 Q. In what way do the steamship companies receive the so-called commercial allowance which is paid to them by the railroads on this traffic? A. Westbound traffic?

Q. Take eastbound traffic if you will? A. The steamship company prepares a statement of the voucher coupons issued by their agents in the interior and validated by the railroad agent who issues the railroad ticket, submitting those to the proper group of railroads interested and having already deducted the commercial allowance portion which belongs to the booking agent and various general passenger agents, until it comes to the seaboard office, eventually receives the 1098 commercial allowance from the railroad companies to reimburse them for what they have already paid out. Westbound it is a trifle different. The orders of the steamship lines—

Q. Have the steamships paid anything to the railroad companies direct on this eastbound traffic? A. They receive it.

Q. I understood you to say to reimburse them for what they have paid out? A. The steamship company receives with the advice of each eastbound steamship ticket a voucher coupon for the rail ticket that has been issued to the traveller; the steamship agent re-mits remittances for the steamship sailing minus his ocean commission and also minus his rail commission.

Q. That is, a commission which the steamship company allows him on this commercial allowance which it receives? A. No, the steamship company allows deduction of two commissions, the inland commission and the ocean commission.

Q. The steamship company generally receives the voucher and presents it to the railroad company? A. You mean the steamship booking agent?

Q. The steamship booking agent receives a voucher and ultimately sends that voucher to the steamship company for which he is an agent, does he not? A. No, the steamship booking agent at the interior point completes the voucher coupon at the time of the issue of the ocean ticket, but that voucher coupon is not valid until it has been validated by the railroad agent who sells the railroad transportation in connection witl the ocean transportation of the special agent.

Q. Now then, what is physically done with that coupon after it has been validated? A. It is forwarded with the advice of the rail passenger to the steamship company's general passenger agent in the territory affected or direct to the seaboard office less—

Q. What is done then with this voucher; it comes to the general passenger agent of the seaboard, or the general passenger agent of the steamship company in the particular territory to which the passenger was booked? A. It eventually reaches the seaboard as a matter of fact.

Q. After it reaches the seaboard what is done with it physically by the steamship company? A. At frequent intervals each steamship company prepares an abstract to accompany the rail voucher coupons that they have accumulated, forwarding the abstract and the voucher to the proper group of railroads for verification and ultimate reimbursement of the commissions already paid out.

1102 Lawson Sandford

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike out the last part of the answer as not responsive.

Q. What I asked you is this; what is physically done with this voucher by the steamship company; where do they send it to? A. After making the collections of accounts they do not send each voucher separately to the railroad.

Q. After getting a considerable number of vouchers they send those to the proper railroad company? A.
1103 To the proper railroad group.

Q. After they are sent to the proper railroad group does that railroad group then send to the steamship company, or remit to the steamship company, the amount of the so-called commercial allowance for those vouchers? A. Yes, after verification.

Q. What happens then, briefly? A. It is very hard for me to tell—

Q. The steamship company on presentation of the vouchers in question receives the commercial allowance for that transportation covered by those vouchers from the group of railroad companies affected? A. Yes.

1104 Mr. Spooner: What is there for the railroad company to pay to the steamship company? Has the steamship company advanced some money for the railroad company?

The Witness: The steamship company has honored the deduction of the steamship booking agent for his proportion of the ocean commercial allowance and in due process of time is reimbursed by the railroad companies if they verify the correctness of the booking. If it is not verified and the voucher is thrown out the agent is told that he is not entitled to his commercial allowance.

Q. The railroad companies on presentation of vouchers showing certain transportations fulfill their agreement to give the steamship companies a certain commercial allowance by paying that percentage or that allowance to the steamship companies, and the steamship companies are under no obligations whatever to the railroads under this agreement as to how they shall distribute that allowance, or whether they shall keep it all or give it all away? A. The basic foundation is to compensate.

Q. Is there any agreement between the railroad company and the steamship companies as to the disposition by the steamship companies of the so-called commercial allowance? A. The only definite understanding between the steamship lines and the railroad companies in respect to all of this business both east and westbound is that—

Q. Are you testifying to something in that paper or something outside of the paper? A. I am testifying because this reminds me of the arrangement.

Q. Is it an arrangement defined in that paper? A. Yes.

Q. Then we will let the paper speak for itself? A. I am answering your question.

Mr. Dorr: Then I withdraw the question.

Mr. Burlingham: I submit, Mr. Examiner, that the witness is entitled to finish his answer and that the interruptions of the District Attorney should not put an end to his answer.

The Examiner: I understand he has no power to take off what is already on the record?

Mr. Dorr: No. I have withdrawn my question, so that no further answer is necessary.

Mr. Burlingham: You can go on with your answer. Read the question and answer.

(Question and answer read.)

1108 Matthew R. Malinowsky

A. (Witness continuing the answer)—is that none of the commercial allowance shall be given directly or indirectly to the passengers.

Q. That is precisely what appears in this agreement? A. Well, you asked me—

Q. I asked you if there was anything different that does not appear in this agreement? A. No.

Recess taken until 2:00 o'clock P. M.

1109 Afternoon session.

MATTHEW R. MALINOWSKY, sworn on behalf of the petitioner testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence letter under date of November 16th, 1909, from the Holland-Amerika Line, Rotterdam, to the New York office.

Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent and not binding—the same objection I made to the other letters of this line.

1110 Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 49.

Letter of the Holland-Amerika Line to the New York office under date of May 28th, 1907.

Mr. Beers: Objection renewed.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 50.

Original letter from the Holland-Amerika Line to the New York office, under date of July 6th, 1906.

Mr. Beers: Objection renewed.

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as relating to a time and situation ante-dating the alleged cause of action upon which the suit is based and being otherwise irrelevant and immaterial and incompetent.

1111

Mr. Dorr: No objection is made as to the sufficiency of the proof as to the genuineness of the letters in question?

Mr. Spooner: No.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 51.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Malinowsky? A. New Britain, Conn.

Q. Did you reside there in April, 1911? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And May, 1911? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time were you an agent of the Uranium Steamship Company? A. Yes.

Q. As such, did you sell certain tickets during those months? A. I did.

Q. On the Uranium Steamship Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you what purports to be a certain ticket stub book and ask you whether or not that is a ticket book which was used by you and from which you issued tickets? A. Yes, that is.

Q. Can you state whether or not you issued tickets to the persons whose names are recorded under the heading "Name of Passenger," on the various stubs? A. Yes, I can.

1113

Q. Were those tickets paid for? A. They were.

Q. By the persons to whom you issued them? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that ticket stub book in evidence.

Mr. Spooner: What is the purpose of this?

Mr. Dorr: That is to show that the tickets were issued by the Uranium Steamship Company, that they were properly paid for, but the Government proposes to show that when sent over as through passengers on the other side, the holders of them were informed by the agents of the defendant lines, or some of them, that the tickets were invalid, and the passengers were deterred from using these tickets and were subsequently sent back to this country. The object is to show unfair competition by the agents of the defendant lines in Europe by misleading the passengers, holders of bona fide tickets, that those tickets were worthless in an effort to secure a monopoly of the steerage trade by the defendant lines or some of them. It will not apply to all of the lines, but the evidence will indicate who it does apply to.

Mr. Beecher: I object to this as immaterial and irrelevant and incompetent, and not affecting the issues here, transactions between parties not parties to this action.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 52.

Q. I show you a second, what purports to be a stub ticket book of the Uranium Line, and ask if that also was kept by you and tickets therefrom issued by you relating to that line? A. Yes.

1116

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Spooner: I make the same objection.

Mr. Beecher: I join in that objection.

Q. Were these records made by you? A. They were—by my clerk; the writing is not mine.

Q. It was kept under your supervision? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: Do you make an objection that the writing is not in the handwriting of this witness?

Mr. Bradley: We renew the previous objection; we will expressly state we do not make it on that ground; that it is not in the handwriting of this witness.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 53.

Q. After issuing these tickets and receiving the money therefor, did you ever see again the tickets which you had issued and delivered to the purchasers? A. Yes, I did.

Q. How long after? A. I couldn't state that exactly; I won't be sure how long it was afterwards.

Q. Within a month or so after? A. Oh, I would say it was two months afterward.

Q. Were there any of these tickets which you issued which were not returned to you? A. Only one. 1118

Q. Is that the last stub in Government's Exhibit 52? A. Yes, that is the last stub in Exhibit 52.

Q. That ticket did not come back? A. It did not; the party arrived on that ticket.

Q. When these tickets were presented to you what did you do with them? A. I sent them back to the company.

Q. What did the company do—the Uranium Company? A. The Uranium Company, they refunded the money for them.

Q. Did it refund it to the passengers? A. Yes, to the purchasers.

Mr. Beecher: I take the same objection to all of this line of testimony as immaterial in reference to the contracts between these people.

Q. Did the Uranium line or its agents object that these tickets were not properly issued by you?

Mr. Beecher: I make the same objection.

A. They did not.

Q. Did the Uranium Company or their agents say that there was something the matter with these tickets 1120 or they were not properly issued by you? A. They did not.

Mr. Beecher: I make the same objection as immaterial and incompetent.

Q. Were these tickets that you issued in the regular form? A. Regular form, yes; there is something else I want to explain; I said I refunded the money in each case to the purchaser; it was not in each case that I refunded the money, in some cases I sent tickets to Europe on other lines and then the passengers came here.

1121 Q. Did you issue the ticket on another line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In exchange for the earlier ticket? A. Yes.

Q. On what other lines did you issue the tickets? A. I issued it on the Holland-Amerika Line.

Q. Did the persons who returned these tickets make any statement to you as to why they were returning them?

Mr. Beecher: Objected to as immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent.

A. They did.

Q. Did they deliver any correspondence to you about 1122 it or show you any correspondence? A. Yes, a couple of letters they showed me.

Q. Have you got those letters? A. No, sir, I have not; I did not take them from them.

Q. You did not keep copies of them? A. I did not.

No cross-examination.

1123

SAMUEL JACOB BECKERMAN, sworn on behalf of the petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Can you speak English? A. A little bit; I don't talk much.

Q. Where do you live? A. 48 Palisade Avenue, Yonkers.

Q. Do you recall whether or not in the summer of 1910 you purchased a prepaid ticket on the Northwest Transport Line from Rotterdam to New York? A. Yes.

1124

Q. Is this the ticket which you received (showing witness ticket)? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the receipt which you received? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence ticket and receipt.

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibits 54 and 55.

Q. What did you do with that ticket after you received it? A. I went to the old country and I came back.

Q. Did you pay money for these tickets? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you buy them? A. I bought them in the office in Broadway.

Q. The office of the Northwest Transport Company in New York? A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you bought this ticket on Broadway, what did you do with it? A. I went with the ticket to the office again and showed them the letter that my wife couldn't come on that ticket and he was to give me back my money.

1126 Samuel Jacob Beckerman

Mr. Beers: I ask that the answer be stricken out, and object to the question as irrelevant and immaterial and incompetent.

Q. Just one minute. After you bought this ticket did you send it to any one? A. I sent to my wife to return to Russia.

Q. Where was she? A. She was in Russia.

Q. You sent the ticket to her over there? A. Yes.

Q. She was coming over to this country? A. Yes.

Q. After that did you receive a letter from your wife? A. I received a letter what happened to my 1127 wife and —

Q. Is this the letter which you received? A. Yes, this is the letter I received.

Q. And in this envelope (handing envelope to witness)? A. Yes; this my wife was writing and this is the agents writing (indicating).

Mr. Dorr: The first part of the letter is in the hand writing of the wife and the other is the handwriting of a third person. I consent that the handwriting of the agent be stricken out. I will ask that these be marked for identification, the envelope and letter.

1128 Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 56, for identification.

Q. Was there anything enclosed in this envelope with this letter? A. The ticket.

Q. The ticket which you have already identified? A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with the ticket after you received it back from your wife? A. I went to the office and I gave the ticket back I showed him the letter my wife couldn't come on this ticket.

Mr. Beecher: You don't want what he told the agent, do you? None of this testimony is material or competent; it is all hearsay.

Q. Did you show the agent the letter? A. I showed Mr. Forman the letter.

Q. What did he do after you showed him the letter? A. He read the letter and then gave me the money back.

Q. What did you do after that, Mr. Beckerman, about getting your wife over here? A. I had to buy a ticket on the Holland-Amerika Line.

Mr. Beecher: Objected to as immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent, and ask that the witnesses, statement that he had to buy a ticket, etc., be stricken out.

1130

Q. What did you do about procuring a passage to this country for your wife after that?

Mr. Beecher: Objected to as immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent.

A. I had to buy a ticket on the Holland-Amerika Line.

Q. You read the letter and after reading the letter you bought the ticket on the Holland-Amerika Line? A. Yes.

Q. Did you send that ticket abroad? A. No, I sent the ticket to Europe again.

Q. And then your wife arrived on the Holland-Amerika Line? A. Yes. 1131

No cross-examination.

DEBORAH BECKERMAN, sworn on behalf of the petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. In the summer of 1910, were you in Russia, Mrs. Beckerman? A. Yes.

1132 Deborah Beckerman

Q. While you were in Russia and before you returned to this country, did you receive this ticket, Government Exhibit 54? A. Yes, the only way I know I recognize my husband's signature.

Q. After you received this ticket what did you do?

Mr. Beecher: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

A. A party by the name of Woznianski took the ticket off me, and he asked me to see the ticket, and I showed it to him, and he said he would return it to me, and 1133 he kept me waiting there until six o'clock in the evening, and he didn't come and give it to me back and then he wanted me to sign some papers, and I signed some papers for him, and he wouldn't let me go away, and I had my children with me, so I couldn't wait any longer.

Q. Where were you when you received this ticket, what place in Russia? A. In the City of Schransk, in the State of Protz.

Q. Did you leave that city on a journey to Rotterdam in order to use this ticket on the Northwest Transport Line? A. No, they stopped me in a town by the name of Illowo.

Q. Is that on the German frontier? A. Yes.

1134 Q. When you got to Illowo did you have any conversation with Mr. Woznianski? A. Yes.

Q. What conversation did you have with Mr. Woznianski? A. He wanted me to show him my ticket, show him where I am going to.

Q. What conversation did you have; what did you say and what did he say?

Mr. Beecher: Objection renewed.

A. I told him I didn't have to show him my ticket as I was going to Soldau, the next city from Illowo.

Q. Did you expect to meet any one at Soldau? A.

A cousin of my husband I expected to meet there; he was waiting there for me. I told Mr. Woznianski I didn't have to show him any ticket as I am going to meet my cousin at the next station and we both expect to go to America.

Q. What occurred after that? A. Well, he says, No, you have got to buy a ticket off of me, and he kept me in there and wouldn't let me out.

Q. Go ahead and tell your story? A. He kept me waiting there the whole day until a way in the evening, and I had my two little children with me, there was nothing to eat in the room, not even a drink of water, and he asked me to sign a paper that the ticket 1136 that I had must be sent back and I must buy a ticket off of him, and I didn't want to stay any longer keeping the children with me without a drink of water or without any eatables, so I signed the paper.

Q. Did you write a letter to your husband while at this station? A. Yes.

Q. Is this the letter (showing witness Government Exhibit 56, for identification)? A. Yes (indicating top part of letter).

Q. What language is that written in? A. Yiddish.

Q. When you sent this letter did it have the writing in the lower part of it? A. Yes, the secretary of Woznianski wrote it in my presence. 1137

Q. And after that did you mail the letter, or did you give it to some one there to mail? A. They only asked me for a stamp and they mailed the letter.

Q. Is that the envelope (showing witness envelope)? A. I am not positive, but I think it is. I can't remember all of that. I think because was Woznianski wrote that.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer the letter and envelope in evidence and I will offer a translation of it. She identified the upper part as written by herself and the lower part as written by Mr. Woznianski in her presence.

Mr. Bullowa: The Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company objects to the receipt of the letter on the ground that it is not binding upon these defendants and on the further ground that it is immaterial and incompetent.

Mr. Beers: Objected to on behalf of the Cunard Company as not within the issues presented in the pleading, and incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and not connected with or binding upon the defendants in any way.

Mr. Spooner: Representing my clients I object to the admission of this paper as incompetent, irrelevant, not being within the issues, and upon the same ground I move to strike out the testimony which has been received upon the subject.

Q. After you signed that letter what did you do, Mrs. Beckerman? A. Then he told me I can go home.

Q. Where did you go? A. I went back to my home.

Q. Did you ultimately come to this country? A. Yes, when my husband sent me a ticket.

1140

Q. By what line did you come? A. By the New Amsterdam.

Q. The steamship New Amsterdam? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: Can you state whether or not this translation is correct (addressing the interpreter)?

The Interpreter: Yes, the first part is all right.

1141

LAWSON SANDFORD, recalled:

Direct-examination continued by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Sandford, I haven't your testimony of yesterday written out yet, so I may have to go over some of the same ground. As I recall it I was asking you about the eastbound traffic and the arrangement by which the commercial allowance was paid to the Steamship Lines by the railroads, and the actual way in which that allowance reached the Steamship Companies. As I recall your testimony it was—and correct me if I am wrong—that in regard to the east-

1205 bound business the agent who sold the steamship ticket also sold a railroad ticket to the intending eastbound passenger, and that that ticket was validated by the railroad company, that the passenger paid to the agent who sold these tickets the full published rate of the railroad lines from the inland point to the port of departure, and also the regularly advertised rate of the steamship company from the Atlantic port of departure to the port in Europe or Great Britain; do you follow that? A. Yes. I think you have done very well, indeed, Mr. Dorr, to grasp it as much as you have. In essence you are right, but actually the system of the eastbound booking does not end at the European 1206 port of destination, because for the same reason which has actuated the carriers in—

Q. Just leave out the reasons and state what is done, if you will—is my statement of your testimony correct so far as it goes, that is, the port of arrival at Europe or the point in Great Britain? A. Not absolutely so.

Q. In what respect is it incorrect? A. The passenger, many times a third-class passenger, is either booked from the point of origin in America to his final destination wherever it may be across the sea—

Q. If I may interrupt you, in that event does he pay to the agent at the inland point in this country not only the published rate of the railroad from the inland point to the port of departure and the advertised rate of the steamship from the Atlantic port to the port of arrival on the other side, but also a sum covering inland transportation on the other side?

Mr. Beers: In order to save time I will simply note in the record the objection which I took when Mr. Sandford was last being questioned about these matters. I object to all evidence relating to railroad or passenger associations or commercial allowances as immaterial and irrelevant and not within the issues. 1208

A. Yes. It is necessary to—

Q. Was there anything else that I left out in my description of your testimony? A. I don't think you have fully grasped the method of the booking—

Q. State that again as briefly as you can? A. Because it is not invariably that the steamship agent in the interior for an eastbound booking receives the American inland fare.

Q. That is what I want to get at? A. He may himself, or with the passenger, go to the railway station where the railroad ticket is purchased; sometimes 1209 agents of steamship lines are also agents of railroad companies; there is no hard and fast definite statement that can be made in respect to the operation in each individual case.

Q. In the territory covered by the Southern Pacific Railroad it is true, is it not, that the steamship agents are very frequently also the railroad agents of the Southern Pacific Railroad? A. Very often are agents of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe.

Q. Or of the particular line? A. Yes.

1210 Q. And then the territory covered by the other associations, is that also more or less true? A. It depends largely upon the amount of steamship business originating in a particular town or district, whether it is practicable to find men who can be purely railroad agents or purely steamship agents.

Q. That is, the two offices are combined, the same man is the railroad agent and also the steamship agent? A. Frequently a man who is a steamship agent will become a railroad agent or vice versa.

Q. The only cases then in which the inland railroad fare is not paid over to the agent who arranges for 1211 the eastbound transportation is where a traveller goes to the ticket office of the railroad himself and pays money to the railroad, is that the only case? A. In the majority of cases I should think that the passenger pays the railroad fare to the railroad agent at the point of origin.

Q. Instead of to the steamship agent? A. You see that is business originating in the interior and I am not really sufficiently posted to describe what is an invariable rule; I am not sure there is one.

Q. I am not asking you to testify to an invariable rule; but simply the usual course of business as you have become familiar with it in the years in which you 1212 acted in the capacity you have testified to? A. The only difference I take it between the east and westbound through business is that in the westbound the steamship agent, either in Europe or in America, invariably receives all of the money for the transportation, whereas in America for the eastbound business he may not receive it.

Q. Now, on prepaid westbound business, then, and on cash westbound business, that is the westbound business in which the payments are made in Europe, the passenger pays a sum which covers the inland transportation on the continent or in Great Britain, the advertised steamship rates from the port of departure in Great Britain or the continent and the published railroad rates from New York or other port of arrivals to the inland point of destination? A. That is right.

Q. Is it also true that at these conferences between representatives of the rail lines and the representatives of the ship lines that it was stated by the representatives of the ship lines that they would so control the routing of the eastbound traffic as the representatives of the rail lines should direct?

Mr. Spooner: Isn't that all embodied in some writing or minutes, arrangements made between the railway companies and the steamship lines? 12|4

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as incompetent.

Mr. Dorr: He is certainly competent to testify as to what was said at a conference, even though it is what was stated orally.

Mr. Spooner: It is not shown whether Mr. Sandford was present.

Mr. Dorr: I will develop that further if we find out there was such a conversation.

Mr. Spooner: I think you had better develop that first.

Mr. Dorr: I stand on my question. 12|5

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question.

Mr. Beers: I also object, and on the further ground that it is not within the issues in this suit.

Q. Answer the question and also tell what was done; you have already testified to what took place between the representatives of the rail lines and representatives of the ship lines at meetings at which you have already testified you were present, what was said at these conferences by the representatives of the ship lines, that they would control the routing of the east-

1216 bound traffic as directed by the representatives of the rail lines? A. I think I must have been present at practically all of the meetings between the steamship lines, but the question is an omnibus one; the relations between the steamship lines are not with all the railroads of the United States as a whole; they have to do with different groupings of the railroads.

Q. I will separate my question then; first in regard to the Western Passenger Association and the Southern Pacific? A. The steamship lines said in essence—1217 Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent.

A. (Continuing.) The steamship lines said in essence that they would route the eastbound business and do it in an improved manner over the previous unsatisfactory methods which had existed for many years.

Q. Did they say that they would route it in the way which should be directed by the rail lines? A. They would undertake to do so; but they did not succeed.

Q. They did not succeed? A. No, they made no effort to route passengers by any specific route at the beginning of the relations between the western roads and the steamship lines.

1218 Q. Did they receive instructions from the western roads as to the desires of the western rail lines as to the routing of this eastbound traffic? A. Yes.

Q. Did they endeavor to comply with it? A. It can hardly be said that they did.

Q. They did not endeavor to? A. They did not.

Q. Did they have an arrangement with the western roads by which they were to receive a commercial allowance from this eastbound traffic? A. Yes.

Q. What was the rate of that allowance?

Mr. Spooner: What was the theory of it?

Mr. Dorr: I have not asked that.

Q. What was the rate of that compensation or that allowance? A. It varied geographically.

Q. I am asking you now about the Western Association and the Southern Pacific? A. It varied geographically from the Missouri River gateways to Chicago ten per cent, maximum seventy-five cents, or a value of seventy-five cents.

Q. That covered simply the transportation in the territory of the Western Passenger Association and did not cover any allowance which the ship lines might receive for transportation which occurred in the central passenger territory or the Trunk Line territory? 1220
A. That was supplementary.

Q. That was supplemental to their commercial allowance which they might receive? A. Yes, and for business originating further west seventy-five cents was the maximum.

Q. Seventy-five per cent was the maximum? A. I beg pardon, seventy-five cents, without the percentage, from the point of origin to the Missouri River gateways. The basis for business originating in Canada is substantially about the same.

Q. Do you recall when this—

Mr. Spooner: Can't we make some arrangement under which there shall be a stipu- 1221 lation that this evidence was taken under a general objection?

Mr. Dorr: Certainly.

Mr. Spooner: And it should be the privilege of either or all to object to it except as to the form of questions?

Mr. Dorr: Except as to the form of questions. I will have no objection where the witness is within reach so he may be called in the event that the explanation goes to a matter which can be cured by recalling him, but as to witness such as we had yesterday morning I think that we should have the grounds of the objection at the time.

Mr. Wise: Put it this way: That a general objection is now reserved to every question asked of this witness with the privilege to the defendants or any of them to supplement that objection by specification at any time before the case is submitted to the Court, such specification not to be allowed where they would relate to the form of the question and that objection be noted in the proper place in the record when made.

Q. When did this arrangement for the particular rate allowance which you have mentioned—for the territory which you have mentioned—go into effect? A. In the autumn of 1909.

Q. And how long did it remain in effect? A. It has been running ever since.

Q. It went into effect in the autumn of 1909 and has been in effect ever since? A. Yes.

Mr. Burlingham: Was it reduced to writing?

The Witness: Yes, in a general way; the necessary things were reduced to writing.

Q. Did the conferences of which you were secretary have a copy of that agreement, if there was an agreement reduced to writing? A. Had a full set of all the papers.

Q. And those papers were left with whom? A. With the managing committee.

Q. I show what purports to be minutes or proceedings of the meeting of the Trans-atlantic Passenger conferences with the advisory committee emigrant bureau of the Western Passenger Association, held on November 10th and 11th, 1909, at the rooms of the Trans-atlantic Passenger Conferences, New York, and ask you whether that is a copy of proceedings held on those dates? A. The typing of the—these are undoubtedly the record.

1225

Q. At that time? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer this in evidence subject to any corrections which may subsequently be made in that, if there are any. As far as I know it is a perfectly accurate record.

The Witness: I see it is headed "Tentative Minutes," not official. I don't know that handwriting.

Mr. Dorr We will not offer that part.

1226

The Witness: That looks like Mr. Burnett's handwriting.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence merely the typewritten part.

Mr. Beers: I object to the admission of this paper on the grounds already stated—it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and not within the issues.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 59.

Q. I also show you, Mr. Sandford, a typewritten document entitled "Appendix A" and show you with it the addendum and certain other appendices, and ask you what that document is? A. It is the Western 1227
Passenger Association form of a department, and it seems to refer to the westbound arrangement; it is the westbound arrangement.

Q. Is that one of the agreements you have referred to or a copy of it? A. That is a copy of the westbound, yes; it is stated to be westbound.

Mr. Dorr: I offer this in evidence.

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 60.

Mr. Beers: The same stipulation as to objections to questions as I understand relates to 1228 the objections to the admission of documents tendered for the identification of this witness?

Mr. Dorr: Yes. I wish any objections as to the sufficiency of identification of the documents will be made at this time, the authenticity, or I will consent that any documents which are admitted in evidence shall be admitted subject to correction if it should later appear that there are any errors in them.

Mr. Spooner: The witness testified that this is a form something like it.

1229 The Witness: I think it is a copy of the westbound arrangement.

Mr. Burlingham: That is an agreement containing amendments up to January 26th, 1905.

Q. Before we leave the subject of the eastbound traffic, while this arrangement was in effect did the steamship lines receive the specified commercial allowance from the rail lines? A. Eastbound, westbound?

Q. I am talking merely about the eastbound now? A. I think that all the commissions have been paid.

Q. And the method of payment to the steamship 1230 lines was, as I recall your testimony of yesterday, that the ship lines, or their agents, submitted to the rail lines, vouchers or documents in some form which showed the transportation over the rail line of eastbound passengers who had been booked by the agents of the ship line? A. It would be wise to put in evidence the form of voucher coupon which will explain it.

Q. You will have to let counsel attend to the wisdom of putting in any particular documents and any particular matter, if you will? A. The voucher coupons as I explained yesterday—

Q. But you haven't got these, have you? A. No, I have no papers now.

Q. Then we cannot get it from you. I am asking you whether that in substance was the method that was used? A. Yes, on a regular form of voucher coupon showing the character of the steamship transportation issued to the passenger or passengers and below the form of railroad transportation sold to the same people, duly validated by the issuing railroad agent.

Q. Do you recall whether or not a minute was adopted by the American Atlantic Conference here 1232 in New York as to what part of this commercial allowance might be allowed or might be paid by the steamship lines to their booking agent and to their general agent; do you recall whether or not that matter was taken up in the conference? A. Yes.

Q. I show you what purports to be minute number 184 of the meeting of the American Atlantic Conference of November 9th, 1909, and ask you whether that is the minute to which you refer? A. That minute relates to the east and westbound rail commercial allowance and—

Q. Is that the minute to which you referred? A. Yes.

Q. Does that refer exclusively to eastbound or also 1233 to other westbound traffic? A. It represents east and westbound, but it did not become operative.

Q. That is what I was going to ask you; was this minute put in effect? A. No.

Q. It never was put into effect? A. Well the—

Q. Was it ever acted upon? A. No.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer in evidence minute number 184 dated November 9th, 1909, of the American Atlantic Conference, being one of the minutes which has been heretofore identified by Mr. Sandford as the minutes of the Atlantic Conference.

The Witness: The minutes of that meeting were not confirmed.

Mr. Dorr: I offer it so that a subsequent examination may be intelligible. The whole exhibit is marked Exhibit 25 for identification; I will offer in evidence minute No. 184 appearing in Exhibit No. 25 for identification and ask that it be marked Exhibit No. 61 in evidence and copied into the record by the stenographer.

1235 Mr. Beers: I object to its admission upon the ground that it is irrelevant and not within the issues and incompetent.

Minute marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 61.

Q. Now, Mr. Sandford, this arrangement you say never actually went into effect for eastbound traffic? A. That minute was not confirmed; why I cannot now recall.

Q. Confirmed by whom? A. It was the custom to make up a set of proceedings and before they were declared operative those who were interested in them were given an opportunity to say whether or not they cared for that particular record.

1236 Q. It appears in this particular minute, does it not, that it shall be referred at once to Europe with the request that it be made a by-law of any arrangement in Europe, is that what you refer to? A. No, the whole document.

Q. In this particular minute? A. I mean the entire minutes.

Q. It shall at once be referred to Europe with the request that it be made a by-law of any arrangement in Europe, and as the result of correspondence with Europe you found it had not been carried out by arrangement in Europe? A. I did not take it up at all. I submitted the proposition which you see was on a different process from the confirmed proceedings, and confirmed proceedings of that set of minutes never issued so far as I was concerned as secretary. I had, therefore, nothing to transmit in the matter at all to anyone. 1237

Q. You mean it never was transmitted to Europe? A. As far as I am concerned no. I could take no steps to carry out—

Q. Did your office send this minute over to Europe? A. The custom of awaiting confirmation proceedings were to send one copy to each of the gentlemen interested and await their action. 1238

Q. The confirmation proceedings that you refer to are the confirmation proceedings of the New York conference? A. Surely.

Q. And not the London or European confirmation? A. The confirmation which I received was by the representatives present, or if occasionally a representative—

Q. In New York? A. In America, yes.

Q. Was any arrangement made by which the members of the conference regulated the amount of the commercial allowances which they received on eastbound traffic from the Western Passenger Association territory which was to be allowed to the sub-agents or to the booking agents? A. The regulation was under discussion for both east and westbound business from time to time and by March of this year the standardization was arranged for business originating in America, and I think that since at the London Conference the circulars of the lines to their agents have issued. 1239

Q. Well, then, between the adoption of this eastbound commercial allowance agreement between the railroads and the ship lines which you represented or 1240 which you were representing in the conferences of which you were secretary, between the adoption of that agreement in 1909 and March of this year— A. Yes.

Q. There was no rule or regulation adopted by the ship lines as to the amount of the commercial allowance, if any, which they should allow to the booking agents? A. In general eastbound—

Q. Can't you answer that? A. I can't say yes or no to it.

Q. Can you say yes and then qualify it or no and then qualify it? A. My explanation will take ten 1241 words.

Q. It seems to me that question ought to be answered yes or no? A. If you were to read it again I will try to answer it.

Q. I haven't any objection to the qualifying of it by explanation? A. May I hear it again?

Q. (Question read.) Between the autumn of 1909 when this commercial allowance with the Western Passenger Association went into effect in March of this year? A. No, not to the best of my knowledge, but I believe—

Q. Was there any working understanding? A. I think that practically all of the lines allowed their 1242 agents on eastbound business one-half of the amount eventually received from the railroad; some lines may have allowed the balance to the general passenger agent in charge of the territory or may have retained one-quarter for the head office at the sea port as a slight compensation for the clerical labor involved in handling these accounts.

Q. There was no agreement as to what should be done with it among the lines? A. There was no standard basis.

Q. So that any line might do as they pleased for that matter as to how much it should retain for itself and as to how much it should pay out to the booking agent or the general passenger agent? A. They had a range of prices from Montreal all along the Atlantic coast with the numerous lines and railroads radiating from each port to all parts of Europe; the idea was to standardize and—

Q. That is, that all the lines should act in the same way in regard to the matter? A. Making a uniform basis covering the specific tender and if any part of that rail commercial allowance which was remitted to the booking agent should in any wise be divided, directly or indirectly, with the passenger or anybody 1244 else the agents would be immediately cancelled by all lines.

Mr. Dorr: Move to strike that out as not responsive.

Q. Just answer the question, if you will, Mr. Sandford; was there any understanding or agreement which was in fact valid by which all the steamship lines which were members of the conferences of which you were secretary allotted a certain portion of the commercial allowance which they received under this agreement with the Western Passenger Association as to eastbound traffic to their booking agents? A. To the best of my knowledge it was not until about March of this 1245 year.

Q. And what was the arrangement which was adopted at that time? A. To standardize on the basis I have just stated.

Q. That is on the basis of—? A. One-half to the booking agent.

Q. One-half to the booking agent in the field and the rest should be disposed of as the lines saw fit? A. Either entire to the general passenger agent having jurisdiction in the territory where the booking occurred or a quarter, in which event the remaining quarter would be retained by the steamship offices.

1246 Q. But the steamship line was not in any event to retain more than one-quarter, is that what I am to understand, or it was at liberty, if it saw fit, to retain half? A. Yes, absolutely.

Q. It was at liberty to retain the half? A. Yes.

Q. Now, go to the central passenger district on eastbound traffic, what were the arrangements with the Central Passenger Association in regard to allowances on that traffic; when were they made and are they still in effect; just give us the history of it? A. It was made in the autumn of 1908, ten per cent, maximum $1.50.

1247 Q. That also merely covers the allowance in the transportation in the territory of the Central Passenger Association? A. Either originating in or passing through.

Q. That is, exclusive of the commercial allowance on transportation in the territory of other associations? A. Separate entirely.

Q. Was that commercial allowance collected substantially in the same way as the commercial allowances on the western territory? A. From the railroads eventually on the production of coupons validated.

Q. Substantially the same method? A. Substantially.

1248 Q. And the transportation which originated in that territory, the bookings were made substantially in the same way? A. Practically.

Q. How long did that arrangement remain in force? A. It is still in effect as far as I know; it was in April.

Q. Was that arrangement embodied in any more formal agreement than what purports to be letters exchanged between the steamship lines and the passenger associations appearing in the Government Exhibit No. 46? A. The letters are the record.

Q. There is no other written record of the transactions that you know of? A. No.

Q. Was there any agreement between the members of the conference lines as to the disposition of the commercial allowance on eastbound traffic which was received from the lines operating in the central passenger association district? A. The circumstances are identical practically with the narrative I have just given you about the general eastbound situation existing in the west.

Q. That is by the same minute 184 there was a proposition which was made but not at that time confirmed and the substance of which was later adopted in March of this year? A. For business originating 1250 in America.

Q. Now, in regard to the trunk line association on eastbound traffic, Mr. Sandford, what arrangements were made in regard to that, if any, and when? A. There were none.

Q. Had there ever been any to your knowledge? A. No.

Q. Had there been negotiations with the trunk line association with regard to such allowances on behalf of the steamship companies? A. For eastbound business originating in the trunk line territory?

Q. Yes? A. Nothing of any consequence.

Q. Are there any other agreements in any other territories or any other associations? A. Eastbound. 1251

Q. Eastbound, yes; in the southeastern for instance, or the southwestern. Do you want to look at the map (handing witness map)? A. Eastbound none.

Q. There was no arrangement as to southwestern or as to southeastern on eastbound? A. I think that the arrangements with the Western Passenger Association lines covered business originating in some parts of Texas.

Q. That is the Southern Pacific arrangement did, did it not? A. I think so; I don't care to testify about that; I do not feel competent.

1252

Q. That would be your understanding in the matter? A. I am hazy on these details.

Q. Now, as to the southeastern? A. None.

Q. There were no arrangements as to southeastern? A. There were arrangements; whether they are joined with the American railway groups or not I am not familiar with at the moment; there are arrangements for business originating in Canada.

Q. But on traffic originating in the southeastern or southwestern territory which passed through the territory of the western or central passenger association there would be the allowances for transportation in those territories, would there not? A. What little business could pass, maybe they would, but there is very little business from the southeastern territory.

Q. That would come up by steamship lines? A. There is very little business.

Q. When you speak of the territory covered by the Western Passenger Association have you had in mind that territory which is designated in white on this map, but which does not have any special application on the colored key? A. The answer made in regard to the commercial allowances west of Chicago and St. Louis was intended to cover all of the western territory because, as I stated, that west of the Missouri River gateways, the commercial allowance east, of eastbound, is seventy-five cents up to those gateways.

Q. Commercial allowances were actually received by the ship lines from the lines operating in the central passenger association territory, were they not, in pursuance of the agreement which you have mentioned? A. Yes.

Q. And have been and were up to the time your connection with the matter ceased? A. Yes.

Q. And may be now, so far as you know? A. I think I testified yesterday that the clearance of all of these routine matters were not done by the conference office, but by the individual lines.

Q. Yes, I understand that. Was there any commercial allowance on eastbound traffic originating in the New England Passenger Association territory? A. No.

Q. How about the Eastern Canadian Passenger Association territory; I suppose none of that traffic came through Atlantic ports of the United States? A. No.

Q. Then, as to the Eastern Canadian Passenger Association territory you have no distinct recollection one way or the other? A. There is probably a commercial allowance taking in both of those—I think there is a mixture of territory, there, part under the 1256 jurisdiction of the so-called central passenger and part under some other Canadian Passenger Association. You see they have a mark here on this map itself.

Q. It is a certain joint territory? A. Joint territory.

Q. Now, in regard to the westbound traffic, did you have any arrangement with the passenger associations as to that westbound traffic? A. Yes, we discussed that fully yesterday, the arrangement made in 1897.

Q. I want to run over it so as to get it in chronological order, if we can; that arrangement was made in 1897? A. Yes.

Q. You are sure it was not made in 1894 and the supplemental agreement in 1897? A. I think the so-called 1257 through booking route of the steamship lines was established about 1894, but that there were no relations between carriers until 1897.

Q. That is, the steamship companies arrangement for the—how do you describe it? A. Through booking.

Q. There was no arrangement with rail lines until 1897? A. No.

Q. What did that agreement of 1897 provide? A. You have it in the exhibit marked and corrected up to 1895.

Q. State briefly your recollection of it so that it will appear in the record, if you will; what is your recollection of it? A. Simply that the steamship lines through booked—that their orders for inland transportation are honored by the railroads who bill them in due course.

Q. And what provision was made for a commercial allowance, if any? A. The commercial allowance at present is—I am speaking in general terms—

Q. Give it to us as it was in 1897, if you can, and then trace down any changes, if there have been any? A. Yes, there have been one or two slight changes.

Q. What is your best recollection as to the amount of the commercial allowance provided in 1897? A. Ten per cent, with a maximum which varies in different western territories, depending upon the cost of the rails booked; I think that maximum today in any part of the United States or Canada is $4.

Q. That is the maximum in the western territory or the maximum for all territories? A. Any territory.

Q. Do you mean a maximum for inland transportation in western territories, or the maximum of $4 for all commercial allowances on all territories from the Atlantic coast to the western seaboard? A. I think the maximum on New Orleans is probably $2, although the rail fare is a trifle over $20.

Q. I think we are at cross purposes, Mr. Sandford; when you speak of a maximum of $4— A. Let us confine that to the main body of the western states.

Q. You are referring merely to the territory included in the Western Passenger Association? A. And also the trans-continental so-called.

Q. But you are not referring to transportation of westbound traffic through the Trunk Line Association territory, or through the Central Passenger Association territory, are you? A. That applies to the through rail transportation that commercial allowance; the commercial allowance is a percentage on the rate with a maximum; the rail fare from New York to San Francisco is about, say $65, the emigrant rate; the commission would be ten per cent, maximum $4.

Mr. Spooner: Do you claim this is within the issues made by the pleading?

Mr. Dorr: Yes, in this way; we charge in that bill that various and divers other methods by which the defendant lines sought to compete unfairly and put out of business the independent lines. Now, we take it that this is one of the most effective methods that the defendant steamship lines adopted. You will recall in the exhibit which I put in this morning there is an express provision in the agreement between the Western Passenger Association and the conference lines that such a commercial allowance shall not be paid to any steamship line which is not a member of the conference. That is, the defendant lines were enabled by those means to secure from the railroads certain sums which they made the railroads agree not to pay to independent lines, even though those independent lines rendered the same kind of services, and the Government shall urge most strongly that that was unfair competition, and was only possible by reason of the combination of these steamship lines. But for the combination of the steamship lines and through concerted action such an arrangement, the allowance itself could not have been obtained and certainly could not have been made exclusive as against any particular line.

Mr. Spooner: That is a frank and entire statement and about the most illuminating thing that has happened since the examination began.

1264 Q. Let me see if we understand each other. I understood that on the eastbound traffic where you spoke of a certain commercial allowance, for instance, from the Western Passenger Association, that that allowance merely applied to the transportation which took place in the territory of that Western Passenger Association, and that there was another allowance which was also received by the steamship companies involved out of the transportation which occurred, for instance, in the territory of the Central Passenger Association; am I right in that? A. I think your statement conflicts, the latter part with the first part. I 1265 think I know what you want.

Q. Then tell me? A. If a passenger originates in the City of San Francisco and is bound for Prostken, for instance, he is provided with transportation through, and in making settlement along the line there are naturally various zones, the western zone, the ocean zone and the European zone. Now, for bookkeeping purposes there have to be sundry columns for the through transaction; when you take a railroad trip from New York to San Francisco you have a coupon ticket, without being coupon all the way through. This is what the arrangement means; the railroad has to have through booking arrangements, otherwise pas-1266 sengers would get lost; the whole purpose of this arrangement is to simplify the travel of the third class passengers in the same way you travel if you go to San Francisco on a coupon ticket.

Q. Cannot you confine yourself to the point to which my questions are addressed? A. I am doing the best I can.

Q. Now, to come back to the eastbound traffic, you spoke of a certain arrangement for a commercial allowance by the Western Passenger Association, the allowance which you spoke of was an allowance upon the transportation which occurred in the territory of that association, was it not? A. I will have to answer it by the illustration that if the coupon book is issued by the New York Central on a line that it does not own it naturally pays that line for the ticket.

Q. Now, after having spoken in parables, suppose you answer my question? A. I thought you would be familiar with the railroad tickets.

Q. You can assume complete ignorance on my part of everything? A. It is awful hard to explain this steamship business in two or three days.

Q. Now, answer this question; when you speak of the commercial allowance being allowed by the lines 1268 operating in the Western Passenger Association territory, that allowance is merely for the transportation in that particular territory, is it not? A. Precisely.

Q. And a separate allowance is made for that part of the through transportation which occurs in the territory of the Central Passenger Association, is it not? A. Yes; as a matter of fact two voucher coupons are used, one for the western and one for the central.

Q. Now, in regard to the westbound traffic, when you speak of the commercial allowance being made by the lines operating the western passenger association, are you referring to an allowance made for that part of the transportation which occurs in the territory in which the lines which are members of that association 1269 operate? A. I am getting rather bewildered, Mr. Dorr.

Q. I will reframe my question? A. Will you let me explain in my way what I think you want to know?

Q. You seem to have bad luck in guessing what I have in mind? A. It is pretty hard.

Q. In regard to the westbound traffic, is there the same division of commercial allowance according to the territory through which the transportation takes place as in the east or a similar division? A. Yes; I believe—

1270 Q. Now then, we will begin with the east and go west and see if we can get the thing a little clearer, leave the western passenger association Agreement now and come to the Trunk Line Association territory. Was there, during the period to which we have referred, any agreement between the steamship lines which you have mentioned and the rail lines operating in the Trunk Line Association territory as to a commercial allowance on westbound traffic? A. The Trunk Line—

Q. Was there any such agreement; can't you answer that, yes or no? A. There was no agreement
1271 up to a short time ago with the Trunk Line Association, but they voluntarily paid a proportion based upon their rate of rail commercial allowance for the business passing through their territory and destined beyond it.

Q. When did the railroad lines operating in the Trunk Line Association territory begin, so far as you know, to pay a so-called commercial allowance to the steamship lines on westbound traffic destined to points in the Trunk Line Association territory or passing through that territory to— A. I have answered, the passing through.

Q. When did it begin I am asking you now? A.
1272 Before I was born, I think.

Q. You don't know anything about it? A. It is too far back.

Q. When did you first have knowledge of such an arrangement? A. I have known of it ever since I have been in the business.

Mr. Spooner: What do you mean by that?

The Witness: As I said a long time ago, the Trunk Line Association participated in the commercial allowance payment on westbound emigrant business based upon their rail fare for all passengers passing through and destined beyond Trunk Line Association's termini.

Q. I will reframe my last question and divide it into two questions; now, Mr. Sandford, was there in 1893, the practice or an agreement or understanding by which the Trunk Line Association paid to the ship lines which are represented in the conference which we have mentioned, a so-called commercial allowance on westbound traffic to points destined in the territory of the Trunk Line Passenger Association; if you know of any such arrangement or practice? A. At one time, the Trunk Line did pay on what is called—

Q. When was that, do you know? A. I cannot tell you the date—on what is called Trunk Line local points.

Q. That is what I am asking about, Trunk Line local points? A. Commencing in February, 1912, they resumed that payment, the ten per cent payment on rail fares to points in the Trunk Line local territory in excess of $2.50.

Q. Was there any maximum on that? A. There could be none.

Q. And that commercial allowance was—is there any provision among the members of the conference as to the disposition of that commercial allowance by the ship lines? A. Yes, I think that was completed in April.

Q. What is that arrangement? A. One-half to the booking agent.

Q. Now, as to the westbound traffic not destined to local points, but passing through Trunk Line territory, what, if any, arrangement has existed as to that and state, if you can, its history? A. We are talking of the Central Passenger territory?

Q. No, I am talking of the Trunk Line Association; you have already given some testimony about it, but I want the through traffic passing through the Trunk Line Association territory? A. For this business destined to points beyond the Trunk Line local 1276 territory, the steamship lines receive up to the gateways of the western passenger territory from the Trunk Line, a commercial allowance of 10 per cent, maximum $1.50, varying; from New Orleans I think a maximum of $2.

Q. How long has that arrangement been in force? A. Many years.

Q. And it has not varied substantially in its terms? A. No.

Q. Is there any arrangement or agreement or understanding among the ship lines as to the disposition of that commercial allowance? A. I think I am only 1277 speaking hearsay, because I don't know whether these plans were put in operation; when I left the conference, they were not completed; one-half to the booking agent and at least a quarter to the general passenger agent, some lines retaining one-quarter for themselves.

Q. Prior to that time, there wasn't any agreement or understanding among the lines? A. There had been rather a chaotic business, some lines paying out the full amounts to the booking agents, and other lines not doing so.

Q. To come to the Central Passenger Association, was there any agreement? A. I have known that 1278 there was no arrangement with the Central Passenger Association direct.

Q. Let me put my question direct, if you will; coming to the Central Passenger Association territory and the rail lines operating therein, was there any agreement between the ship lines and those rail lines as to a commercial allowance on traffic destined to local points in the territory covered by that association? A. No, my previous answer covers your question; that Trunk Line Association—

Q. I can understand; that is enough; your answer is quite clear, I think. Now, was there any agreement with the Central Passenger Association as to through traffic passing west and through traffic passing through Western Passenger Association points? A. No.

Q. For the same reason you formerly explained? A. You did not let me finish my explanation.

Q. Well, the record stands as it is? A. You will have a nice looking record.

Q. The Central Passenger Association territory merely goes to the gateways of the western territory, or is there a border line there? A. There may be some common territory; I am not sure without looking at the map. 1280

Q. But there is no special agreement as to that common territory as far as you know? A. As far as the steamship lines are concerned?

Q. Yes, as far as the commercial allowances go? A. As to the amount to the sub-agent?

Q. Yes? A. I think it all was settled on a standard basis, one-half to the booking agent now all over the territory of the United States.

Q. Then coming to the Western Passenger Association territory, what, if any, arrangement or agreement exists, or has existed, between the rail lines and the ship lines covering transportation in that territory? A. The arrangements made in 1897. 1281

Q. Which you have previously mentioned? A. Previously mentioned.

Q. What do they provide for? A. I have already stated that.

Q. State it here again so that we may have all this information together? A. I will see if I can recollect what I said before.

Q. State the facts? A. I don't know.

Q. As you now recall it? A. I wouldn't attempt with the document before you.

Q. Give me your best recollection as to what the agreement was between the lines operating in the Western Passenger Association territory and the ship lines as to westbound traffic and commercial allowances? A. The arrangements are in writing and I attempted once before today to state my best recollection of them, and I would not care to try it again; I might not hit the exact and same phraseology.

Mr. Spooner: They are all in writing?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Those in respect to which you have 1283 testified and which you now testify to are absolutely in writing?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: We object to it on the grounds I have already stated.

Q. Will you kindly answer my question? Give me now your recollection? A. The steamship lines through book their passengers—

Q. As to commercial allowance? A. They receive from the railways who honor their inland orders a bill with the rail orders which the steamships issue as a voucher and they receive in due course or at the same time, the commercial allowance which we have 1284 so laboriously developed.

Q. Now, will you state whether that commercial allowance has been the same through the period from 1897 down to the present time or whether it has varied? A. Are we talking of the Western Passenger Association?

Q. Yes?. A. There has been a basis of 10 per cent with a varying maximum; the maximum at present is $4 to the western part of the United States; the maximum in British Columbia is $4, in the Province of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, I think it is $2.

Q. Varied substantially or— A. Downward.

Q. It has degrees? A. Yes.

Q. Do the ship lines then receive from the rail lines which operate in the territory of the Trunk Line Association, the Central Passenger Association and Western Passenger Association commercial allowances on westbound business destined to points in the Western Traffic Association territory, both from the Trunk Line Association and from the western lines operating in the Western Passenger Association; do you get that? A. I understand. The Trunk Lines, I think, settle their operations with the steamship lines direct, also as initial carriers for the Central territory; the western railroads own settlements with the steamship lines upon presentation of the voucher. 1286

Q. And the $4 maximum of which you speak is in addition on westbound traffic to, we will say, points in the very far west—is it in addition to the $1.50 maximum which the ship lines receive from the Trunk Line Association? A. No.

Q. It is not in addition? A. No; that is the maximum allowance on a through ticket.

Q. That is the maximum of the joint commercial allowance, or the whole of the commercial allowance allowed by the Trunk Line Association and the Western Passenger Association? A. That is the sum total for a through ticket to any point. 1287

Q. Is there any arrangement, or has there been any arrangement among the ship lines which you have mentioned as to the disposition of the commercial allowances, so-called, received from lines operating in the western passenger territory? A. I think I have testified several times before this morning that I believe—

Q. I am referring now to the westbound traffic and not to the east? A. I believe that you can find 1288 circulars now in the hands of all agents notifying them on the part of the lines employing them individually that the rail commercial allowance to through points is 5 per cent of the rail money, and that they may deduct that rail commercial allowance when remitting for the railroad ticket.

Q. How long has that agreement or understanding been in effect as to this westbound traffic in the Western Passenger Association district? A. The standardization?

Q. How long has the arrangement or understanding which you have just referred to in answer to 1289 my last question as to the disposition of the commercial allowance from the lines operating in the Western Passenger Association territory on westbound traffic been in operation? A. It is possibly a month, provided the action was completed.

Q. Was there any understanding or arrangement prior to that time among the various lines as to the disposition of this commercial allowance? A. A general basis, but—

Q. You don't know whether at the present time it is existing or not? A. No, but I think so.

Q. What is your information? A. I think so; I have not even any information.

1290 Q. You knew some such arrangement was adopted, didn't you? A. I was trying to put it into operation when I resigned.

Q. And you have since seen circulars? A. No; I have not.

Q. Or been told of the issuance of circulars? A. I have not even been supplied with those; I am doing other business.

Q. Prior to this agreement that you were endeavoring to put in operation a few months ago, was there any understanding between the lines as to the disposition of this commercial allowance which I mentioned in my last question? A. Probably, up to within a period of five or six years the lines were working on a basis referred to; in the past four or five years there has been deviations, but if the action contemplated has been taken, the basis is now standard.

Q. Referring to Exhibit No. 59, the minutes of the joint meeting of the Trans-Atlantic Passenger Conference with the advisory committee of the emigrant bureau of the Western Passenger Association— A. I think that was a committee meeting, Mr. Dorr.

Q. I call your attention to the paragraph on page 1292
15 of Exhibit No. 59 which reads as follows: "In reference to the payment of commissions to the Northwest Transport Company, the understanding was reached that the question would be taken up with the Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific and Inter-Colonial Railways, with a view to having them discontinue the payments of commission through Canadian ports to outside lines." Do you recall what action was taken by the Canadian Pacific thereafter in regard to that matter? A. No, I do not.

Q. With these lines relative to that matter? A. No.

Q. I show you Government Exhibit No. 13 for 1293 identification which purports to be a letter addressed to you under date of February 28th, 1907, by C. B. Richard & Company, general agents for the Russian Volunteer Fleet; will you look at that and I ask you whether you ever received the original of that letter? A. It is a typical letter; I think I must have had it; there were numerous letters from Mr. Richard and I had many conversations with him.

Q. Did you write any reply to this letter, Exhibit No. 13? A. Either verbal or in writing I did.

1294 Lawson Sandford

Mr. Dorr: I offer the letter, Exhibit No. 13 for identification, in evidence.

Mr. Deuel: Objected to on behalf of the Russian East Asiatic Line.

Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

Exhibit 13 for identification received in evidence.

Q. Have you any copy of the answer that you sent? A. No.

Q. If you sent an answer in writing, would you 1295 have a copy? A. I have no access to the files of papers.

Q. It would be among the files of the conference papers, would it not? A. I don't know.

Q. Did you keep copies of the letters which you wrote as secretary of the conference? A. As a rule, yes.

Q. Would you keep in the ordinary course of business a copy of a reply to a letter on this subject matter? A. I think so.

Q. So that if you wrote a reply to this letter, it would be in the ordinary course in the files of the conference which you left in the office of the conference when you ceased to be secretary? A. I cannot 1296 be sufficiently positive.

Q. I am talking about the ordinary course of business? A. Because it was testified yesterday that after a subject had apparently ended, we usually destroyed papers that were no longer of use to us.

Q. When the Russian Volunteer Fleet went out of business you did regard the subject matter of this correspondence at an end, I suppose? A. I don't know what they did.

Q. Did you destroy the correspondence relative to the Russian Volunteer Fleet which you had? A. I don't know.

Q. If you did not destroy it, it would still be in the ordinary course, in possession of the conference? A. Yes. I might say if a letter like that was received and transmitted to the lines interested, it is possible that they made no reply.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the subject matter of that letter was taken up at a meeting of the Continental Conference in New York? A. I don't know whether it was or not. Mr. Richard wrote us a great many letters and made a great many threats.

Q. What steps did you take to investigate the complaint which Mr. Richard made in this particular letter? A. My duty would simply be to transmit a copy of the letter to the lines apparently interested. 1298

Q. Do you know of any investigations which were made as to the character of these statements? A. No.

Q. If such investigations were made, would they be ordinarily put in the minutes of the conference at which the discussion took place? A. There would be no fixed rules for handling it. I think Mr. Richard's communications were usually not answered by the lines.

Mr. Spooner: I want to make a general objection to the minutes on the ground that they are incompetent and irrelevant, and sub-1306 ject to the right of the defendants under the stipulation hereinbefore entered into to make hereafter objections to the whole or any part thereof specially.

Q. Mr. Sandford, we will go back once more to that arrangement between the ship lines and the railroads on westbound traffic; is there an understanding or an agreement between the ship lines which you have mentioned and the rail lines as to the routing of the westbound passengers which are transported to this country by the ship lines?

1307 Mr. Beers: I renew my objection to this line of testimony.

A. Western or Central or Trunk Line?

Q. Well, as to any of them? A. The understanding is—

Q. I have not asked that? A. There is—

Q. What was the idea? A. Our absolute clear understanding.

Q. With which of the lines? A. With each group of railroads.

Q. Do the orders which the steamship company issue prepaid or cash for westbound traffic, designate by what rail line the inland transportation in this country on westbound traffic shall be had? A. The invariable custom is to route the business in accordance with the wish of the passenger.

1308

Q. That does not answer the question. Pay attention to what I am saying, if you will; do the orders on railroads on westbound traffic, whether prepaid or cash, issued by the ship lines, designate the rail lines which shall do the inland transportation in this country? A. No, not as a general thing.

Q. That is enough, unless it is inaccurate? A. It is not a fair answer.

Q. Then go ahead? A. What did I say?

(Answer read.)

Q. Is that true as it stands? A. No. The request for specific routing by a passenger is always observed by the railroads.

Q. It is true as a general thing, is it not, that the rail line is not designated? A. It is not designated.

Q. That is true as a general thing? A. Yes.

Q. What did you mean just now when you said it was not accurate? A. You asked me for the general habit of doing business?

Q. Yes, and you gave it to me, did you not? A. The general habit is to issue a rail order.

Q. As a general thing, the rail line is not designated unless the passenger—

Q. On the ship line order? A. Unless the passenger elects to travel by a certain route

Q. Now, on the arrival of the westbound passenger at this or at other Atlantic ports, do the ship lines make any designation of the rail route which the passenger shall take? A. Not as a general rule.

Q. So that when the passenger arrives here, the steerage passenger arrives here, and is taken off the ship and delivered to the immigration station, the immigration authorities, the rail line by which he shall travel in inland transportation is not yet designated? A. No.

Q. But the group of lines over which he may travel is governed by those lines with which the steamship lines have that agreement, is it not? A. The railroads attend to the routing.

Q. I am coming to that presently. If a rail line is not a party to the agreements which you have mentioned, then is the general order of the steamship line which it gives to this passenger good for transportation on that line? A. I would not be able to give you a good answer to that question.

Q. Cannot you answer that? A. I cannot give you the answer that you want.

Q. Well, all I want is the truth? A. Because there is not an answer.

Q. You mean because there are no such lines? A. No, because the situation does not arise. The steamship lines in making an arrangement with the railways, leave to the railways themselves the entire say as to what railways shall participate in the arrangement.

Q. You mean as to what— A. That it is not a steamship question; that it is a railroad question; a steamship man cannot answer that question.

1313 Q. You have been intimately connected with this business, and as much so as any man in this city, have you not, Mr. Sandford? A. Not so much.

Q. But you have been intimately associated with this business and as much so as any man in this city, have you not, Mr. Sanford? A. Not so much.

Q. But you have been intimately associated with it for fifteen years? A. I have watched the development of the system of the railroad business with a great deal of interest.

Q. And have made quite a course of study of it? A. I have.

Q. Now, then, let me come back to my original question; the ship lines issue certain rail orders to 1314 their passengers, whether they are prepaid or cash, do they not, for westbound traffic? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you have stated that those rail orders are given for inland transportation, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. At times it is true, is it not, that there have been lines, rail lines, which carried steerage inland traffic which were not parties to the agreements with the ship lines which you have mentioned? A. I don't know. The routing of inland business is too complicated for steamship—

Q. How about the Grand Trunk, has that always been a party, that you have mentioned? A. Steamship lines have always accepted Grand Trunk listing of steamship orders and paid the Grand Trunk.

Q. Have what? A. Have always accepted Grand Trunk bills for steamship orders listed by the Grand Trunk.

Q. How about the Canadian Northern? A. That is a Canadian proposition, and not an initial line at the United States ports.

Q. No, but how about that; you through route to Canadian points, do you not? A. That is a Canadian question, not a United States question.

Q. I am asking you about the fact? A. I have answered the question.

Q. The point is what is the fact; are your rail orders given over the Canadian Line? A. That has never come up. I should say, yes.

Q. That is, you think if the question did come up, they would be honored? A. Such requisitions would be honored, yes.

Q. I think you testified already that you had an arrangement with the railroad; is it a part of this arrangement with these various passenger associations that the routing of the emigrant for westbound traffic and inland transportation shall be controlled by the routing committee, or the committee of the various passenger associations? A. It is quite understood that that is the way the business is done, except when specific request for a routing is made by a passenger or in behalf of a passenger.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence letter of the Holland-Amerika Line, under date of May 29th, 1906, from the home office to the New York office.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 81.

1318 That is objected to as incompetent and irrelevant and generally on the stipulation heretofore mentioned.

Q. Mr. Sandford, I call your attention to letter of May 29th, 1906, Petitioner's Exhibit 81, and to reference contained therein to the Continental Agreement of 1898; can you tell me whether you ever saw that Continental Agreement of 1898? A. I think I have seen a copy of that agreement; I don't think I ever had one.

Q. Where did you see it? A. In New York.

1319 Q. Who showed it to you? A. I don't remember now.

Q. Did you see it at the office of one of the lines or at the conference office? A. These matters were often talked about at the lunch tables and elsewhere and in the conference office.

Recess taken until 2 P. M.

Afternoon Session.

LAWSON SANDFORD recalled.

1320 Direct-examination continued by Mr. Dorr:

Mr. Dorr: Senator Spooner, do you desire to cross-examine Mr. Malinowsky?

Mr. Spooner: He is the gentleman who was examined yesterday?

Mr. Dorr: He is the gentleman at New Britain.

Mr. Spooner: I want to cross-examine him probably, but I am not ready to do it now; can't we arrange that if either side wishes to recall for cross-examination or further cross-examination, the witnesses called by either side and sworn, that you will bring them if they are in this country?

Mr. Dorr: I haven't the slightest objection to that, as to a witness here in New York, but the witnesses out of town, it is a hardship to them to bring them here a second time. In this particular case if the witness hasn't any objection I haven't. Do you mind coming back Mr. Malinowsky, some other day, and get a separate mileage and separate witness's fee?

1322 Mr. Malinowsky: If I have to come back I will come back.

Mr. Dorr: Are any of the other counsel ready to cross-examine Mr. Malinowsky at the present time?

Mr. Spooner: I may want to cross-examine him some day, and I may not want to cross-examine him at all.

Q. Mr. Sandford, referring again to Government Exhibit 81, this letter of May 29th, 1906, what is your recollection as to whether or not there was a pool agreement in existence in May, 1906, relating to the North Atlantic Steerage Traffic to which the British Lines were a party?

1323

Mr. Beers: It is understood that this evidence is offered over the objection I noted at the outset as to evidence of agreements other than "AA"?

Mr. Dorr: Yes; that is understood.

A. My recollection is—

Mr. Spooner: Was such an agreement in writing?

The Witness: I don't know. I was in the Cunard then.

Q. Answer the question the best you can? A. I don't know.

Mr. Spooner: You say you don't know?

The Witness: I don't know.

Q. When did you enter the employ of the Cunard? A. November 1st, 1903.

Q. At the time you entered the employ of the Cunard was there a pool agreement covering the North Atlantic Steerage Traffic to which the British Lines were parties? A. I think not.

Q. Has there been at any time such an agreement to your knowledge prior to 1903 other than the Agree-
1325 ment of 1892, which I showed you yesterday? A. I am not familiar with the Agreement of 1892. I don't know whether the British Lines had participated in any European arrangements for pools prior to that time.

Mr. Spooner: That is, you say you don't know?

Q. You don't know of any such arrangement? A. I am quite sure I do not.

Q. Were the British Lines at that time members of the conferences of which you were secretary? A. Prior to 1903?

Q. Yes? A. Yes.

1326 Q. Were they members of those conferences in 1903? A. In 1903 the British lines were maintaining in America—

Mr. Spooner: Are you going to testify to an agreement?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: In writing?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: I object to it as incompetent.

Q. Have you got a copy of it? A. I have no copy, but you have one in the exhibits.

Q. Which one are you referring to now, the one that is already in evidence? A. The North Atlantic Passenger Conference, the general rules of 1906.

Q. We are talking now about 1903? A. 1896—I beg your pardon. In 1903 I don't know what arrangement existed between the British Lines beyond the North Atlantic Passenger Conference maintained in the United States and Canada.

Q. What were the members of the North Atlantic Conference at that time—who were the members?

Mr. Spooner: At what time?

Mr. Dorr: 1903.

1328

Mr. Spooner: There is a written agreement which showed the members?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as incompetent and not the best evidence.

Mr. Dorr: If the defendants desire to produce the documents that show the membership of the Conference Lines in 1903 I have no objection, otherwise I will offer secondary evidence.

Mr. Burlingham: Isn't it already in as Exhibit No. 5?

Mr. Dorr: I don't think that shows 1903, does it?

Mr. Burlingham: Yes. It says dated 1903. It is so described in your subpoena, G: I don't know whether I have it right or not. Perhaps that is not it, but I thought it was.

Mr. Dorr: It may be. The date may put me in mind of it.

Q. I show you Government Exhibit No. 5, which is the exhibit referred to by Mr. Burlingham, and ask you whether that has any reference to the agreement which you testified to, purporting to be between the N. D. L. V. and the French Line.

Mr. Spooner: That this is a copy of the agreement you referred to?

Mr. Dorr: Yes. Mr. Burlingham thinks it might be, but I think not.

A. This appears to be one of the European arrangements with which I am not familiar. I was answering you in regard to the one arrangement of the British Lines with which I am familiar, that is the North Atlantic Conference maintained in America.

1331 Q. What lines were present or represented at the meetings of that conference in 1903?

Mr. Spooner: Is that in that paper?

The Witness: I don't know, sir.

Q. I am asking you now not for the contents of any written document, but for the witness's recollection as to the actual occurrences; what is your recollection as to what lines were present at the meetings of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference in 1903?

Mr. Spooner: Did you make the record?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Showing the presence and absence of different lines?

1332 The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Object to it as not the best evidence and irrelevant and incompetent.

Mr. Dorr: You understand the making of a written record by the secretary makes him competent to testify as to who were present there and that is the evidence which has any application to any such situation.

Mr. Spooner: Then the objection will be overruled by the Court.

Q. Proceed?

Mr. Burlingham: Who was present?

1333

The Witness: The parties to the North Atlantic Passenger Conference in 1903 were the then existing lines between the United States and Canadian ports and Great Britain and Scandinavia.

Q. Were there any other lines engaged in that traffic which were not members of that North Atlantic Conference? A. I think they were all members with the possible exception of the Beaver Line.

Q. With the exception of the Beaver Line? A. It may or may not have been.

Q. In 1904 was there any change in membership? A. I don't believe so.

Q. In 1905? A. Probably no change.

Q. What you mean is your best recollection is that there was no change, is it not, Mr. Sandford? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in 1904, was there not active competition between the Cunard and certain other of the Trans-Atlantic lines? A. Yes.

Q. How long did that competition continue; I am speaking now of the steerage business? A. A year or more.

Q. Referring again to this letter of May 29th, 1906, Petitioner's Exhibit 81, does this refresh your recollection as to whether or not that had terminated in 1906? A. This letter does not help me. I only know that about 1905 the Cunard Line for its service to the Mediterranean and Adriatic was in competition strongly with the Continental group of lines.

Q. How about the North Atlantic business? A. They were eventually involved.

Q. Were they not also involved in the competition with the Continental Lines as to the North Atlantic steerage business? A. There was constant competition, but you mean in respect to the fluctuations of rates?

1336 Q. Yes, do you recall whether or not the Cunard entered into any agreement or arrangement with the Continental Lines as to the North Atlantic Steerage business prior to the Agreement "AA" of February 5th, 1908?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial—not within the issues.

A. There were arrangements subsequently made in Europe between the Cunard Line, more particularly for its Mediterranean and Adriatic service and the 1337 Continental lines.

Q. My question is directed to the North Atlantic Steerage Traffic and I ask whether prior to the agreement of February 5th, 1908, there was any agreement by the Cunard with the other lines—

Mr. Spooner: I move to strike out the last answer on the ground that it is not in response to a question and in itself is incompetent and not relevant to any of the issues named in the pleading.

Q. Do you know of any agreement between the Cunard and the Continental Lines as to the North 1338 Atlantic Steerage Traffic between 1904 and February 5th, 1908, when Agreement "AA" purports to have been executed?

Mr. Spooner: If there was such an Agreement, was it in writing, do you know?

The Witness: No. I presume it was in writing.

Mr. Dorr: I am not asking for the contents of any document, I am merely trying to find out if there was any arrangement.

Mr. Spooner: You cannot prove the existence of any agreement in an indirect way.

Mr. Dorr: It seems to me we may be allowed to find out if there was any agreement and if there was any—

Mr. Burlingham: Let the question be read

(Question read.)

A. There were arrangements in Europe the nature of which I am not familiar.

Mr. Beers: I move to strike it out.

Mr. Spooner: The question is whether he knows or not whether there was such an agreement, that was the question that was put.

Mr. Dorr: I will consent that it be stricken out unless I further connect it with the defendants.

Q. What was the sources of such information as you had in regard to the existence of arrangements? A. Letters from the Cunard Company to the New York office with which I was then connected.

Q. And what was the nature of those arrangements so far as you can recall? A. My recollection—

Mr. Spooner: Wait a moment; are they embodied in the letters?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Where are those letters?

1341

The Witness: I don't know.

Mr. Spooner: We object to the question as incompetent and not the best evidence.

Mr. Dorr: I will call on the defendant Cunard Line to produce the letters between the dates of 1904 and 1908 referring to the arrangement between the Cunard Line and Continental Lines as to North Atlantic Steerage Traffic.

Mr. Beers: Do you now call for them?

Mr. Dorr: Yes.

1342

Mr. Beers: If there are any such letters I will produce them. That is, if there are any such letters in the New York agency.

Mr. Dorr: I will suspend my examination of Mr. Sandford then until it can be determined whether or not such letters are in existence or whether it would be proper to continue the secondary evidence. The objection has been raised that Mr. Sandford's knowledge is derived from the written documents or instruments. So far as we know now those written instruments are in existence, and then I take it, it would be improper to ask for secondary evidence of their contents.

Q. Now, as to the other British Lines, other than the Cunard Line, did you have any information—don't state what your information is—but did you find information as to any agreements between any other British Line and the Cunard Line during the period between 1903 and 1908 as to the North Atlantic Steerage Traffic? A. I left the Cunard service on December 31st, 1906. That should be brought in sooner because you asked me a question about—at any time during that period? A. General information; no direct information.

1344

Q. From what sources did you derive that general information? A. When in the Cunard service no doubt from the Cunard letters.

Q. Afterwards from what sources? A. General sources; no official sources.

Q. What do you mean by general sources? A. Conversations.

Q. Conversations with whom? A. Sundry steamship men.

Q. Of what line? A. Probably many lines; I cannot specify any lines now.

1345

Q. Were they lines which are now defendants in this bill? A. Probably.

Q. You are pretty positive of that? A. It is five or six years ago.

Mr. Dorr: Now, I will make the same request for the production of the letters of the Cunard Line which contain references to arrangements between the Cunard and other British Lines as to the North Atlantic Steerage Traffic between 1903 and 1908 inclusive—

Mr. Beers: And February 5th, 1908?

Mr. Dorr: Yes, February 5th, 1908.

Q. Now, as to this information which you derived from general sources, the general sources being merely as you can recall lines or officers of lines, agents of lines, which are now parties to this suit; will you state what your information was, stating as nearly as you can the exact conversation, giving the date of the conversation, the name of the person with whom it took place; if you cannot recall those details give the substance?

Mr. Spooner: That is supposed to elicit the conversation with somebody he doesn't remember.

Mr. Dorr: Some person representing some one, or the other, or all of the defendant lines.

Mr. Spooner: Whom he does not remember?

Mr. Dorr: If he remembers I would like to have the name.

Mr. Spooner: If he doesn't remember, what—

Mr. Dorr: Then we will have to take the best he can give us.

1348 Mr. Spooner: Now, if you remember, name the person?

The Witness: No, I do not.

Mr. Spooner: From whom or with whom you had the conversation, or from whom you derived the information; we don't object to it. If you cannot and want to speak out of the air so to speak, why we want to register an objection to it because we cannot contradict it.

Q. One further preliminary question; the persons with whom you had these conversations were persons 1349 whom you met and had these conversations with while you were acting as secretary of the conference of which you have spoken? A. Subsequent to returning to the conference service, yes.

Q. These persons whose names you cannot now recall were officers or agents or employees of lines which were members of the conferences of which you were secretary? A. Yes, those would be the source of my knowledge.

Q. Now, let us have the recollection which you have?

Mr. Spooner: We object to it, his stating any conversation if he can't indicate the per-1350 son with whom he had it; I don't care about the date, but at least the person with whom he had it.

The Witness: That arrangement had been made abroad and whether they were in respect to pools only or pools and rate agreement I don't now remember.

Q. Do you recall learning of a meeting which had been held at Cologne on the 25th day of May, 1906, between certain of the Continental lines and certain of the British lines at which the question of the revival of the so-called Continental Agreement of 1898 was considered? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Do you recall whether or not between May 25th, 1906, and February 5th, 1908, learning from the sources which you have described whether or not the British lines other than the Cunard Line had entered into a pool for the North Atlantic Steerage Traffic with the Continental Lines by which the British Lines other than the Cunard were to receive 7.8% of the traffic? A. I do not.

Q. Do you recall whether there was any such arrangement irrespective of an exact percentage? A. No.

Q. Can you state what the practices of booking Continental passengers via certain points mentioned in that letter (Exhibit No. 81) refers to? A. I don't know.

Q. Did you ever hear of any objection made by the British Lines as to the practices of certain Continental Lines under the pool or rate agreements which had existed prior to February 5th, 1908? A. No.

Q. Mr. Sandford, I show you a group of papers and telegrams and ask whether or not that is a set of copies and originals of correspondence exchanged by you with Schiavone? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I ask that this be marked as one exhibit for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 82 for identification.

Mr. Dorr: I don't think I will examine this witness any further at this time and will reserve the right to call him when we ascertain whether or not it will be necessary or proper for him to give secondary evidence as to the contents of the letters.

Counsel for the defendants reserve the right to recall the witness for cross-examination.

1354 Anne C. H. Nyland

ANNE C. H. NYLAND, sworn on behalf of the petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Guiler:

Q. What is your occupation, Mr. Nyland? A. I am the passenger agent for the Holland-Amerika Line.

Q. How long have you been connected with the Holland-Amerika Line? A. Almost twenty-five years.

Q. Both in this country and in Rotterdam? A. No, sir; only here.

1355 Q. What positions with the Holland-Amerika Line have you held since that time at the different times? A. I started with the Holland-Amerika Line as an ordinary clerk, attending to the third class business, at that time at Ellis Island; I became cabin clerk, traveling passenger agent, the manager of the Chicago office and last passenger agent here in New York.

Q. And during part of this time the Holland-Amerika Line has been connected with a conference called the American Atlantic Conference, has it not? A. Part of the time, yes.

Q. Approximately from what time to what time? A. I believe we were members of the so-called Continental Conference since 1886 up to the present time.

1356 Q. And does the same apply to the American Atlantic Conference? A. At that time we didn't know of an American Atlantic Conference.

Q. I mean it has been for some time up to the present time a member of the American Atlantic Conference, has it not? A. Yes.

Q. And it has been a member since 1892 of the N. D. L. V., has it not? A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. You don't know whether it has been or not? A. Not to my personal knowledge, no, sir.

Q. I show you that, Mr. Nyland, and ask you whether that will refresh your memory as to whether your corporation, the Holland-Amerika Line, was a member of the N. D. L. V. since 1892, the N. D. L. V. so-called? A. The N. D. L. V. is in Europe, not here.

Q. I don't care where it was; I asked you whether you were a member of it? A. Not to my personal knowledge. Apparently we were a member of it, but not to my knowledge.

Q. You don't remember looking at that agreement there? A. I may have seen it.

Q. You don't remember, having close connection with your corporation at that time, whether it was a member of the N. D. L. V. or not? A. As I said before, not to my personal knowledge. 1358

Q. You know it, don't you?

Mr. Bradley: He says from the knowledge he had, he got from them.

Mr. Guiler: Oh, no; he did not.

Mr. Burlingham: He has answered three times that he didn't know it and now you say he does know it.

Mr. Guiler: He says not to his personal knowledge.

Mr. Burlingham: He may have information, but he cannot have any knowledge that is not personal. 1359

Q. Did any one connected with your line ever inform you that the line was a member of the N. D. L. V.? A. That may have been, yes.

Q. Who was that that informed you? A. I cannot recall exactly who told me, but somebody who was in connection with my company may have told me.

Q. It was an officer of your company? A. Very likely, yes.

Q. But just now you do not recall who it was? A. No, sir.

1360 Q. Now, at various time you have served on a so-called small committee, have you not, of the American Atlantic Conference? A. Can you give me the date?

Mr. Beers: Object to the form of the question as characterizing it as a committee of the American Atlantic Conference, and the question designates the committee of the American Atlantic Conference, which I understand is not the testimony as it appears the witness says.

Q. You have been appointed a member of a small committee? A. What small committee do you refer 1361 to?

Q. A small committee in order to get at the competition between the American Atlantic Conference and other lines, other outside lines, have you not?

Mr. Spooner: Do you mean the so-called small committees, relating to fighting ships?

Mr. Guiler: Yes.

A. Do I understand you correctly by saying that I served as a member of the committee which should cut out competition?

Q. Yes; which supplied the so-called fighting steamers to cut out competition—to enter into competition 1362 with the Northwest Transport Company? A. I have served as a committee member on a committee but this committee was not established for the purpose of cutting out that competition you referred to.

Q. I did not say cut out competition, going into competition with the Northwest Transport Company, the Uranium Line and other outside lines? A. I don't conceive it in that way.

Q. When was that committee to which you are referring appointed? A. It would not be right to say—

Q. When was it appointed? A. What committee do you refer to?

Q. The committee you refer to.

Mr. Spooner: If you want to ask about the fighting ships committee, ask him.

Mr. Guiler: He understands perfectly well what I am asking about.

Mr. Burlingham: Read the question.

(Question read.)

Q. I mean the committee which was to supply the fighting ships, when was that appointed? A. That committee sometime in the spring of 1908 to the best of my recollection.

Q. Who constituted the so-called small committee, or who instructed it to be formed? A. I presume 1364 the general manager of the line.

Q. Now, I show you here a letter dated May 28th, 1908, from the Holland-Amerika Line to the Holland Amerika Line and ask you whether this refreshes your recollection as to who appointed that small committee, and whether it was appointed in Europe or not? A. (After reading from letter book.) This letter speaks for itself.

Q. No, I was asking you for your recollection? A. According to this letter the committee had been appointed upon a cable from Europe.

Q. From whom? A. According to the letter a certain Mr. Peters.

Q. To whom? A. It must have been received by 1365 the conference here.

Q. And the order was issued to you from the American Atlantic Conference that you were appointed by the American Atlantic Conference—

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading.

Mr. Burlingham: He has not said so and there is no testimony to that effect.

Q. Who informed you that you were appointed on that small committee? A. Very likely I was told that I was a member of that committee, but who told me I don't remember.

Q. Were you not present at the meeting at which you were appointed? A. Perhaps not; I couldn't recall.

Q. Do you recall whether that so-called small committee was discontinued and then reinstated later on? A. To the best of my recollection, yes.

Q. And I show you letter dated April 26th, 1909, at Rotterdam, from the Holland-Amerika Line to the Holland-Amerika Line and ask you if those are your initials on that letter? A. No, sir; not mine.

Q. Have you ever seen that letter before? A. I may and I may not; I don't remember having seen it before.

Q. Whose initials are those on that letter? A. May I see it again? (Letter handed to witness.) I can only surmise; I don't know it, but I can surmise, a certain Mr. Gips.

Q. That signature on the right? A. I don't know, but apparently the signature of one of our directors.

Q. Who? A. Mr. Reuchlin.

Mr. Guiler: I offer the letter in evidence.

Mr. Burlingham: I object to its admission as incompetent and immaterial.

1368

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit #83.

Mr. Beers: The same stipulation with referance to objections applies to the testimony of this witness, as to Mr. Sandford?

Mr. Dorr: Yes; as I understand it applies to all witnesses.

Mr. Beers: That is my understanding also.

Q. Were you appointed a member of the reinstated small committee? A. Yes.

Q. To which that letter refers? A. Yes.

Q. Against whom were the fighting steamers appointed, and against whose competition were the so-called fighting steamers appointed?

Mr. Burlingham: Originally.

Q. Yes; originally or right through?

Mr. Burlingham: In the spring of 1908 you mean?

Mr. Guiler: Yes.

Mr. Burlingham: Answer it.

A. This committee was appointed to undo or offset as far as possible the injury done by the unfair and— 1370

Mr. Guiler: I object to that.

Mr. Spooner: He is answering your question.

Q. I asked you what ships—I asked you what lines were these fighting steamers or was this competition directed against by your committee. Against what lines and during what periods was this competition of so-called fighting steamers directed? A. Do you mean before or after the reinstatement of the committee?

Q. Before the reinstatement of the committee? A. Against some lines which were not members of the 1371 conference.

Q. I asked you what lines, the names of those lines? A. To the best of my recollection the Russian Volunteer Line and also the Russian East Asiatic.

Q. That was before the committee was reinstated? A. Yes.

Q. Was it directed then against the New York and Continental Lines also? A. To the best of my recollection that line came in later.

Q. That was then after the committee was reinstated, the competition or so-called fighting steamship competition was directed against the New York and Continental, am I right there? A. No, sir; you use an expression to which I can not fully answer yes.

Q. What was the line against which this competition was directed after the committee was reinstated? A. That was taken before.

Q. I mean after it was reinstated, name the lines? A. Against the New York and Continental Lines to the best of my recollection.

Q. Against the Northwest Transport Company? A. That is the same company under another name.

1373 Q. And against the Uranium Line? A. The same company under another name.

Q. Were the New York and Continental Line the Northwest Transport Company and the Uranium Line, the same corporation? A. I couldn't tell you. I only know that the same ships were sailing in their service these three times.

Q. Were they all sailing at the same time during this whole time? A. No; one after the other.

Q. I mean were the same ships sailing for the separate companies, or the different named companies, during all of this period; you have spoken of the same ships as having sailed? A. They may have added a steamer or they may have taken off a steamer.

1374 Q. But substantially they were the same ships that were sailing all of this time? A. To the best of my recollection, yes.

Q. What steamers did your committee from time to time direct to run against these various lines? A. Not direct; suggest you mean?

Q. Suggest. Well, what steamers did you suggest to run against these various lines? A. That depended on the circumstances or the conditions.

Q. Don't you remember, can't you give us the names of some of the steamers? A. I remember that one steamer of our lines was suggested, the steamer Noordam.

Q. Do you remember the names of any other steamers which were suggested by your committee to sail against the steamers of these various lines? A. I know various steamers were selected, but I don't recollect exactly what steamers they were.

Q. Was the Vaterland ever selected? A. It may have been.

Q. Your recollection is that it was, isn't it? A. Not exactly; it is possible; I will not deny that it was so.

Q. Supposing that these steamers of the competing lines, were stated to sail on a particular date, at what time did you suggest that your steamer should sail? 1376
A. Generally the steamer sailed on the same dates.

Q. And about the same time? A. That was immaterial.

Q. And did you suggest that the rates of sailing of those steamers should be about the same as the rates of the competing steamers? A. The same or higher.

Q. There are many cases, however, where it was the same, are there not? A. No; not always.

Q. But substantially most of them were about the same? A. No; not to my recollection.

Q. Was there ever a case where you cut under the rate of the other steamer? A. No, never.

Q. Did you have power on various occasions to 1377 cut under the rate of the other steamers if circumstances so required? A. We did not have power; we only could make suggestions.

Q. Did you ever suggest that the rate of the competing steamers be cut under? A. Not to my remembrance.

Q. But you are positive that it was never cut under, are you? A. As far as I recollect it was never cut below the rate of the other steamer.

Q. Did your committee at that time suggest that the Graf Waldersee of the Hamburg-American Line should sail on January 15th, 1910, against the steamship Uranium of the Northwest Transport Line at the same rate as the—

1378 Anne C. H. Nyland

Q. No, at $24? A. It is possible; I don't remember.

Q. I show you this circular here marked Hamburg American Line and dated January 8th, 1910, and ask you whether your committee suggested a rate of $24 on that sailing of the Graf Waldersee at or about that date? A. It may have been.

Q. Was it; have you seen that circular before? A.
1379 Very likely.

Q. You have seen it? A. Very likely.

Q. Don't you remember that you have seen it? A. This same circular? No, sir.

Q. Not the same one, but one similar to it? A. I don't remember, but it is very likely.

Q. Is that the regular form issued by the— A. May I explain; I may have been absent from the city when that occurred and very likely as it occurred in January; I usually am on a business trip in January, so very likely I did not see that circular.

Q. You know from looking at that circular that that boat did sail on that date, don't you, and from your recollection? A. According to the circular that 1380 steamer should have sailed on that date, yes.

Q. You remember that she did, don't you? A. No, sir.

Mr. Guiler: I offer the circular in evidence. Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 84.

Q. What was the rate at which tickets were offered to the public under that circular? A. It must have been $24.

Q. Was that the regular rate for those steamers? A. I could not say off-hand.

1381

Q. I show you that again and ask you whether on looking at that it refreshes your memory as to whether that was the regular or reduced rate for that sailing? A. The circular states it was a reduced rate, so it must have been.

Q. The regular rate was much in excess of that, wasn't it? A. Very likely, sir.

Q. Don't you know? A. No. Do you think I would remember every matter two years ago?

Q. No, I asked you do you remember? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Don't you know that the regular rate was about $35? A. It may have been. 1382

Q. What is your best recollection as to those rates? A. The only thing which I may say for sure is that it was according to this circular higher than $24.

Q. I show you a circular headed "Hamburg-Amerika Line," without date, and advertising a sailing of steamers for Hamburg, January 15th, 1910, at 9 A. M., and ask you whether those were the regular rates for the Graf Waldersee on those dates? A. Apparently, yes.

Q. Were they? A. Apparently.

Q. You know they were, don't you? A. How will I know? I am not connected with the Hamburg Amerika Line. 1383

Q. Wasn't $35 about the regular rate? A. That may have been, yes; otherwise this circular would not state it.

Mr. Burlingham: The rates are different for different steamers.

Mr. Guiler: I offer that circular in evidence.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 85.

Mr. Dorr: Is there any objection to the admission of the circulars which have been offered in evidence on the ground that the authenticity has not been sufficiently proved? Let me put it in this way: Is there any objection to the admission of these circulars on the ground that they are not genuine circulars issued by the Hamburg-Amerika Line as advertisements to induce the purchase of steerage transportation by the steamer Graf Waldersee?

Mr. Spooner: You only put us to the trouble of proving that it is incorrect, but we take that; we do not object to the form of it or the authenticity of it.

1385 Mr. Dorr: May it appear on the record that the Government Exhibit No. 85 is a copy of a circular advertising the rates of the steamer Graf Waldersee, under date of January 15th, 1910, issued by the Hamburg-Amerika Line—

Mr. Spooner: It is admitted that it is a circular printed by the Hamburg-Amerika Line and issued to agents.

Mr. Dorr: For their information in dealing with the public?

Mr. Spooner: Issued to the agents.

Mr. Dorr: Is it admitted that Exhibit No. 84 is a circular of the Hamburg-Amerika Line issued by that line to its agents in regard to a 1386 certain sailing of the steamship Graf Waldersee and the steerage rates of that steamer on that sailing?

Mr. Spooner: Yes.

Q. Did your committee at any time direct or suggest that the President Lincoln of the Hamburg-Amerika Line should sail against the Northwest Transport Line's steamer Neapolitan Prince? A. I don't remember.

Q. Don't you remember that the President Lincoln did sail at the same time against a steamer of the Northwest Transport Company? A. It is possible, but I don't remember. What date was it?

Q. I show you this paper dated January 24th, 1910, headed "Hamburg-Amerika Line," and the sailing of the President Lincoln, and ask you whether that refreshes your recollection, and ask you whether the President Lincoln sailed on the date mentioned on that paper? A. Very likely, sir.

Q. Can't you say that it did sail on that date? A. No, sir; I don't remember; it is over three years ago.

Q. Does that refresh your memory as to whether 1388 you at any time permitted the President Lincoln to sail against the Northwest Transport Line? A. It is possible, but I do not recollect.

Q. It is possible? A. It is possible.

Mr. Guiler: Do you concede, Senator, the correctness of that exhibit?

Mr. Spooner: We concede the correctness of this circular dated January 24th, 1910, the $22 rate circular.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 86.

Mr. Guiler: Is it conceded that the circular marked Hamburg-Amerika Line, without date, for the sailing of the President Lincoln, on 1389
January 29th, 1910, at 9 A. M. is correct so far as the statements therein are contained?

Mr. Spooner: It is not conceded that it is correct with reference to the steerage rate.

Mr. Guiler: It is conceded that it has been issued by the Hamburg-Amerika Line to its agents.

Mr. Spooner: We deny that it correctly gives the rate for steerage passage.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 87.

Mr. Dorr: The Government offers in evidence as Exhibit No. 88, what purports to be a circular of the Red Star Line, New York-Antwerp service, under date of January 18th, 1910, advertising the sailing of the steamer Lapland.

ANNE C. H. NYLAND, recalled: 1394

Direct-examination continued by Mr. Guiler:

Q. Mr. Nyland, I ask you to look again at the letter from the Holland-Amerika Line to the Holland-Amerika Line, Rotterdam, dated May 28th, 1908, and ask you to state whose signature, or whose initial, that is signed to that letter on the left-hand side of the last page thereof? A. It is apparently my initial.

Q. That is your initial? A. Apparently, yes.

Q. Did you dictate that letter and then subsequently give it to Mr. Gips to sign, or have it sent to him in any way? A. Can I read the letter?

Q. Yes, certainly (handing witness letter).

1395

Mr. Spooner: A typewritten letter?

Mr. Guiler: Yes, one of the letters that has been offered in evidence already.

A. Yes.

Q. Who was it, Mr. Nyland, that appointed the committee of three to take up the matter of fighting steamers? A. To the best of my recollection the managers of the steamship lines.

Q. I call your attention to a part of the letter in regard to the opposition steamer being appointed by the managers or the members of the North Atlantic and Continental Conferences, does that refresh your recollection in any way as to whether it was the American Atlantic Conference that appointed the small committee, remembering that you dictated that letter? A. You refer to the second cable which is here?

Q. Yes? A. That was a cable sent from Europe.

Q. But does it not state, and don't you remember, that members of the American Atlantic Conference had a meeting, say of the general managers and appointed this committee of three, including yourself, of which you were one? A. It is stated here.

1397 Q. I am trying to get your recollection; I am asking you was not that committee appointed at a meeting of the North Atlantic and Continental Conferences here in New York, or in the United States? A. To the best of my recollection this committee was appointed at the meeting held in consequence of these cables.

Q. In New York? A. In New York.

Q. By the American Atlantic Conference?

Mr. Spooner: Why do you lead the witness asking him by whom?

Mr. Guiler: I think he can answer that. I am asking him what he remembers with that 1398 letter in front of him.

Mr. Spencer: Ask him by whom.

Q. I will ask you by whom was this small committee appointed? A. The small committee was appointed at said meeting held in consequence of this cable.

Q. By whom? A. It is stated here by the general managers and passenger agents of the different lines.

Q. Yes, but isn't it stated in that letter that it was appointed by a majority of the members of the North Atlantic Conference and Continental Conference over on the first page, which I showed you before? A. This cable was the cause of this meeting and at said meeting the appointment was made.

Q. And the meeting was a meeting of the North Atlantic Conference, was it not? A. Not of the North Atlantic Conference.

Q. North Atlantic and Continental Conferences? A. The members of the said conferences were both represented.

Q. They were both represented? A. Very likely represented.

Q. Do you know whether they were represented or not? A. No, sir; I don't remember the details of 1400 that meeting.

Q. What do you understand by the American Atlantic Conference; the New York, the American Atlantic Conference mentioned in that letter? A. A conference held by the Continental lines and by the British lines.

Q. By representatives of them, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And representatives of the American Atlantic Conference were also members of the Continental Conference, were they not? A. Not all, no, sir.

Q. Not all, but some of them? A. Some of them.

Q. In the majority of cases they were, weren't 1401 they, the same persons composing the North Atlantic and the Continental Conferences? A. No, sir.

Q. The American Atlantic and Continental Conferences? A. Not at all; it may be in some cases.

Q. You were selected as a member of that small committee, were you not, at that meeting which is mentioned there? A. Yes.

Q. And took up your duties as such member of that committee, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Now, according to the letter which I have shown you, did you proceed to take up the matter of regulating the agents which was mentioned in that letter, according to instructions in the cable; I will show you further on in the letter where the agency matter is taken up; now, did you proceed to take that up, for instance, the Zotti case? A. In what way do you mean, sir?

Q. I say, it was part of your duties as a member of that conference and as a member of that committee to take up the matter of the discipline of agents, was it not?

Mr. Beers: We object to that as leading. Do you press the question in that form?

1403 Mr. Guiler: Yes, I think I do. I think it has been clearly shown in this matter the witness is identified with and he has had a number of things to do with the matters charged in this bill, and he is fully identified with them and at our last meeting here showed that he was an adverse witness, a hostile witness, and therefore I should think and I insist that we are allowed to cross-examine this witness if we so desire, and to ask the witness leading questions.

Mr. Bullowa: I object on the ground that it is not within the pleadings and he is not a 1404 hostile witness to us, because there is no charge in the complaint that at that time we were a member of any conference.

Mr. Guiler: I can simplify this matter by having a general objection to these questions put down.

Mr. Beers: I understand all of this testimony is taken subject to the stipulation which was entered into at an earlier hearing, but that stipulation did not extend to the form of questions?

1405

Mr. Bullowa: I don't see how we can possibly waive objections to the form of the question.

Mr. Guiler: Put your objections on the record and have them apply to these questions as leading.

Mr. Bullowa: We must object to every question so as to give the Government an opportunity to correct its questions.

Mr. Spooner: I want to suggest that the presumption is that a witness who takes an oath to tell the truth is an honest witness, and whether he is an unwilling witness or not his answers are put on the record.

1406

Mr. Guiler: Where he is in substantially the position of a defendant and has been called upon to testify. This witness has shown his unwillingness and we are entitled to ask him leading questions or cross-examine him if we should so wish.

Q. (Question read.) A. Not especially so.

Q. But it was your duty to do so, was it not; to a certain extent? A. Not as a member of that committee.

Q. As a member of the conference? A. Of the conference, that is a different matter.

Q. The committee was especially appointed to take up the matter of fighting steamers, was it not, or opposition steamers? A. That was the object.

Mr. Spooner: He put you in the attitude of saying that was done by the conference, did you say that?

The Witness: No.

Q. And the committee proceeded to take up its duties in regard to these fighting steamers, did it not? A. Yes, sir.

1408 Q. I show you part of this—I ask you what lines particularly were the fighting steamers directed against?

Mr. Burlingham: When?

Mr. Guiler: In 1908.

Mr. Burlingham: He answered that the other day; but go on, Mr. Nyland.

The Witness: I have testified to that before.

Q. I ask you to answer my question? A. Against the Russian East Asiatic, the Russian Volunteer and the New York and Continental lines.

1409 Q. How about the Uranium Line? A. The Uranium Line is another name for the New York and Continental Line.

Q. But it was in the same position as regards the small committee as the other lines which you have mentioned, was it not?

Mr. Bradley: He says it is the same line with another name.

Q. Were the New York Continental and the Uranium running at the same time? A. No, sir.

Q. One succeeded the other, did it not? A. The Uranium did not succeed the New York and Con-

1410 tinental Line.

Q. It came later on in matter of time, did it not, than the New York and Continental Line? A. To the best of my recollection the New York and Continental Line was succeeded by the Northwest Transport Line and the Northwest Transport Line was succeeded by the Uranium Line.

Q. But your duties as a member of the committee applied to all those lines, did it not? A. At what particular time?

Q. I say your duties during, we will say, 1908 and 1909, or thereabout, applied to all the lines which you have mentioned? A. Only three lines I have mentioned. 1411

Q. They did not apply to the Uranium Line? A. They did not exist at that time to the best of my recollection.

Q. But you were a member of the committee when the competition was directed against the Uranium Line, were you not? A. Can you give me the date? I may know then.

Q. I ask you if you recollect whether or not as a member of the committee you directed or suggested competition against the Uranium Line at any time— the Uranium Line, I understand, lasted only a few years? A. I believe I was a member of the committee. 1412

Q. Now, the rates which were to be charged by the competing steamers suggested by the small committee were to be the same or less, were they not, than the rates charged by the competing steamers? A. What do you call a competing steamer? The steamers of the Atlantic—

Q. I will say the fighting steamers? A. The steamers appointed by the small committee?

Q. Yes. (Question read.)

Mr. Beers: Objected to as leading. 1413

A. The rates quoted by the so-called fighting steamers were never less.

Q. Were never less than those of the Northwest Transport Company or other competing lines? A. Never less.

Q. They could be less, could they not? A. But they were not.

Q. You had authority to make them less, did you not? A. They were not.

Q. I say you had authority to make them less if you so desired, as a member of that small committee? A. I don't believe that our authority went that far.

1414 Anne C. H. Nyland

Q. I say, did you have authority to make them—

Mr. Burlingham: He has answered.

A. I don't believe that our authority went that far.

Q. Will you kindly look at that letter dated May 28th, 1908, Petitioner's Exhibit No. 27, and I ask you whether the cable which you received from Mr. Peters states that you could charge less, the same or less than the rates which the Northwest Transport Company or the other competing lines charged?

1415 Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as assuming that he received a cablegram from Peters, because he did not, and upon the further ground that the letter speaks for itself; he cannot be asked what it means, or what it states.

Q. Received by the Holland-Amerika Line.

Mr. Burlingham: I don't think they received it. There is nothing to show they received it.

Mr. Guiler: There is this letter to show; the cable is copied into the letter which he dictated.

Q. I ask you to look at that and tell me whether 1416 you could charge less or the same rates which the competing steamers or opposition steamers could charge? A. We followed the instructions from our home office and not from Mr. Peters.

Q. I ask you if this refreshes your recollection in regard to whether you were allowed to charge more or less, or rather less, than the competing steamers; this quotation from the letter which you have stated you dictated (reading); do you not recollect that you could charge the same or a lower rate than the outside lines? A. I call your attention, sir, to the beginning of this letter. I have answered your question. We obey the instructions from the home office; that is not an instruction from the home office.

Q. That was an instruction from Mr. Peters, was it not? A. Mr. Peters could not give us any instructions.

Q. I say this is a cable from Mr. Peters which you have quoted here? A. Yes.

Q. And you have advised me already that you followed the instructions in that cable, did you not? A. I said we followed the instructions where the meeting is concerned resulting from said cable.

Q. That cable shows you, does it not, that you 1418 had authority to charge less than the rates charged by the competing steamers? A. This cable, that is only a repetition of a cable received from Peters.

Q. I ask you cannot you answer that question (question read)? A. What Mr. Peters had authority to give us—

Q. Cannot you answer that question? A. That is the answer, sir; that is the point to be decided, whether Peters could give instructions to us.

Q. I asked you whether you had authority or not to do so on that cable from Peters? A. Who is Mr. Peters?

Q. I ask you who Peters is? A. According to 1419 my recollection, or from hearsay, I understand Mr. Peters to be a secretary in Europe.

Q. Secretary of what in Europe? A. Of the N. D. L. V. and as such he has no authority to instruct us or any line in America.

Q. The N. D. L. V. is composed of the Hamburg-American Line and the Holland-Amerika Line and the Red Star Line and the North German Lloyd, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. And your lines was a member of the N. D. L. V., was it not? A. According to information, yes.

1420 Anne C. H. Nyland

Q. And therefore, Peters had authority to instruct you, had he not? A. No, sir.

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to.

Mr. Beers: That is objected to as cross-examination.

Mr. Bullowa: That is objected to.

Q. As secretary of the N. D. L. V.?

Mr. Burlingham: I object further on the ground that there is nothing in the proof to show that Mr. Peters ever telegraphed or 1421 cabled to the Holland-Amerika Line, and the letter to which counsel refers contains no such statement. It does not say any cablegram was received by the Holland-Amerika Line from Peters. Probably it was received by the Holland-Amerika Line, probably it was not, and probably it was received by the conference.

Q. You had that cablegram in your possession at the time you wrote that letter, did you not? A. No, sir.

Q. Or a copy of that cablegram? A. It may have been a copy.

Q. And you dictated from that copy, did you not?
1422 A. Very likely.

Q. And you were in the employ of the Holland-Amerika Line at that time? A. Yes.

Q. Now, again I will ask you whether or not you had the right to charge lower rates than the competing lines?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to on the ground that the witness has twice answered that he did not; that he took his orders from the Holland-Amerika Line, the home office.

Mr. Guiler: He has not answered that question yet, and I would like to have an answer from him.

Mr. Burlingham: Read the question and let the witness answer for the third time.

Q. (Question read.) A. I can't answer the question the way you put it, because it is impossible to answer this question.

Q. I want an answer to that question, and I think it can be answered? A. I don't think I can answer the question the way you put the question.

Mr. Spooner: He has stated that the only authority the different lines recognize was a cablegram from the home office. He says they did not recognize Mr. Peters; he has said that repeatedly and that is an answer to your question.

Mr. Guiler: I don't think it is an answer; he has not answered my question yet, although I have asked it three times.

Mr. Spooner: Try it again.

Q. Did you have authority from any source to put in the same rate as the competing steamers? A. That is the same question, sir, which I cannot answer in 1425 the way you ask it.

Q. I think you can answer it.

Mr. Spooner: That is not the same question. He says did you have authority to make the rates the same as the competing steamers, from any source.

A. We had authority from the general managers of the lines here to form a small committee and to suggest steamers and rates.

Q. And you did suggest steamers and rates, didn't you? A. Yes.

1426 Anne C. H. Nyland

Q. Do you remember any time when you ever suggested a less rate than the rate of the competing line? A. No, sir, never.

Q. Did you ever suggest such a rate, or was ever such a rate adopted by any of the lines pursuant to your suggestion? A. Not to my recollection.

Q. You are absolutely sure of that, are you, that you never suggested a lower rate or a lower rate was never adopted by you? A. I was not always a member of that committee.

Q. Or by that committee? A. I don't know.

1427 Mr. Burlingham: He says he was not always a member of that committee.

Q. Then you cannot say from your own knowledge whether a less rate was suggested or was not than those of the competing steamers? A. I know by my own knowledge that no lower rate was ever suggested.

Q. I here show you the rate of the President Lincoln, or rather, show you a circular issued by the Hamburg-American Line, under date of January 24th, 1910, where it appears—which has already been put in evidence—where it appears that a rate of $22, less $2 commission are suggested (referring to Exhibit No. 86)? A. Yes.

1428 Mr. Burlingham: Against what steamer was that?

Mr. Guiler: The President Lincoln against the Neapolitan Prince, sailing January 29th, 1910.

Q. That rate mentioned in that circular was suggested by the small committee, was it not? A. Possibly.

Q. And the rate for the President Grant sailing on February 5th, 1910, of $22, less $2 commission, the circular being dated January 31st, 1910, was suggested by your committee or some member thereof, was it not? A. Apparently, yes.

Circular marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 89.

Circular regarding steamer President Grant marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 90.

Mr. Burlingham: What steamer was that against?

Mr. Guiler: That was against the Sicilian Prince.

Mr. Burlingham: What was the steamer selected?

Mr. Guiler: The President Grant. 1430

Q. Now, Mr. Nyland, did you in the course of your duties ever aid, any more than suggest, that these steamships be chosen as fighting ships; did you ever select any of them? A. We suggested steamers.

Q. Did you not do more than suggest; did you not select at times the various steamers? A. As long as I was a member of this committee I suggested only.

Q. You are sure that under no circumstances you selected a fighting steamer?

Mr. Spooner: Do you mean to draw his attention to the selecting of a particular ship or directing of a particular ship? 1431

Mr. Guiler: Yes, he made the distinction.

Mr. Spooner: I don't know that he does.

Mr. Burlingham: Select is the word you are emphasizing now?

Mr. Guiler: Yes.

A. I never selected a steamer as a member of that committee.

Q. Did your committee select a steamer while you were a member of it? A. Not to my recollection.

Q. I show you a letter dated June 5th, 1908, and ask you whether the initial N at the end of that letter of June 5th, 1908, from the Holland-Amerika Line, New York, to the Holland-Amerika Line, Rotterdam, is your initial, and whether you wrote that N upon that letter? A. Apparently, yes.

1432 Anne C. H. Nyland

Q. And that letter was dictated by you, was it not? A. Possibly, yes.

Q. The letter was dictated by you when your initial N appears on it? A. No, not necessarily.

Q. It was read over by you before being sent out? A. It was read over, yes.

Mr. Guiler: I offer that letter in evidence.

1433 Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent and immaterial.

Received as Exhibit No. 91.

Q. Now, looking at that letter, Mr. Nyland, it appears in that letter that you selected the steamer Nieuw Amsterdam, as a fighting steamer, against the Petersburg; does that refresh your recollection as to whether you selected the Nieuw Amsterdam to run against the Petersburg, or whether you merely suggested it? A. Apparently the Nieuw Amsterdam was suggested and became a fighting steamer.

Q. I say it was selected, was it not, according to this letter?

Mr. Burlingham: By whom?

Mr. Guiler: By the committee.

Q. Now, I show you letter dated June 9th, 1908, and ask you—letter from the Holland-Amerika Line to the Holland-Amerika Line, Amsterdam—whether the initial N on that letter, appearing at the bottom of that letter, was written by you? A. Apparently, yes.

Q. And that letter was dictated by you, was it not? A. Apparently.

Mr. Guiler: I offer the letter of June 9th, 1908, in evidence.

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 92.

1435

Q. In this letter you state that the Finland of the Red Star Line carried 1,305 passengers last week against 321 on the Volturno; now, I ask you whether when a fighting steamer was selected if there was any excess passengers on the so-called fighting steamer they were transferred to the steamer which was sailing nearest that date on your own or other lines in the conference? A. To the best of my recollection, yes.

Q. And so the other lines which carried those passengers were allowed a certain compensating rate, were they not, by the conference for carrying those passengers? A. Not to my personal knowledge.

Q. But at this particular time, according to this letter; I ask you to look at the letter, the second paragraph thereof, and ask you whether that refreshes your recollection as to the reason for transferring those passengers to the Oceanic rather than to some other line in the conference? A. The Red Star Line can answer that question.

Q. You wrote the letter, did you not? A. It simply states—

Q. What is stated in there is correct, is it not, as you wrote it? A. Very likely, yes.

Q. Can you tell me what is meant by the statement according to the pool figures—what is meant by the words "pool figures"? A. I presume that stands for the numbers carried.

Q. Numbers carried by the vessels, members of the conference? A. Partly.

Q. What does it mean if it does not mean carried by the members of the conference?

Mr. Spooner: That is cross-examination, which is objectionable, I think.

A. We never had a pool in the conference.

Q. I ask you whether the words "pool figures" do not refer to the conference figures? A. What do you call conference figures?

Q. I am asking you; you are not asking me; you may get your turn later on? A. I do not understand that expression, sir.

Q. You wrote that expression without understanding what it meant, did you; I ask you if you wrote 1439 those words according to the pool figures—

Q. I must have been informed that the English lines had carried less passengers than they should have done.

Q. The English lines were—what English lines? A. Did I not mention them there?

Q. I show you the letter (handing witness letter)? A. No, the English lines is a general expression.

Q. What English lines; don't you know what they were or don't you know what you were writing about here when you wrote the letter? A. The English lines that run from England to New York or to America may have been carrying less passengers than they 1440 should.

Q. What English lines were you talking about when you wrote the letter? A. The lines between England and America.

Q. You meant the English lines in the pool, don't you? A. Very likely I meant that, yes.

Q. Now, those English lines which were in the pool, were the English lines which were in the conference, were they not?

Mr. Bullowa: What conference?

Mr. Guiler: Any conference.

1441

A. Yes.

Q. Were there regular pool figures made up, pool reports of figures made to your line in New York? A. That may have been, I don't know.

Q. You had the pool figures in your possession at the time you wrote this letter, did you not? A. It may have been.

Q. You say according to the pool figures; what do you mean by that? A. I may have been informed of the pool figures.

Q. What informed you of them at that particular time that you were writing? A. Will you please explain that question; I don't understand it; what informed me?

Q. What or who informed you in regard to the pool figures at the time you were writing; whether you had a paper before you or whether you were told by some one else? A. I don't remember.

Q. But, at any rate, you got the pool figures in some way or other at that time? A. I may have been informed about the pool figures.

Q. Was there not a periodic report sent into your office in regard to whether the various pool lines had the quota or not of passengers which they had to carry? A. I don't know about that.

Q. You don't know? A. Whether a periodical report was sent to me.

Q. To the Holland-Amerika Line? A. I couldn't answer that question, sir.

Q. Would you yourself ever receive the periodic report of the standing of the various lines in the pool? A. I may have seen such a report from time to time.

Mr. Burlingham: We will admit it was received by the line, but by the witness is a different thing; he is not the Holland-Amerika Line or the head of it.

1444

Mr. Guiler: He is a good part of it.

Mr. Crim: Do you admit the Holland-Amerika Line receives its quota under or over?

Mr. Burlingham: I think I can admit that; I will ask the head down there and find out and let you know.

Q. You say you did receive accounts, didn't you, periodically? A. I may have been informed about the pool figures.

Q. And as a general rule you had them at hand in your possession, did you not, where you could refer 1445 to them? A. No.

Q. At any rate, occasionally these pool figures were sent to you, were they not? A. Not to me; I may have had them occasionally, but they were never sent to me; never.

Q. You had them occasionally? A. Occasionally I may have had some of these figures, yes.

Q. In this particular letter that I show you you refer to the fact that the Russian Volunteer Fleet would discontinue the sailings of their vessel for some time; you were interested in whether the Russian Volunteer Line discontinued or not, were you? A. Yes, as far as I can be interested in it, as passenger agent of 1446 the line.

Q. And your line was interested in it, wasn't it? A. Maybe.

Q. In as much as it was a competing line of your line and you kept track of it, did you not, as to whether it was running or whether it was not running? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I show you letter dated June 12th, 1908, and ask you whether the initial N on there was signed by you and the letter dictated by you in the ordinary way; that is from the Holland-Amerika Line, New York, to the Holland-Amerika Line, Rotterdam? A. Apparently, yes.

Mr. Guiler: I offer this in evidence.

Mr. Beers: I renew the objection to these Holland-Amerika letters—they are incompetent and irrelevant and not binding on the other defendants.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 93.

Q. You were a member of the committee which selected the Noordam therein mentioned? A. I do not know, sir.

Q. But the committee, as you knew—or does this refresh your recollection as to whether the Noordam was selected to sail against the Rossia at that par- 1448 ticular time? A. According to the letter, yes.

Q. Do you remember whether it was or not? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Do you recollect whether you had anything to do with fixing the rate of $22 upon that particular sailing? A. If I was a member of the committee I very likely had something to do with it.

Q. You wrote the letter, didn't you? A. But it does not say that I made that rate.

Q. I say you wrote the letter? A. Yes.

Q. And you had the information at that time, had you not, that that was the rate fixed? A. Yes.

Mr. Guiler: I also offer letter dated June 1449
23rd, 1908, Rotterdam, Holland-Amerika Line, to the Holland-Amerika Line, which is in reply to the letter which I have already offered in regard to the sailing of these steamers.

Mr. Beers: Can it not be understood that these letters are all received over one objection?

Mr. Guiler: Yes; I have a number of them to offer; it will save time if the objection apply to all.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 94.

1450 Anne C. H. Nyland

Q. Does this letter from the Holland-Amerika Line, New York, dated June 26th, 1906, to the Holland-Amerika Line, Rotterdam, refresh your recollection as to whether or not the Noordam was selected by the small committee as a fighting steamer against the Rossia? A. Yes, this steamer has been selected as a fighting ship.

Q. And in the same letter that the Friederich Wilhelm was also selected as a fighting steamer against the Rossia? A. Apparently, yes.

Mr. Guiler: I offer the letter in evidence.

1451 Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 95.

Mr. Dorr: All these letters offered in the letterpress copy books, if there is any question about their authenticity, if you wish to reserve that, I have no objection if you call it specifically to our attention. Of course, if there is any serious question about their authenticity and you can satisfy us that it is not genuine, that is a different matter.

Mr. Spooner: They go in under the general objection, subject to stipulation.

Mr. Dorr: Yes, sir; the objection of incompetency in the light of proof of authenticity.

It is understood the objection of incompetency applies to all these letters, Exhibits 93 to 139 inclusive.

1463 By Mr. Guiler:

Q. How were the provisions of Agreement "AA" of February, 1908, carried out, where one line was plus and the other minus in the pool? A. I have no knowledge of that, sir.

Q. You have no knowledge as to whether compensation was made to the lines which were plus or minus in the pool? A. No, sir.

Q. Or whether arrangements for compensation was made by the other line? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever talked with anybody in your line in regard to compensation matters? A. I may have done so.

1464 Q. Have you heard the provision for compensating the various lines which were either plus or minus in the pool and had not their proper quota? A. You mean passengers or money?

Mr. Burlingham: Money or passengers?

Q. I will say according to Agreement "AA," or amendments thereto? A. I have no knowledge.

Q. Have you discussed with Mr. Gips, the passenger agent of the line?

Mr. Spooner: That is improper and I object to it.

Q. (Continuing.) The managing agent of the line?

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to.

(Mr. Dorr in conversation with one of the defendants.)

Mr. Burlingham: Are you going to try to prove an admission of Gips?

Mr. Dorr: Certainly.

Mr. Burlingham: That is a poor way to do it.

Mr. Dorr: He did not write everything, Mr. Burlingham, he wrote most of the things.

Mr. Guiler: Will you read the question.

Q. (Question read.) A. I may have done so. 1466

Q. Did you do it? A. I know we had a discussion now and then in regard to pool matters.

Q. I am asking in regard to compensation? A. I do not remember the particular subject.

Q. But you do remember that it was discussed, compensation matters at one time?

Mr. Spooner: He didn't say that.

A. It may have been so.

Mr. Guiler: He says it may have been so.

Mr. Spooner: He says so now in answer to your question.

1467

Q. I asked you if you did so? A. About a particular compensation or about a particular time?

Q. Well, I asked you if you did know? A. In a general way I discussed it with Mr. Gips.

Q. And you have discussed the compensation price for particular years, have you not?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as leading and not founded on any statement he has made, and as incompetent.

Mr. Guiler: He has not made many statements.

1468 A. It may have been, I do not remember.

Q. You know that a certain compensation price was fixed every year, do you not? A. I heard about it; yes, sir.

Q. Well, you know it, do you not? A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. You know it was fixed at one hundred marks some years and one hundred and ten other years? A. I have no personal knowledge of that matter. I may have been informed but I don't know anything about it.

1469 Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Gips or with members of the small committee as to the compensation for the various fighting steamers?

Mr. Spooner: I renew my objection. It seems to me this whole line of questions is improper.

A. It may have been so.

Q. Was it not so? A. I presume I had a conversation on that point.

Q. You had a conversation? A. I presume I had a conversation on that point with members of the small committee.

Q. Well, did you have it? A. Can you give me
1470 any special date or any time?

Q. I asked you if you had ever had a conversation of that kind? A. I am sorry to say I must answer I do not remember, unless you specify a time or date, or when.

Q. Well, then you don't remember anything about it, is that the idea? A. If you ask the question this way, I am sorry to say I do not remember.

Q. Never mind; I asked you a question as to whether you remember? A. In a general way I had a conversation with members of the small committee on that matter.

Q. What was the conversation? A. I do not recollect the details, it is over two years or three years ago.

Q. Were arrangements from time to time made as to compensating the fighting steamers? A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Did you discuss such arrangements with members of the committee? A. I gave you the answer to that question, I may have discussed from time to time with members of the small committee, but to give you details, I cannot.

Q. Your memory reaches back to this, then you did discuss it? A. I have a vague impression I did; yes, sir. 1472

Q. What were the arrangements that you discussed? A. I could not tell you sir.

Q. You do not remember the basis of the arrangement for compensation? A. As I said before I have no personal knowledge on this matter; all I know is only by hearsay.

Q. Who did you hear it from? A. I could not say that; I might have heard from different parties.

Q. What party did you hear it from? A. That is what I don't remember, sir, who told me about this, it may have been Mr. Gips.

Q. Was it not Mr. Gips? A. I couldn't tell you; it may have been somebody else. 1473

Q. Who could it have been? A. One of the other members of the small committee.

Q. One of the other members of the small committee? A. Maybe, I don't know.

Q. Who else? A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Did you hear it from Mr. Sandford, did you discuss it with Mr. Sandford? A. I do not remember having discussed the matter with Mr. Sandford.

Q. Then you cannot mention any one in particular? A. I mentioned Mr. Gips.

1474 Q. Outside of Mr. Gips, you cannot mention any one with whom you discussed the matter? A. The members of the small committee.

Q. Outside of those four, or rather three? A. There are more than that.

Q. You think there are no more than that? A. No; more than three members of the small committee.

Q. Cannot you recall now any one that you have discussed it with? A. I remember I have discussed it with Mr. Gips.

1475 Q. Then you remember the subject of your conversation with Mr. Gips at that time? A. No, sir.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Burlingham:

Q. Mr. Nyland, it was in May, 1908, that you were made a member of this committee? A. I presume it was, sir.

Q. Did I understand you correctly to say that it was the managing agent of your line that notified you that you were a member of the committee, or was it some one else? A. I stated that I was appointed at the meeting held by the general managers and passenger agents of the lines, according to my 1476 recollection.

Q. How many other members were there of the committee? A. There were three members.

Q. Who were the original members? A. It was Mr. Winter, Mr. Farley and myself.

Q. Mr. Winter of the North German Lloyd? A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Farley of the International? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long did you serve on the committee? A. I think one month.

Q. Now, just describe in your own way briefly what they did? A. The committee; you want me to explain?

Q. Yes. A. The committee was appointed for the purpose of doing away with the unfair and demoralized competition, brought about by outside lines, and in order to do away with the injury done as far as possible, they selected or rather suggested the steamer to run on or about the same date as the other steamer and made such a rate for such steamer as to be able to accomplish the purpose.

Q. To whom did the committee suggest the particular steamer? A. To the men who owned that steamer. 1478

Q. For instance, if the President Lincoln was suggested or selected by the committee, who was notified of that fact? A. Hamburg-American Line.

Q. Who suggested the rate? A. Those three members fixed and then came to a conclusion that a certain rate would be justified.

Q. Was the sailing date of the selected steamer changed? A. Never

Q. Was the rate suggested ever less than the rate of the outside steamer? A. No, sir.

Q. Now what do you base that statement on; you say so with great positiveness? 1479

Mr. Dorr: I assume he bases it on his knowledge.

Q. Is it based on your knowledge? A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were a large number of agents, were there not, of the line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And circulars were issued to each of these agents, were they? A. You mean by our company?

Q. Yes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were those confidential circulars or a matter of common knowledge? A. Confidential for agents; they were not meant for the general public.

Q. And I notice in some of those offered in evidence by the District Attorney the other day, that the rate was stated and the commission was stated? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that usual? A. Yes.

Q. What was the commission? A. Two dollars.

Q. Was it ever more? A. Never more; no, sir.

Q. You are quite sure of that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that if the rate was fixed at $25 and the commission was $2, the public paid $25 and the agent took $2? A. Yes, sir.

1481 Mr. Dorr: I object to that unless the witness was present at the various sales to the public. No objection to his testifying what the different rates to the public were. I move to strike the answer out as not responsive.

Q. Do you know what the commissions of the North West Transport Line were? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they? A. Any amount up to $4 or $5.

Mr. Dorr: I would like to object and ask the Court to cross-examine the witness as to his knowledge of the commissions paid by a 1482 line with which he was not an officer or an employee. Please note that the United States Attorney was not permitted preliminary cross-examination to test the witness's knowledge before he was asked the question.

Mr. Burlingham: Is he your witness or not?

Mr. Dorr: He is a hostile witness.

Mr. Burlingham: For the reason I am asking the source of his knowledge now.

Q. How do you know that the commissions ran up to four and five dollars? A. An agent, an employee of the line told me.

1483

Mr. Dorr: I ask that that be stricken out as absolutely hearsay.

Q. Have you any other source of knowledge than what was told you?

Mr. Dorr: Does the defendant consent that that be stricken out.

Mr. Burlingham: No, not at all.

Q. Have you any other source of knowledge than what was told you by the agent? A. In regard to commissions or rates?

1484

Q. Commissions allowed? A. I heard it from a man in the steamship business, passenger agent business.

Q. Well, have you ever seen the advertised rates of the North West Transport Line, for instance on the east side, in the agencies? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Many times or infrequently? A. Whenever I passed through that section of the city.

Q. Where have you seen them? A. On Essex Street, Rivington Street.

Q. In the offices or outside? A. In show windows.

Q. Printed or blackboards? A. Sometimes written, mostly written.

Q. Well, now, have you compared them with their circulars? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do they compare with the circulars? A. Invariably lower.

Mr. Dorr: Objection; if you desire to press this question as to the witness's observation of written documents, the written documents not being offered in evidence. Do you insist on asking that question?

Mr. Burlingham: You have done it for four days. Make a motion to strike it out.

1486 Mr. Dorr: I have made my objection. Make my objection in detail. The Government objects on the ground that the question calls for the statement of the witness as to the contents of statements, written statements which are not produced, and it is not only not the best evidence, but also calls for hearsay.

Q. If I understand you correctly, Mr. Nyland, walking through the East Side—Essex Street and other streets there—you have seen public rates on the North West Transport Line, have you? A. Yes, sir.

1487 Q. And these have sometimes been printed and sometimes written; have any of them been on blackboards? A. They might have been on blackboards; I am not sure about that.

Q. And you have compared those with the circulars which they have issued? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have frequently seen those circulars, have you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do I understand you to say that the rates published and shown in the windows were less than those published and printed on their circulars? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Look at that that I show you now (handing 1488 document to witness); is that the sort of circular issued by the North West Transport to their agents? A. I have seen some of their circulars; yes, sir.

Mr. Burlingham: May we offer that, marked for identification?

Mr. Dorr: If this witness is prepared to testify that this is a circular of his own knowledge, I have no objection to his doing so.

Mr. Burlingham: I have not gone so far; mark it for identification; he says he has seen similar ones.

Marked Defendants' Exhibit 1 for identification.

Mr. Guiler: I don't think you ought to offer this that way; those are our papers.

Mr. Bullowa: They were attached to an exhibit in the case.

Mr. Dorr: I do not think it should be done without asking our permission.

Q. Is it with documents like this marked for identification one that you have made the comparison that you have just described? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the small committee of which you were a 1490 member have anything to do with the discipline of agents or anything of that sort? A. Not particularly, no, sir.

Q. Was there any committee on that subject? A. There was a special committee several years ago on that matter, to deal with all agency questions.

Q. Were you a member of that committee? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long back have you had a rule that agents for the Conference Lines should not be agents for outside lines? A. I think that rule has existed as long as the conference existed.

Q. Does it go back of 1892, do you think? A. 1491
Maybe, yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been here? A. With our company since 1897.

Q. Here in New York how long? A. In New York three years, four years in Chicago.

Q. Now while you were a member of that committee on agencies and agency questions, did you have occasion at times to discipline agents for violating your rules? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the necessity of that discipline? A. In order to keep proper control of agents and in order to properly conduct our own business.

1492 Q. What was the difficulty with regard to agents; explain it in your own way? A. We asked our agents to maintain rates, in order not to discriminate against the public; that one should not pay more and the other less for the same vessel. Agents sometimes in order to make a sale would cut the commission and as soon as that was found out, the agents were disciplined.

Q. You mean they would give the passenger the benefit of the commission? A. Yes, sir; or part of it.

Q. And that system has been in vogue a great many years, has it? A. Yes, sir.

1493 Q. Do you regard it as important to the proper conduct of the business? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I object to the witness answering questions until counsel has had an opportunity to object. I object on the ground that Mr. Nyland's opinion on the matter is entirely irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Burlingham: Will you read the question again, please.

Q. (Question read.) A. Absolutely necessary, sir.
Q. You may state your reasons for that opinion?

1494 Mr. Dorr: Objected to on the same ground, Mr. Nyland's opinion is entirely irrelevant and immaterial.

A. In the first place for the protection of our agency system, necessary the agents should know the steamship lines were looking after their affairs.

Q. You mean the agents themselves? A. The agents themselves, knowing that they have protection from the lines that they would uphold and maintain rates.

Q. You said the agents themselves; what do you mean by that? A. In order to sell passage tickets, the steamship companies need representatives or agents and for their own protection it was necessary to adopt these rules, so that rates did not become demoralized and that passage tickets sold were sold at the same price everywhere.

Q. I understood you to say, Mr. Nyland, that for the sake of the agents it was desirable to fix the rates and hold the agents to them. Now I want you to explain that, why it is important for the sake of the agents themselves? A. Because fair competition and a well regulated business will show results. In case of unfair competition entering the field, then the results will be very poor all over. 1496

Q. Do you mean that if one agent sold at less and gave a greater commission to the passengers, dividing it with him, that would hurt other agents; is that what you mean? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Burlingham: That is all I have to ask —oh, there is one other question.

Q. Do I understand that the small committee had nothing to do with determining what steamers the excess passengers who could not be carried on the fighting steamer, should go on? A. It was suggested by the small committee, yes.

Q. To whom was that suggestion made? A. To the men who owned the steamer on which this excess should go. 1497

Q. Now I want to ask you whether, after having suggested or selected a steamer and reported it to the line owning that steamer, you made any reports to the conference or to Mr. Sandford on the subject? A. No, sir; we did not.

Q. Did you have anything to do with him in the matter? A. No, sir.

Q. Did he have anything to do with you in the matter? A. No, sir.

Q. Did he give you any instructions in the matter? A. No, sir.

Q. The District Attorney has referred in some of his questions to a letter from your line, dated, I think, May 28th, 1908, in which reference is made to a cablegram from Mr. Peters. Do you know by whom that cablegram was received? A. I don't remember; no, sir; I don't know.

Q. Was Mr. Peters in the habit of sending cablegrams to the Holland-Amerika Line? A. No, sir.

Q. Were you in the habit of cabling to him? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any instance that you ever did so direct? A. No, sir.

Q. Or otherwise? A. No, sir.

Q. Did the small committee have anything to do with the matter of compensation for carrying excess passengers, or anything to do with the financial matters? A. No, sir.

Q. You know nothing about that? A. I don't know anything about it.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Nyland, you say that the Holland-Amerika

1500 Line did not have direct communication with Mr. Peters, is that right? A. To the best of my recollection we never had a communication with Mr. Peters.

Q. And the small committee had no direct communication with him? A. We may have written a letter to Mr. Peters, yes, sir. If I remember correctly it was the small committee who sent one letter to Mr. Peters.

Q. Now, Mr. Peters was the secretary under the pool agreement, was he not, Pool Agreement "AA"? A. I know he was the secretary of the N. D. L. V.

Q. And also under the agreement which has been put in evidence here, Agreement "AA," in which all of the lines mentioned in that agreement were parties? A. Very likely.

Q. Now then, in communicating with that secretary, who was the common representative of the lines abroad and the lines here which were a party to that agreement, was it communicated through Mr. Sandford? A. No, sir; I don't think so.

Q. No communication sent through Mr. Sandford? A. Through Mr. Sandford to Mr. Peters?

Q. Yes. A. I don't think so.

Q. How were communications had between Mr. Peters then and the conference lines in this country and the small committee? A. It may have been; I can only testify to what I know for our line and I know that our company never sent a message to Mr. Peters through Mr. Sandford.

Q. But you recollect Mr. Sandford's testimony, do you not, that cablegrams would come from secretary Peters to him or to his office and then he would distribute them to the proper persons, such as the small committee?

Mr. Burlingham: I object, this is cross-examination.

A. Quite natural; yes, sir.

Q. And the small committee then, did it not have correspondence with Secretary Peters on the other side, through Mr. Sandford's office? A. Small committee?

Q. Yes? A. No, sir.

Q. As to this election ship? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you prepared to say positively as to that? A. So far as I know; yes, sir.

Q. You recall Mr. Sandford testified to the contrary, do you not?

Mr. Burlingham: I renew my objection.

A. No, what did Mr. Sandford testify to; I have not seen that.

Q. Well, you were here during part of his testimony, were you not? A. No; only a small part of it.

Q. Well, if there were cablegrams which purported to relate to the small committee's business, which were transmitted through Mr. Sandford, would you be prepared to say that such communication did not in fact take place in that way? A. In case I have 1505 evidence laid before me, of course, I would acknowledge it, but not to the best of my remembrance.

Q. You mean to say then nothing other than that you have no recollection one way or the other in the matter? A. Only that cables were sent by Mr. Peters to Mr. Sandford?

Q. In regard to the selected committee? A. I don't know that.

Q. Will you say they were not? A. I will not say.

Q. Will you say they were not sent in regular course of business by Secretary Peters, through Mr. Sandford for the information of the small committee?
1506 A. I cannot answer the question; I do not know; I do not recollect.

Q. I understood you to testify in answer to Mr. Burlingham's question that you had been a member of the small committee for a month; is that the only time you were a member of this small committee? A. No; if I remember it correctly the committee was organized for three months duration, but every month another member was selected to fill the vacancy, so that one member would serve three months, another would serve two months and the third man one month only and then gradually it was provided for that a committee always did consist of three members.

Q. Was that one month's service which you have testified to in response to Mr. Burlingham's question, the only service you had on that committee? A. No; whenever the three months were up, I would have the opportunity of serving again.

Q. Then repeatedly thereafter you were a member of that committee, besides the time to which you have testified? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you last a member of that small committee? A. I think that whole committee went out of existence in the beginning of 1910.

Q. There have been no meetings of the small committee since that time? A. No, sir; but meanwhile it was reorganized to the best of my recollection, it ended altogether in the beginning of 1912.

Q. Since that time fighting ships have, from time to time been designated, have they not? A. May I ask what you call fighting ships?

Q. We will call them defending ships, ships which were employed in defending the Trans-Atlantic Lines against what you have designated as unfair competition? A. I don't know about that.

Q. You don't know whether any ships have been selected, fighting ships or defending ships, whatever you choose to call them? A. By whom?

1509

Q. Have been selected to run in sailing competition with the ships of the Uranium line? A. By whom?

Q. Do you know whether or not ships have been selected since 1910? A. I cannot tell you anything about that.

Q. You do not know anything about it, haven't you any idea as to whether such have been selected? A. I may have an idea, but I do not know anything.

Q. What is your idea about it? A. I have found the coincidence that whenever the Uranium Line steamers sail, that on or about the same day another steamer sails at reduced rates.

1510 Q. That is an interesting coincidence? A. Yes.

Q. Merely a matter of coincidence, not a matter of selection by any one? A. I don't know; I gave you my idea; that is why I say the thing is a remarkable coincidence.

Q. Have you any idea as to what is responsible for this coincidence that you regard as remarkable? A. I cannot testify as to those facts; only my own ideas.

Q. Your ideas happened to be a matter of fact; what is your idea as derived from your expert knowledge of the steamship business, for which you have been testifying to Mr. Burlingham, as to the cause 1511 of this remarkable coincidence; what is your expert opinion about it? A. Well, I am not an expert, sir.

Q. Why, you will have to let us judge that, Mr. Nyland. What is your opinion as to the cause of this remarkable coincidence? A. My idea is or my belief is that the lines in Europe were pretty well posted about the sailing of the Uranium Line.

Q. By the lines of Europe do you mean the lines which are represented in the Continental and North American Conference and Atlantic American Conference? A. All the lines that are interested.

Q. When you use the phrase "all the lines" do you intend to include any lines which are not represented 1512 in the North Atlantic or Continental Conference? A. Well, I mean all the lines that are interested in the North American trades, passenger trades.

Q. The Uranium Line is interested in North American trade, is it not? Do you intend to include that one when you said all of the lines? A. Yes, I mean that all of the lines in Europe, that means all the lines interested in North American passenger trade.

Q. Including the Uranium Line? A. Including the Uranium Line; those who were interested in the sailing of the Uranium Line.

Q. All these lines, including the Uranium Line, have a joint interest in what the Uranium Lines is doing, is that it? A. Not a joint interest, just simply interested in the sailing of the Uranium Line.

Q. Each line's interest then is entirely independent then in your mind? A. No, I don't think it is independent.

Q. Now, let us get down to it. Isn't it your belief that what happened is that the various lines which are parties to Agreement "AA" and supplemental agreements thereto, ascertained the rates which were being offered by the Uranium Line and the dates of the sailing of its ships and appoint or select a ship from one of the lines, which is a party to Agreement "AA" or supplemental agreements, and provide for its sailing as a fighting or competitive or defending ship, whatever you choose to call it, against the ship of the Uranium line which is scheduled to sail on that particular date? A. I don't know that, sir. 1514

Q. I am asking you what is your belief? A. I am not competent to answer that question.

Q. Have you any belief on the matter or opinion on the matter? A. I can't say that, sir.

Q. You cannot say whether you have an opinion or belief on that? A. No, sir.

Q. Your mind is an entire blank? A. No, sir, I do not want to give you the impression of a wrong opinion. 1515

Q. But you have an opinion in your own mind in the matter? A. I am not competent to form a good opinion on the matter, sir.

Q. Let us judge that, or the Court judge it when they read your testimony; that is not for you to do; that is for the Court to pass upon?

Mr. Spooner: He means intellectual competency, not legal competency.

1516 Q. Now have you any opinion? A. Well, sir, an opinion that means—

Q. Just answer my question, yes or no? A. Based upon certain factors or causes.

Q. I am not asking you on what you based your opinion; I have asked you whether you have an opinion? A. I am not competent to have an opinion.

Q. Have you an opinion, I do not care whether you are competent or not at the present moment; that is for the Court to pass upon, not you or I. Have you an opinion? A. Yes, I have an opinion.

1517 Q. What is your opinion? A. Well, it is hard to express.

Q. Well, do your best? A. It may be that there is some understanding does exist.

Q. To the effect which I have described in my question? A. No, sir, this question is so long I can't remember all what you said.

Q. (Question read)? A. Well, it is possible; it is all I can say.

Q. Now, does that appear to you to be the most reasonable explanation of this remarkable coincidence? A. I am not competent to tell about that.

Q. As to whether that is a reasonable explanation? A. Because I don't know all of the causes. I do not 1518 know any of these agreements you refer to, might have seen them but I don't know them.

Q. Well, you have not in mind the names of the steamship companies to which I refer, is that it. Of course I can make my question clear on that point by enumerating the steamship lines, if you desire? A. I presume you refer to the members of the American-Atlantic Conference?

Q. Yes, you know what those companies are? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, you have no question in your mind but that as a matter of fact, since 1910, ships which were the ships of one or the other of the various lines which are the members of the Atlantic Conference, have sailed on the same date as the ships of the Uranium Line; that is true, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it has happened, has it not, if not invariably, almost invariably that the rates for third class business advertised to the public by the ships of the conference lines has been reduced from the rates which is originally charged for steerage business on that ship, for the particular sailing which occurs on the same date as the sailing of the Uranium Line ships? A. Have such rates been reduced, yes, sir.

Q. And that the transaction appears to be the same as the sailings of the various so-called fighting ships, which took place while you were on the small committee, which designated such fighting ships? A. Apparently there was a similarity, yes, sir.

Q. That is apparently there has been no change in the plan of operations, except that the designation or selection of the particular ship of the Conference lines, has not been made in New York City? A. I don't know anything about it, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other change or can you think of any other change that has occurred in this system? A. Well, how can I compare the two matters, while I know the one and not know the other?

Q. Do you know of any other difference than that in the operations of the system? A. I cannot express any answer to that question, as long as I only know one of the two methods.

Q. Do you know of any other difference, I am asking you, what you know; do you know of any other difference; you say the results are the same; do you know of any other difference in the system which produced those results other than the facts that the designation of the so-called fighting ships is not made now 1522 by the small committee in New York? If you know of any other difference in the system, why please state what it is? A. I do not see any difference, no, sir.

Recess until 2:00 o'clock P. M.

Afternoon session.

ANNE C. H. NYLAND recalled:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

1523 Q. Mr. Nyland, have you during the period since 1908 been accustomed to charging the same steerage rate for all of these steamers of your line? A. Since 1908?

Q. Yes? A. No, sir, the rates have changed.

Q. I don't know that I put my question very clearly; what are the ships of your line? A. There are five steamers which carry passengers.

Q. Do you charge the same steerage rate for each one of them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no difference between the rates of your steamers? A. No, sir.

1524 Q. Is that true of all the lines which are members of the conference? A. No, sir.

Q. Take the North German Lloyd, do the rates vary with the steamer? A. Yes.

Q. What is the highest rate that is charged for the North German Lloyd steamers? A. The express steamer of the North German Lloyd between Breman and New York?

Q. Yes, what is that rate, or what have they been during the last four years, if you can recall, if they have varied? A. They have varied; sometimes higher and sometimes lower.

1525

Q. What is the ordinary rate if you can state it? A. Around $38.

Q. That is on eastbound? A. On eastbound.

Q. And on westbound, what is it? A. It may be higher, dependent upon the conditions and circumstances.

Q. It is ordinarily $40, is it not? A. Around that, yes.

Q. On westbound? A. Yes.

Q. What do they charge for the steamers that are not express steamers on the North German Lloyd? A. The regular steamers charge about $3 lower.

1526

Q. Now, how about the Hamburg-American; is there any difference between the different steamers on the Hamburg-American? A. In the same way, yes. You mean for the period between 1908, and now, isn't it?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. And the same range of difference, about $3 difference between the express steamer and the other steamer, or is it sometimes more? A. The Hamburg-American Line today does not have express steamers, so there is no difference between the—

Q. Do they only have one steerage rate for all the steamers of the line? A. Yes, to the best of my memory, yes.

Q. But at times they have had different rates, have they not? A. Yes.

Q. On the different steamers? A. Yes.

Q. And the same way with the Cunard Line? A. Yes.

Q. Did they have higher rates for certain steamers than others, if you remember? A. If I remember correctly, yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Nyland, are you familiar with the tariff rates on continental points, eastbound? A. Pretty familiar, yes.

1528

Q. And you are familiar with them from the different European ports? A. Fairly, yes.

Q. From what part of Europe does the great bulk of the westbound steerage traffic come? A. From ports of Hamburg, Bremen, Rotterdam, Antwerp and Havre.

Q. And where does that traffic originate on the continent of Europe, the bulk of it? A. Principally in Austria, Hungary, Russia—that's all.

Q. Are you familiar with comparative rates to and from ports in Russia to Hamburg and Bremen and Antwerp and Rotterdam? A. I have a general idea, yes.

Q. Is there a difference between them? A. Oh, yes.

Q. And in favor of what port is that difference? A. Usually Hamburg has the lowest rates from the interior of Russia to the port as the distance is shortest.

Q. And would Bremen ordinarily have a lower rate than Antwerp say? A. It does not make much difference; there may be a little.

Q. You have stated that the object of the small committee was to protect the conference line against unfair competition? A. Yes.

Q. Now, the unfair competition which you have mentioned for instance, 1909, was the unfair competition of the Uranium Line or the North West Transport Line? A. Yes.

1530

Q. In what particular was this competion to your mind unfair? A. The Northwest Transport Line or the Uranium Line published circulars on which or by which a certain rate was given; they never sold tickets at these rates; a commission from $3, $4 and $5 was allowed, making such a low rate.

Mr. Spooner: Was that charged to the passenger?

The Witness: To agents.

A. (Continuing.) Making such a low rate that it was quite natural people who didn't know anything about traveling by steamships wanted to avail themselves of said lower rates, and the tickets were sold between the net rate published by the Uranium Line and the public rate.

Q. The Uranium Line published a rate, ordinarily published a rate of $28 eastbound and $30 westbound, did it not, from Rotterdam—the Uranium Line published a rate of $28.50 eastbound and $30 westbound, did it not? A. Sometimes, not always.

Q. Sometimes lower than that? A. Yes.

Q. Did you regard it as unfair competition for the Uranium Line to publish a rate of $28 eastbound and $30 westbound? A. Taking into consideration the high commission they paid, yes.

Q. What was unfair if they could do this at that rate, about their charging that rate? A. They could do business at any rate, no matter what the rate was published by them.

Q. Do you mean to tell me that they did business at rates less than the published rates— A. Yes.

Q. When you did not oppose them with fighting steamers, is that what you mean to testify? A. Yes, that is what I mean.

1533

Q. That is what they always do; you are testifying now from your own knowledge? A. To the best of my knowledge, yes.

Q. You have stated under oath that they did not adhere to their published rates when you did not compete—on the occasions if there were any in which you did not put fighting steamers on? A. To the best of my knowledge, yes.

Q. Is it a fact that as soon as you learned that these steamers were being put on by the competing line you immediately and without waiting to see what happened appointed fighting ships? A. We suggested a fighting ship.

Q. Immediately, as soon as you learned there was to be these competing steamers, isn't that so? A. Let me understand the question right. We knew maybe three or four years ahead that the Uranium Line was advertising sailings—

Q. Yes? A. But here this competing rate as you will call it was never made until about a week before the sailing time.

Q. You mean the competing rate? A. Yes.

1535 Q. And just as soon as these lines started in to enter the North Atlantic steerage traffic the conference lines took measures to appoint fighting steamers, did they not? A. Yes, they appointed fighting steamers.

Q. So that just as soon as the opposition steamers started in they were met by your fighting steamers? A. I don't quite understand that.

Q. As soon as the opposition, the independent steamer lines put steamers on they were in fact met by your fighting steamers? A. Yes, but not until about a week before sailing time.

Q. You did not publish your cut rate until a week before sailing time? A. Yes.

1536 Q. There is nothing unfair, is there, in an independent line carrying steerage passengers at a rate less than the ships of the conference lines? A. No, sir.

Q. There is nothing unfair, is there, in the independent line paying a larger commission to the agents than the conference lines do, is there? A. Yes, there is in case this commission is used to cut rates.

Q. Just one minute. The conference lines have a rule which forbids any conference agent to sell tickets for an independent line, does it not? A. Yes.

Q. And an agent then who acts for the independent line is in a position that he can act only for one line? A. Yes.

Q. Is he not? A. Yes.

Q. And instead of being able to make a small profit on a large number of transactions for a large number of lines he is confined for his remuneration to the infrequent sailings of a single non-conference line, is he not? A. Yes.

Q. And is it not, therefore, eminently reasonable and necessary if agents are to be obtained for such an independent line that they should receive a higher commission than is paid by the conference lines? A. I don't see that.

Q. Don't you see that the opportunities of the steamship agent for making money out of the business are less where he represents a line, one line, with a semimonthly sailing than they are with an agent who represents all of the conference lines with ships sailing practically every day, some times more than one ship a day? A. Why doesn't he become agent for the conference then?

Q. He would become an agent for the conference lines, would he not, unless he could receive a larger compensation from the independent line; that is what you would do, would you not, if you were such an agent? A. I would throw up the business in disgust if I could only represent an independent line.

Q. You would be unwilling, would you not, to act for an independent line unless you received a large compensation per ticket than what you received for the conference lines? A. I don't think it would pay.

Q. That is, it would not pay and don't pay on the independent lines unless the agent receives a larger commission? A. No, I don't mean that; even when you receive a larger commission in case he has to divide that commission with the public; what is left of the larger commission?

Q. You will say that it is unfair if the agent divides his larger commission; now, suppose that, as 1540 frequently happened, did it not, that line makes a lower rate—that the independent line has a rate of $28.50, with a $3 commission, and a fighting ship is put on with a rate, we will say, of $27.50, with a $2 commission, should you not say that it would be necessary for the agent of the independent line for himself to get business and keep that $1 cut on the part of the fighting ship, to give up part of his commission? A. They usually get more than that.

Q. Isn't it the fact that they do get more than that due to the fact of the superior ships and superior facilities of the conference boats; what is there unfair in 1541 that, Mr. Nyland?

Mr. Spooner: I think I will note an objection to this line of questions—as argumentative and not proper cross-examination.

A. One pays so much and the other so much. The tickets for the so-called independent lines are sold at different rates.

Q. The fighting ships are as a rule ships belonging to lines which have an established reputation, have they not? A. Yes.

Q. And are ships which are usually of larger tonnage and greater speed than the ships of the inde-1542 pendent lines, are they not? A. Not greater speed.

Q. Do you regard them as ships having superior facilities? A. I believe they are, yes.

Q. And more established reputation? A. Yes.

Q. Then what happens is this, is it not: the independent line taking into consideration its inferior facilities and lack of established reputation makes an initial rate for these points, we will say, of $28.50 and the conference lines instead of relying on the superiority of their vessels and superiority of their established reputation put on fighting ships with an advertised rate of either the same rate as the advertised rate of the independent line or a lower rate, isn't that what happens; isn't that what has been happening for the last six years in this business?

Mr. Spooner: I renew the objection. The government will have an opportunity later of summing up. I object to this as argumentative and not proper direct-examination.

A. The steamers of the so-called independent lines as I said before had more weight than the so-called fighting ships.

Q. Just answer my question; isn't what is happening this: The independent lines that publish a rate 1544 of $28.50, we will say, or $28, we will say, on eastbound traffic, the conference lines have changed the rate of a steamer of one of their conference lines which was to sail on the same day from, we will say, $33, reduced it down to $28 or down to $27, now, hasn't that thing happened and happened recently? A. I don't remember a single instance, but it is possible, yes.

Q. I am not asking you to recall specific instances, but has not that been the course of business? A. That may have been, yes.

Q. Now, that having taken place your lines, the conference lines, with their superior facilities and their 1545 superior agency facilities have a great advantage over the independent lines, have they not? A. A little, yes.

Q. And if your published advertised rate is $27 as against their advertised rate of $28, taken in connection with your superior facilities and more established reputation and better agency force, the fighting ships business that he should surrender a lot of his commishas a greater advantage, has it not? A. Yes.

Q. Now, what is there unfair then? Isn't it necessary if the agent of the independent line is to do any sion and charge a lower rate? What is their unfair about that to the conference lines? A. It demoralizes the business.

Q. Do you mean by demoralize the business that it enables the independent line to secure business? A. No, if any of the tickets for passage are sold at different rates.

Q. Can you suggest a fair method of competition by which the independent line would be able to do business? A. I have never given my attention to what an independent line should do or should not do.

1547 Q. You said without hesitation that this fighting ship proposition, this fighting ship system, was adopted to prevent the unfair competition of independent lines? A. Yes.

Q. Now, tell me how competition, any competition, could be conducted, under which the independent lines could live, what would in your estimation be fair? A. It is not for me to say what is fair.

Q. That is, it is not for you to say whether it is fair or unfair? A. No, I don't say that. I say it is not fair for me to say what is fair in regard to an independent line. I can only say that whenever a rate is published of an independent line of $28 and a ticket sold for $24, that is unfair; $25, $26, any price.

1548 Q. In other words, if the rates are reduced either by the independent line or its agent, to a figure in which the public is willing to travel by the independent line and then in your estimation that competition is unfair competition? A. As soon as any statement made by an independent line is misleading, I think that it is unfair.

Q. Misleading as to whom? A. To the public.

Q. Who is it unfair to then, this competition; is this competition unfair to the public? A. Whenever any man or any traveler wanted to buy a ticket on the independent line, in one place you could get a ticket for $24, assuming a $28 rate, and in another place you may have to pay $26 and a third place $25, and he is an agent of the Uranium Line. 1549

Q. Then the unfairness of this which you speak of is an unfairness not to the other lines, but to a member of the public, because one member of the public can travel cheaper than another, is that what you have in mind? A. Not only to the public, but also to the lines.

Q. How is it unfair to the lines? A. Because it demoralizes the business; it leaves it in an unstable, uncertain condition; people don't know which is which.

Q. You regard it as unfair competition for the independent line to reduce its rate after you have reduced the rate of the fighting ship below their rate; do you regard that as unfair? A. In the way you put it perhaps not, but there are other things which also should be known to you. 1550

Q. You would not regard it as unfair competition for the North German Lloyd to charge a lower rate or for your line to charge a lower rate, on a slow steamer than the North German Lloyd does on its express steamers? A. No, sir, but—

Q. Now, have you considered Mr. Nyland, whether there would be any probability of the agents of an independent line reducing the rates of those independent lines if you did not put these fighting steamers on; what would be the incentive of the agents to further reduce those rates? A. I don't know what their incentive may be, but they do. 1551

Q. Do they do it in the cases where you did not put on fighting steamers? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. When? A. I wouldn't say offhand, but I am quite sure I would be able to show you a steamer—

Q. Do they do it when you—isn't it a fact that the difficulty which the independent lines experience with their agents is due to the fact that you initiate a cut 1552 in rates which, because of your superior facilities and superior reputation, compel the independent lines to make a further cut and you people come back with a still further cut and the agents come to expect this cutting in rates and necessarily, in order to do business, give up or get accustomed to giving up part of their commission? A. We have to protect our agents.

Q. That is the only answer you can make? A. In explanation, yes.

Q. You think that is responsive? A. In explanation.

1553 Q. Have your lines tried the experiment of not opposing the independent lines with fighting steamers? A. I think so, yes.

Q. Did that result in unfair competition against your lines? A. On such occasions to the best of my recollection the independent lines carried the business that week.

Q. That is, they carried that business, did they not, not because of any sharing of commissions by the agents of the independent lines, but because the public preferred the rates fixed by the independent lines, even though their facilities and reputation was less established than yours, is that not true? A. Not exactly. In my opinion they were independent steamers, or 1554 rather steamers of independent lines, and no matter whether there was a reason or not, the tickets were very seldom, or perhaps never sold at the published rates.

Q. Now, Mr. Nyland, take the case where the rate established by the independent line is $28, we will say, eastbound, and that your rates eastbound, are $33.50; assuming that the agents of each line retained their commission, do you take it that the independent line would have any difficulty in filling its ship, or in obtaining a reasonable number of passengers for its ships? A. Perhaps not; I don't recall—

1555

Q. Do you regard it as unfair for the Northwest Transport and the Uranium Line to fix its steerage rate lower than your rate? A. As I said before, no.

Q. Well, then, when this fighting ship proposition started or this fighting ship system, the situation was merely, was it not, that the Northwest Transport Line and the Uranium Line when they started up advertised a lower rate for its inferior facilities than your lines were advertising for their superior facilities, that was the only fact that the conference lines went to work from, was it not? A. The Uranium line very frequently through their agents sold tickets for the so-called Rotterdam Line; our line is officially or unofficially also known as the Rotterdam Line, and I claim that the tickets at that low rate were sold for the Rotterdam Line conveyed the impression that they were sold for the Holland-Amerika Line.

Q. Do you mean to say that that has occurred prior to the—it could not have occurred, could it, prior to the first sailing of the Uranium Line? A. Yes, it occurred also in the Russian East Asiatic Line.

Q. You mean the Russian East Asiatic Line had done that? A. I think so, yes.

Q. The Russian East Asiatic is a member of the conference now, is it not? A. Now it is a member of the conference.

Q. So you can hardly lay that to the Uranium Line can you? A. No, I don't lay that to the Uranium Line, but the Uranium Line done the same.

Q. You started with the fighting ships as soon as the Uranium independent line advertised that it was going to enter into the business, did you not, in fact, began preparations for fighting ships, is that not so? A. That was already done long before the Uranium was there.

1558 Anne C. H. Nyland

Q. It had been done against other lines? A. Yes.

Q. But just as soon as you learned the Uranium also was going to operate you were determined to apply the same methods to the Uranium Line, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. And at that time the only evidences of unfair competition were that the Uranium Line was offering its inferior facilities for a less rate than you were offering your superior facilities? A. Yes.

Q. And that you have stated you regard as perfectly fair? A. Simply the question of rates, but not the 1559 question of the tactics used in order to sell tickets for the independent line in case they bribed agents.

Q. You did not wait to see whether unfair tactics would in fact be used before you determined on the fighting ships, did you; what you called unfair tactics? A. First the selling of tickets and the false representations and simply the cutting of rates.

Q. Just answer my question; when you determined on running fighting ships, the situation was, and the only element of the situation was, that the Uranium Line had announced it was going to enter the transatlantic steerage trade and was going to offer boats, inferior facilities at a less rate than your conference lines were offering for their superior facilities; that 1560 was the situation, was it not? A. The fighting ships were put on on account of the excessively low rates made by the Uranium Line.

Q. Now, we are coming to a little different proposition, are we not? You say the excessively low rates; did you regard the $28.50 as an excessively low rate for the steamships of the Uranium Line?

Mr. Spooner: Objection renewed. You are arguing with your own witness.

A. As compared with the other rates, yes.

Q. Do you mean to say that the Uranium Line could not at that rate, carry its complement of passengers and make a profit on the money invested in that line? A. I think they could make a profit on the money invested. 1561

Q. You think they could make it? A. Yes.

Q. Why was that an unreasonably low rate if they were making a profit on the money invested? A. I don't say it was unreasonable; we are entitled to make a profit on the money invested, but in case rates to a certain port of Europe are made at such a low figure without necessity, I cannot call that fair competition.

Q. That is to your mind any line which makes its rates not from the standpoint—not on the basis of what is the highest passenger rate, but merely on the basis of what would yield to it a fair return on the capital invested is not acting fairly to all the other lines? A. In case they obtained business through underhand methods. 1562

Q. The making of a lower rate is not an underhanded method in business is it, and publishing it? A. In the way it was done.

Q. The Uranium Line when it started in business published announcements, did it not, of the sailing of its ships, and the rates which were to be charged by those ships for the steerage business, did it not? A. Yes. 1563

Q. And immediately and prior to the first sailing, of any ship of the Uranium Line arrangement was made by the conference lines, was it not, to oppose the ship of the Uranium Line by the so-called fighting or defender ships? A. It was not done at the beginning.

Q. At the beginning of the Uranium Line? A. I don't think so; it was done after the Uranium Line went down—

Q. Are you prepared to state positively that that was not done with the very first steamer of the Uran-

1564 ium Line? A. I have no recollection of that, when the Uranium Line went down with the rates.

Q. Do you intend to state, or do you state, that the first ship run by the Uranium Line was not opposed by a fighting steamer selected by the small committee of the conferences? A. I may add before I have a discussion—do you refer now to the New York Line, to the Continental Line and the Uranium Line?

Q. I think my question speaks for itself. I am referring to the Uranium Line? A. When was the Uranium started; may I ask that question?

1565 Q. You have to call on your recollection? A. Then I can't answer the question.

Q. What is your recollection as to when the Uranium Line was started? A. To my recollection it was started long before the fighting steamers were appointed.

Q. Well, let me put it this way: Is it not true that the first ship which was sailed by the Uranium Line in the North Atlantic steerage traffic was opposed by a fighting ship selected by the conference? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Will you say that it was not? A. I don't know it.

Q. You don't know, one way or the other? A.

1566 No, sir.

Q. Well, what is your belief or best recollection? A. To the best of my recollection it was not the first.

Q. Just let us have that recollection as specifically as you can; what was the first ship of the Uranium Line; what was its first sailing and when? A. Perhaps you might enlighten my memory a little.

Q. The first sailing of the Uranium Line was, was it not, in April, 1910? A. It may be; I don't know, sir.

Q. You are prepared to say then, Mr. Nyland, that the first steamer of the Uranium Line was not opposed by a fighting steamer in April, 1910? A. I can't say that. The Uranium Line was the continuation of the Northwest Transport Line; simply the same line under another name, and in case we were opposing the other transport line's steamer we may have opposed the Uranium Line.

Q. From the start? A. Yes.

Q. How about the first ship of the Northwest Transport Line? A. That was a continuation of the New York and Continental Line.

1568

Q. And did you oppose the first ship of the Northwest Transport? A. I can't say, sir; I don't think that our committee was appointed before the establishment of the New York and Continental Line.

Q. Did you oppose the first ship of the Northwest Transport? A. In case we were opposing the ships of the New York and Continental Line it may be we were opposing the ship of the Northwest.

Q. Did you oppose the first ship of the New York and Continental? A. I don't think so, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that? A. As far as I can see, yes.

Q. How about the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. I don't think we opposed the first ship of the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

1569

Q. Don't you know that before there was a single sailing of the Russian Volunteer Fleet preparations were made to put certain ships of the Russian East Asiatic Line in competition with them and certain ships of the Hamburg-American Line? A. I don't recollect that sir.

Q. Now, as to the New York and Continental; have you a recollection on that point, or have you not? A. Very little.

1570 Q. One way or the other? A. One way or the other.

Q. I call your attention to Exhibit No. 130, which is already in evidence and ask you whether this does not refresh your recollection that as soon as the plans of the Russian Volunteer Fleet were made known, or were made public, that the pool lines adopted plans to fight that new line and that it was part of their plan that the Russian East Asiatic should enter the field, that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was entering upon, and further that the Hamburg-American or the North German Lloyd Line would put two steamers 1571 at the disposal of the East Asiatic Company to make this fighting service, and that any loss should be borne by the N. D. L. V. Lines? A. With this little speech of intention I don't know the intention has been carried out.

Q. But that appears to have been the intention of the pool lines, does it not? A. Apparently, yes.

Q. Do you recall that pursuant to the plan outlined in Government Exhibit No. 130, the letter of June, 1906, which has just been shown you, the Hamburg-American put on the service two of its steamers in connection with the steamers of the Russian East Asiatic Fleet? A. I don't recollect that.

1572 Q. You haven't any recollection about that at all? A. No, sir.

Q. Never heard of it? A. This letter says so, but I don't recollect it.

Q. The East Asiatic Line was at this time, was it, the beginning of the competition against the Russian Volunteer Line, was it not? A. How is that? I don't catch the first part.

Q. The Russian East Asiatic Fleet at the time of that competition, at the time that competition was begun against the Russian Volunteer Fleet, was a member of the conference, was it not? A. That may have been, yes.

Q. And do you recall that subsequently it ceased to be a member of the conference, do you not? A. That the Russian East Asiatic Line went out of the conference?

Q. Yes? A. My mind is not very clear on that subject, sir.

Q. You do recall, do you not, that provision was made by the conference lines at a subsequent period, subsequent to 1906, for fighting steamers to run in competition with the ships of the Russian East Asiatic Company? A. Yes.

Q. Were not those steps taken immediate on the 1574 withdrawal of the Russian East Asiatic Company from the conference? A. From the conference?

Q. From the conference? A. I don't remember that, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer in evidence what purports to be a circular of the Continental Conference, under date of December 27th, 1906.

Mr. Beers: I object to its admission on the ground that it refers to an agreement other than AA and is not within the issues.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 140.

Mr. Dorr: Also a circular of the Continental Conference under date of March 2nd, 1907. 1575

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 141.

A. (After looking at 140 and 141.) Yes.

Q. Looking at these circulars which have just been offered in evidence, does it not refresh your recollection that the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company were at one time members of the conference and that their connection with that conference terminated on or about December 27th, 1906? A. Yes.

Q. Now, following that, were not fighting steamers put on against the East Asiatic Company boats? A. I 1576 don't remember when the fighting steamers were put on.

Q. Were not competition steamers, if you choose to call them such, put on? A. That may have been so.

Q. Now, Mr. Nyland, do you recall whether or not the conference lines themselves did not at times allow an extra commission on tickets sold by their agents for fighting steamers, for passage on fighting steamers? A. An extra commission?

Q. Yes? A. Just now I have no recollection of it.

1577 Q. You have no recollection of it? A. No recollection of it, no, sir.

Q. Are you quite clear on that? A. Not quite clear.

Q. What is your best recollection?

Mr. Spooner: His best recollection is that he has no recollection.

A. My recollection is that there was not an extra commission paid.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the small committee urged that such an extra commission be paid? A. The small committee?

1578 Q. Yes. A. In 1906?

Q. At any time during this period we have been discussing, between 1906 and 1912? A. That means after the establishment of the small committee in 1908, between 1908 and 1912, isn't it.

Q. Yes. That an extra commission was paid? A. I have no recollection of that, sir.

Q. I show you Government Exhibit No. 31, and ask you whether that refreshes your recollection? A. Apparently the small committee recommended the adoption of an extra commission, in order—

Q. Was that policy followed? A. I couldn't say.

Q. I show you Government Exhibit No. 114 and ask whether that "N" is your initial? A. Apparently, yes.

Q. I ask you to read that exhibit and ask you whether that refreshes your recollection as to whether or not the small committee in the case of the "Estonia," in competition with "Uranium," an extra commission was granted by the Conference Line? A. (After reading.) According to this letter this extra commission was not paid.

Q. In the case of the "Estonia"? A. The "Uranium." 1580

Q. (Reading.) A. It never was paid.

Q. And that has worked with very good results? A. There it was, but not later on.

Q. But in that case you did give an extra commission? A. Yes.

Q. Turning again to the question of unfair competition by the independent lines, did you regard it as unfair competition for the Russian Volunteer Fleet to have established a ship service between Libau and New York, between which ports there had theretofore been no service? A. The establishment of the service, no, sir.

Q. You did not regard the establishment of that line as unfair competition? A. No. 1581

Q. Did you regard it as fair competition on the part of the Continental Lines for them to endeavor to prevent the Anglo-Continental Reisebureau of Rotterdam from acting as agent; did you regard it as fair competition for this combination of lines controlling practically all of the North Atlantic steerage traffic to bring pressure to bear on this bureau to prevent them from acting as agents of the Russian Volunteer Fleet?

1582

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question as assuming a state of facts not proven and contrary to the proof.

A. Well, that depends.

Q. You regard that as fair competition? A. That depends on what that Anglo Reisebureau which you mentioned, was.

Q. What it was? A. Yes.

Q. Well, apparently it was a bureau which acted as steamship agent in Rotterdam, apparently a responsible party? A. I cannot judge about this; it being in 1583 Europe I have no opinion on that matter.

Q. Do you regard it as fair competition on the part of the lines which were in the conference which controlled practically all of the North Atlantic steerage traffic to endeavor to prevent, or to enter into an agreement, with the Western Passenger Association by which the Western Passenger Association and the rail lines which it represented would agree not to grant independent lines the same commercial allowance which was being granted to the lines in the combination; is that your idea of fair competition?

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

1584 A. To the best of my recollection this commercial allowance was always granted to the outside lines.

Q. There is in evidence here, Mr. Nyland, I will refresh your recollection, an agreement between the Western Passenger Association or the lines which compose that association, and the conference lines to the effect that no commercial allowance shall be granted to a steamship line not a party to that agreement, and further there are the minutes of a meeting in 1909 to the effect that that agreement was being lived up to and that the commercial allowances were not being granted to the independent non-conference lines; do you regard that as fair competition? A. I was always in favor of allowing that commercial allowance here to the outside lines.

Q. And then from your standpoint the endeavor to prevent the independent lines from getting that commercial allowance was not fair competition? A. I haven't given it much thought.

Q. Do you regard it as fair competition for the conference lines to endeavor to prevent the independent lines from receiving any commercial allowance whatever in any territory on eastbound business? A. I believe that commercial allowance could only be ob- 1586 tained from the railroads.

Q. Could be obtained? A. Yes.

Q. In spite of an agreement which the ship lines had with the railroad lines? A. As well as I remember any steamship line, or, at least our company, has been in a position to obtain commercial allowances either one way or the other.

Q. That is your company has always obtained them, is that it? A. Yes, even though there was no agreement for them.

Q. Has your line ever obtained them when there was an agreement with the railroad lines and the other ship lines to the effect that they should not be granted to you? A. Usually we were in it. 1587

Q. You were always in it, were you not? A. Appeared to be, yes.

Q. Did I understand you, Mr. Nyland, that the rates of the conference lines fighting steamers had never been reduced below the rates of the independent lines? A. To the best of my recollection they were never reduced below the rates of the independent lines.

Q. Now, will you refresh your recollection by looking at this letter of July 9th, 1909, Exhibit No. 117? A. (After reading.) Well, this concerns what I said.

Q. You say this concerns what you said, and you are quite positive about that now, are you, that they were never reduced below? A. To the best of my recollection they were never below.

Q. I show you Exhibit No. 109, your initial is on that letter, is it not, Mr. Nyland? A. Yes.

Q. What is your best recollection now? A. (After reading letter.) According to that letter a rate was made of $25 on the Raglan Castle.

Q. Isn't it your recollection now on looking at this letter that the rate of the Volturno of the Northwest Transport Line was $30 and that the small committee 1589 fixed as a rate on the fighting steamer, the Estonia, a rate of $26? A. According to this letter, yes.

Q. Didn't you write the following week that that plan had worked very well, the letter of May 20th, 1909, Exhibit No. 111; did you inform your home office that the plan that you had followed in the case of the Estonia and Volturno had worked very well? A. Well, apparently had worked very well or satisfactorily.

Mr. Burlingham: Mr. Gips is here in response to a subpoena which was served on him this afternoon asking him to produce certain circulars to agents and other records of Euro-1590 pean railroad tariffs, and he told the marshal it was impossible for him to get it and appear at once, and the marshal advised him to come up, and he will make a search for them; do you want him to find the documents?

Mr. Dorr: We want him to find the documents as soon as possible.

Mr. Burlingham: You will give him a reasonable time to get them?

Mr. Dorr: Yes. I understand the railroad tariff is a printed document and that it is an easy matter to produce that, and as to the circulars he may look for them and produce them.

Mr. Bullowa: Mr. Straus appears in response to a similar subpoena. 1591

Mr. Shipman: For the North German Lloyd I produce a circular of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company giving the rates of railroad fare between points in Germany, Austria, Switzerland, etc., and Bremen under date of April, 1909, with corrections noted in red ink up to June 23rd, 1910; also a similar circular under date of April, 1911.

Also of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company concerning European railroad tariff under date of September, 1911; April, 1911; October, 1911 and certain circulars of 1911 and 1912 with a statement that all circulars prior to that time were destroyed prior to the service of any subpoena or any notice. 1592

Mr. Burlingham: In response to your request of last Thursday I have had search made at the offices of the conference for a copy of a letter from Mr. Lawson Sandford to C. B. Richards & Company in reply to their letter of February 28th, 1907, and no reply can be found; I have also looked for the minutes of the conference. I stated we had no minutes of the conferences for 1909 and 1910 and I find that no meetings of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference were held in 1909 or 1910, that no meetings of the Continental Conference were held in those two years and that the meetings of the American Atlantic Conference were held January 7th, 1909, March 18th of the same year, April 2nd, April 15th, June 3rd and July 29th. At the office of the conference there is no copy of this set of minutes, but I have the minutes here of the American Atlantic Conference from January 7th, 1909, to June 7th, 1909, and I produce them. 1593

1594 Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 142 for identification.

Mr. Burlingham: In response to the Government's request for the production of agreements with the railway companies or associations with regard to commercial allowances I have obtained from the conference quite a number of these documents, six in number.

Received for identification Petitioner's Exhibits 143 to 149.

The rates of railroad fare between points in Germany, Austria, Switzerland, etc., and Bremen are marked for identification Petitioner's Exhibit 149 for April, 1911.

1595 The same rates of railroad fare for April, 1909, marked Petitioner's Exhibit 150 for identification.

The European inland tariff to or from Rotterdam or to or from Libau of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company marked Petioner's Exhibit 151 for identification.

The European railroad tariff from Rotterdam and to or from Libau of the Russian American Line, re-issue of April, 1911, marked Petitioner's Exhibit 152 for identification.

European railroad tariff from Rotterdam and to or from Libau of the Russian American 1596 Line, re-issue of September, 1911, marked Petitioner's Exhibit 153 for identification.

A. C. H. NYLAND recalled:

Direct-examination continued by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Now, Mr. Nyland, I think you testified yesterday that the rate from the port of Hamburg to the territory from which the bulk of the North Atlantic immigrant traffic movement came was less than from the port of Rotterdam? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that when the fighting ship made a rate to Hamburg which was nominally the same as the rate of an independent line to Rotterdam, the fighting ship of the Conference Lines had the advantage of the lower inland rate to the territory from which the bulk of the North Atlantic steerage traffic was drawn? A. In case the ocean rates of the outside lines were nominally the same as the others; yes, sir.

Q. So that in effect the putting on of the fighting steamer with a rate to Hamburg which was nominally the same as that of the independent line to Rotterdam, the fighting steamer was in effect cutting under 1604 the Rotterdam rate, was it not?

The Witness: Will you read the question?

Q. (Question read.) Cutting under the independent line rate? A. In the announcement of rates, yes.

Q Now, I understood you to testify yesterday, Mr. Nyland, that you regarded it as unfair to the public that different members of the public might travel on the same ship, having paid a different rate for that transportation? A. I do not think it is right.

Q. You do not think it is right? A. No, sir.

Q. Now take one of your so-called fighting steamers; its sailing is ordinarily announced, is it not, with the ordinary rate say $30 or $35 or $33.50; you book passengers under that rate, do you not? A. Some- 1605 times; yes, sir.

Q. Now when you cut the rate, when it was appointed as a fighting steamer and you cut the rate we will say to $27, you booked passengers for that steamer for that rate, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if you make a still further cut say to $23 or to $21, you book passengers at that rate, do you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you, yourself carry on the same steamer, passengers who have booked at different rates? A.

To the best of my recollection we have always refunded the difference.

Q. You always have? A. Refunded the difference.

Q. That is you have always refunded the higher rate to the passenger; are you positive about that, Mr. Nyland? A. Well, as far as I can go, as far as my memory serves me.

Q. Have you data which will show whether or not that is a fact? A. I cannot recall that, sir.

Q. Well now, these fighting ships are as you have testified, a semi-monthly occurrence are they not? A. Yes.

Q. If you were in fact accustomed to refund any excess over the lowest rate charged on those particular ships, would it not be a matter of record and a record which could readily be produced? A. Not always, no; a refund may be made in cash, while also a cash entry has been made for the original sale.

Q. Where do you refund, to whom? A. Usually to the passengers; sometimes to the agent.

Q. When do you refund? A. When the fare is claimed.

Q. Do you inform the passengers that they can have that refund if they claim it, or do you only refund in case some particularly energetic passenger makes a claim? A. Generally the passenger knows from the other passengers what the rate is they pay, and then usually a claim is made and in such a case the difference is refunded.

Q. All you mean is that if the passenger makes the claim, then you make the refund? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you take no steps to insure that the passenger shall get a refund, by going to each passenger and making the proper refund? A. No, sir.

Q. You only pay claims if they happened to be presented? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if they do not happen to be presented, you keep the money? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Keep the excess? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I show you a letter under date of September 4th, 1908, which purports to be initialed by you, Exhibit 102, and I call your attention to the first paragraph of that letter, and that is an illustration or recalls an illustration, does it not of the situation which I have been examining you about? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that case the Staatendam had been appointed as a fighting ship, had it not? A. Yes, sir. 1610

Q. Forty-six of the third class passengers have been booked at the $32 rate? A. Yes.

Q. The others were all booked at the $23, were they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now do you recall whether you refunded the excess for the difference between the $23 rate and the $32 rate to the passengers? A. Very likely we have not refunded the difference.

Q. When a fighting ship was appointed was any notice sent to the agents when that ship had been booked to its capacity? A. In case we knew; yes, sir.

Q. Can you give me any instance when that was done? A. No, sir.

Q. If you find any instances hereafter, Mr. Nyland, 1611 please call them to our attention, so that they may be recorded on the record? A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact the fighting steamers frequently booked more than their capacity, did they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that event what did you do with the surplus passengers who had been booked for the fighting ship? A. Passengers booked in excess of the capacity of the fighting steamer, so-called, were transferred to another steamer.

1612 Anne C. H. Nyland

Q. Were transferred to another steamer? A. Yes.

Q. Sometimes that steamer was a steamer of a different line, was it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now on that steamer there would be, would there not, passengers proceeding at the regular rate advertised for it and also passengers had been booked at the lower rate, which had been announced for the fighting ship? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when did you say that the appointment of fighting ships, the selection of fighting ships in New York was discontinued, or if you prefer to use the word, when did New York cease to suggest the par-

1613 ticular fighting ships which should be employed? A. To the best of my remembrance in the beginning of 1910.

Q. Do you recall whether or not that was coincident with certain investigations which the Government was then making into the conduct of your line and other lines?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent.

A. It may have been the cause of it, but I don't know.

Q. Well you do recall, do you know, that it was 1614 just after that time that the defendant Adrian Gips was about to be tried in the Federal Courts, for the so-called commissions or allowances, allowed by the railroads for freight being forwarded by your lines?

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was it not just at that time that certain of the correspondence, original letters received from the Holland office, was obtained by the Government through the service of a subpoena, as it was in course of shipment out of the country?

Mr. Spooner: Objection renewed.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well now, do not those incidents refresh your recollection as to the facts that this discontinuance of the appointment of fighting ships was coincident with the Government obtaining these letters which have now been offered in evidence and its investigations into the Holland-Amerika Line?

Mr. Spooner: I object to this testimony and 1616 to a continuance of these questions and move to strike out the answers.

A. Not necessarily. At that time several investigations were pending and it may be not knowing whether perhaps sooner or later the lines would be asked explanations, I think that was one of the reasons why the fighting ship committee was dissolved.

Q. Wasn't it one of the reasons why it was dissolved, that it was considered desirable that persons in this country and within the jurisdiction and subject to the processes as witnesses, should not know too much about the details of that transaction?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to. 1617

A. No, not exactly.

Mr. Spooner: I think the question is improperly formed.

Mr. Dorr: If you object to the form, I will change it. I think the substance of it is the proper subject of inquiry. Now the witness has already answered "not exactly." I do not think I will withdraw the question. I will let him tell just what he means when he says, "not exactly."

1618 Q. What did you mean when you said "not exactly"? A. An investigation always causes a great deal of trouble, annoyance and loss of time to the parties who have to submit to it.

Q. And for the officers of the line who were on this side of the ocean, who were not directly concerned in the appointment and selection of fighting ships, it would be more difficult for the investigators to determine the facts as to them, would it not? A. I don't think that was the reason why it was stopped.

Q. You do not think that had anything to do with it? A. No, I don't think that is so.

1619 Q. You think it was then just a coincidence that it stopped about the time that the Government was investigating? A. There was a possibility that the Government might find fault with this committee.

Q. You have had an intimate knowledge, part of your duty was it not, to have an intimate knowledge of the passenger movement of the various Atlantic Lines? A. Fair knowledge; yes, sir.

Q. Now the Mediterranean lines are, are they not natural competitors of the North Atlantic Lines for certain of the business from central Europe and south and southeast of Europe? A. Partly.

1620 Q. Have the Mediterranean lines uniformly been in competition with the North Atlantic lines for this traffic, to which they are natural competitors?

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that, because there is no allegation in the bill of complaint regarding the Mediterranean lines. It is only the North Atlantic Conference that is mentioned in the bill, and I object further upon the ground that the question calls for a conclusion.

Mr. Dorr: The Government's position on this point is that the agreements under which the defendant lines were operating tended to result in a monopoly of the steerage traffic for certain territories and that it is relevant to the issues to determine whether or not as the result of agreement of the defendant lines what the competition was which they would naturally have sustained from Mediterranean lines? 1621

Mr. Bullowa: Do you not think, Mr. Dorr, in view of that statement, that you ought to reframe your bill?

Mr. Dorr: That may be a matter for the Court that I cannot pass upon.

Mr. Spooner: It is a matter for the Court to determine whether you have a right to take that position. 1622

Mr. Dorr: Surely.

Mr. Spooner: It is objected to on the further ground that it is irrelevant, without the issues made by the pleadings and incompetent.

Mr. Bullowa: I think now it would be only fair that we report the suggestion on the record and if the Government desires to go into these extraneous matters, that the bill of complaint be reframed before the testimony is taken.

Mr. Dorr: I think nothing is extraneous which tends to show that the defendant lines were in a position to make arbitrary rates as to the North Atlantic steerage traffic. You may answer. 1623

The Witness: What is the question?

Q. (Question read.) A. No, I don't think so.

Q. Now, Mr. Nyland, taking the period with which you have been familiar, from 1893 until the present time, what part of that period if any have the Mediterranean lines competed for the eastern Europe and southeastern Europe and central European steerage traffic for which they are natural competitors with the North Atlantic Lines?

1624 Anne C. H. Nyland

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

A. Have to look at the records to give you the exact dates, but I know that there has been a time when the Mediterranean lines were competing for south European business.

Q. Do you recall whether there was a period between 1906 and 1909 when you were doing that? A. May be; yes, sir.

1625 Q. Do you recall whether during that time there was any change in the Mediterranean Conference, in the membership of the Mediterranean Conference? A. I don't think during the controversy with European lines there was any conference.

Q. You do not think there was any conference during that time? A. No.

Q. There was open competition at that time between the various lines having service to the Mediterranean, not only among yourselves, but also with the North Atlantic lines, for such steerage business as was naturally competitive between the North Atlantic lines and the Mediterranean lines? A. No, sir; you used the expression "naturally competitive." Will you tell 1626 what business you refer to?

Q. Would you not regard that territory from which the rail rates to Italian ports were equal or less than the rail rates to the North Atlantic ports, as territory in which the Mediterranean lines would be natural competitors of the North Atlantic lines? A. The rate is not only the only reason for making or forming a competitive territory.

Q. That is one reason, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where there was that situation as to the rates, you would say that in that territory at any rate they would be natural competitors, would you not? A. Might have been competition; yes, sir.

Q. In the absence of some agreement between the lines, competition would normally result, would it not, in such territory? A. Not necessarily; no, sir.

Q. If we will say there is territory in southeastern Russia where the rail rates to Italian ports and the rail rates to the North Atlantic were substantially the same and there was no agreement or understanding between a line running to the North Atlantic ports and a line running to the Mediterranean ports, would there not ordinarily in the absence of some other circumstance 1628 which we have not taken into consideration, be competition between those lines for that traffic in that territory?

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question as assuming a state of facts not proven and as entirely too indefinite to permit of an answer.

A. The conditions are so entirely different between the ships sailing to the Mediterranean and to the North Atlantic, that even if the fare to the North Atlantic ports would be a little higher, passengers would prefer going by North Atlantic steamers.

Q. Then take the territory in which the fare to the Mediterranean ports is slightly or somewhat less than 1629 to the North Atlantic ports, in such circumstances there would normally be competition between the North Atlantic lines and the Mediterranean lines, unless there was some agreement between them? A. Competition has never been—

Q. Can you answer that question yes or no, Mr. Nyland, if not, make any explanation you desire? A. I cannot fully answer that question yes or no.

Q. Then answer it any way you see fit? A. In the same way as I said a moment ago in regard to the North Atlantic ports, so it is also true that many passengers paying a higher rate of fare in order to take a Mediterranean ship, will take the Mediterranean line in preference to the North Atlantic line.

Q. You mean there is a preference for the Mediterranean line? A. On account of the ships themselves.

Q. You mean there is a preference for the Mediterranean line or North Atlantic line? A. That offsets each other more or less.

Q. Is the preference for the North Atlantic line or for the Mediterranean line? A. That depends altogether upon the passengers booked, upon the class, 1631 nationality and everything else.

Q. Well, during the period when the Mediterranean Conference was suspended, there was, was there not, as a matter of fact, competition in the territory in which the rates to the Mediterranean ports and the North Atlantic ports were substantially the same? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Beers: Are you now enquiring as to the period covered by the existence of the conference or before?

Mr. Dorr: I think the period overlapped as I understand it, the Mediterranean Conference 1632 was not reformed until 1909, was it Mr. Nyland?

The Witness: It may have been, I do not know.

Mr. Bullowa: Of course, all of this is subject to the same objection as to the conference?

Mr. Dorr: Yes; all during the competitive period.

Mr. Beers: And when you refer to the Mediterranean Conference, you are not referring to any sub-agreements under "AA"; you are referring to an arrangement entirely anterior and during the time of the "AA"?

Mr. Dorr: The Mediterranean Conference. What I am referring to are the agreements which resulted in the formation of the Mediterranean Conference, some of which antedated "AA" and some of which as I understand it came into being later than "AA."

Q. During the period when there was the competition between the Mediterranean lines and the North Atlantic lines for steerage business there was an active competition, was there not, between those lines or certain of them for the steerage traffic from southeastern and central Europe? A. What do you call central 1634
Europe? How far do you draw that limit? According to the fare to the port?

Q. According to the fare to the port; the points from which the fare was substantially the same; put it that way? A. Yes, sir; very active competition.

Q. Now, is there at the present time such active competition? A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. And roughly speaking when did that competition terminate? If you find you have made any error in the date, Mr. Nyland of course, you will be given an opportunity to correct it; I just want your best recollection? A. I could not tell you the date or about the time when it was terminated, as our company was 1635 very little interested in that Mediterranean business, but to the best of my remembrance it must have been about 1908.

Q. Do you recall whether or not during this period when there was this competition for the Mediterranean business, whether or not the rates were the same as they are at the present time? A. I think they were lower.

Q. Substantially lower, were they not? A. Very likely, sir.

Q. Now, in regard to the agents which were employed by the conference lines, were there what is known as general agents? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What commission did the general agents receive? A. On what class of business?

Q. On third class business? A. Usually in cases where they were working on commission basis, $1.

Q. That $1 was in addition to the $2 which was paid to the sub agent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did they ordinarily work on the commission basis? A. Not all; some of the lines had their own offices.

1637 Q. Now, in regard to the enforcement of the rule 9 of the conferences, in regard to the employment by independent lines of conference agents, is it not true that you felt that that was a course of business which it was desirable should not become known to the public?

Mr. Beers: That is objected to as quite irrelevant and immaterial.

A. Will you please tell me what you refer to?

Q. I want you to give me your recollection. You remember rule 9, do you not, of the conference, in regard to forbidding conference agents to take the 1638 agency of independent lines? A. I did not know that.

Mr. Dorr: That is rule 9, is it not, Mr. Burlingham?

Mr. Burlingham: Yes.

Mr. Spooner: Why do you give it a number? Why don't you characterize it?

Mr. Dorr: That rule of the conference lines—

Mr. Burlingham: Mr. Shipman says it is rule 9.

Mr. Dorr: I am quite sure it is. It is in evidence. I have not the document at hand, but I am quite sure it is that.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Nyland that you felt that that rule was of such a character that its importance should not be given publicity? A. I don't know that any of the public was especially interested in this rule.

Q. I show you the letter under date of September 7, 1906, which I think is not yet in evidence, which purports to bear your initial, being a letter press copy of the letter from the Holland-Amerika Line in New York to the home office, and ask whether that is in 1640 fact your initial (handing witness letter)? A. There is no question about that, yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer this in evidence, letter of September 7, 1906.

Mr. Beers: I note the same objection as to the other Holland-Amerika Line letters. It is incompetent.

Letter marked Petitioner's Exhibit #162.

Q. You state in this letter, or purport to state in this letter: "We fully believe with you that the steamship companies could follow up with good results their different cases in which unauthorized persons sell or- 1641 ders in Europe. However, it remains a question whether this course is advisable. Similar matters if brought before a court may easily lead to further investigation of the present methods employed by the steamship companies which in many respects would cause unsatisfactory results. The course followed by the steamship companies in their different meetings to maintain control of the agents under their supervision is in many ways very arbitrary, and although from a steamship company's standpoint justifiable may be condemned if brought before an investigation com-

1642 mittee. For this reason we think it is very desirable to proceed slowly." Now, what were the methods that you were referring to there, Mr. Nyland? A. To the rules of conference.

Q. And to the rule 9, or the rule which forbade conference agents from acting for independent lines; is that one of those rules which you had in mind? A. That may be that that was included; yes, sir.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Burlingham:

1643 Q. I just want to ask one question. Where were the meetings of the small committee held? A. At various places, usually in the office of one of the committee members.

Q. In the conference rooms? A. It may have been in the corner of one of the rooms.

Q. That is at 17 State Street? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When I interrogated you yesterday, I understood you to say that your commission was invariably $2, and yet on Mr. Dorr's examination referring to a letter I understood you to say that in the case of the Estonia, I think it was, there was an extra commission. Do you know of any other cases when that was done? A. I was really surprised to see the let-1644 ter. It had entirely escaped my memory.

Q. Your memory was refreshed by it; you have no doubt it is true, have you? A. It is very likely, because the letters written show at that time that it would be true.

Q. When I asked you about it you did not remember the Estonia, did you? A. When you asked me?

Q. Is your memory so refreshed that you can tell the circumstances of that affair of the Estonia? A. The actual commission which according to the letter had been paid may have been caused in order to follow the same tactics that the Northwest Transport Line used in paying their commissions, but that was not the rule.

1645

Q. What I want to know is whether your memory is so refreshed that you can give an account of it, or is it merely a theory of yours? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which? A. That this extra commission was offered in order to induce agents to book for the steamer.

Q. Now, do you recall any other cases? A. Not at present, no, sir.

Q. And you say you were surprised to find that it was the fact with regard to the Estonia, you had forgotten it? A. I had forgotten all about it, sir.

1646

Mr. Burlingham: That is all.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION by Mr. Dorr:

Q. You would not now after having your attention called to the Estonia incident, you would not now say that there were not other incidents? A. I was greatly surprised to see this, but I only know that where it was done it is an exception.

Q. You would not now say that it was the only exception, would you? A. You can draw your own conclusions, Mr. Dorr.

Q. I want to find out now as to the positiveness of your recollection? A. I was very positive when I made the answer to Mr. Burlingham.

Q. Are you equally positive now that you have found your recollection in that regard to have been in error, that there was not other instances of that same character? A. There may have been.

Q. It was a regular thing, was it not, to allow this additional commission of $1 to your general agents?

1648 A. To our general agents; yes, sir, who worked on a commission plan.

Q. So that as a matter of fact it was not your invariable rule only to allow a $2 commission as you stated to Mr. Burlingham yesterday, but it was the regular course of business as to certain New York agents, namely, your general agents, to allow them a $1 commission in addition to the $2 commission which you allowed to their sub-agents? A. No, but the regular agents are not what we call agents; I think we have only one general agent working on a commission basis in this country.

1649 Q. Who is he? A. That is at that time. Mr. Houghton in Boston; and he is not what we call a regular booking agent.

Q. He had sub-agents? A. Yes, sir; sub-agents to do the steerage work.

Q. His sub-agents get $2? A. Yes.

Q. And he gets $1 for every ticket sold through him by his sub-agents? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to the other general agents do they receive any compensation for the sale of tickets through their sub-agents? A. No, they get a fixed salary.

Q. They get a fixed salary? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that as a matter of fact there is paid by the 1650 lines a larger compensation for the sale of the steerage tickets than the $2 which is paid to the actual booking agent? A. If you will put it that way; yes, sir.

Q. And in addition to the so-called commission or the commission which you paid to your booking agents you also allowed them a certain portion of the so-called commercial allowance which you claimed from the railroads, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: That is all.

Mr. Burlingham: That is all.

1651

PAUL G. FOURMAN, sworn on behalf of the petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, what is your business? A. I am passenger agent for the Uranium Steamship Company.

Q. How long have you been in the steamship business? A. Over six years.

Q. What was your first position in the steamship business and with what concern? A. As chief clerk for the Russian Volunteer Fleet in the office of C. B. Richard & Company.

1652

Q. In that position did you have anything to do with the steerage business of the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. Yes.

Q. What were your duties in that regard? A. Corresponding with sub-agents and in general taking care of the passenger traffic.

Q. Was your employment by C. B. Richard & Company coincident with the establishment of the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you were acquainted to some degree with the theory of the running of the line from its inception? A. Somewhat.

Q. Do you recall what steamers were in the fleet of the Russian Volunteer Line? A. Five steamers; Smolensk, Petersburg, Salratov, Kherson and Moscow.

Q. Do you recall what trade these ships had been built for? A. They were built originally for the far eastern traffic between the Black Sea and Vladivostock.

Mr. Bullowa: I don't believe this witness knows this of his own knowledge.

The Witness: Yes; of my own knowledge.

Mr. Bullowa: I don't think that information on the record is true, so I think before you let the witness testify as to these facts, you should show that he does know.

Mr. Dorr: I am satisfied that he knows them of his own information and knowledge.

Q. Now, as to the Moscow, was that a ship built the same way? A. No; the Moscow was originally the Fuerst Bismarck of the Hamburg-American Line.

1655 Q. Mr. Fourman, what route were these ships put on in the establishment of the Russian Volunteer Line? A. Libau to N. Y.

Q. Where is Libau, what part of Russia? A. Libau is on the Baltic Sea.

Q. Is that port near or within easy reach of a territory in which a large part of the North Atlantic steerage traffic originates? A. Not simply the North Atlantic, but the Russian.

Q. Which ordinarily goes by the North Atlantic province? A. Yes. Libau would cater only to Russian business.

Q. But the Russian business is a very large substantial part of the North Atlantic steerage traffic?

1656 A. It is, sir.

Q. Up to that time have there been any lines running from Libau direct to New York? A. No, sir.

Q. Did the steamers of this fleet touch any port on the voyage to New York and back? A. Rotterdam.

Q. Touch it both eastbound and westbound? A. Eastbound and westbound.

Q. This line engaged in the steerage traffic? A. Steerage and partly cabin and freight.

Q. What were the rates that this line established when it started in business? A. Do you mean the steerage rates?

Q. The steerage rates? A. I don't remember exactly. I think they quoted $37 to Libau, and $31 to Rotterdam. It is a matter of record.

Q. Where is that record, do you know? A. I believe it is in the office of C. B. Richard & Company.

Q. Have you or your line any of those records? Now, do you recall whether or not at the institution of the service of the Russian Volunteer Fleet it met with any opposition steamers?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as leading; and as calling for a conclusion. Let him state facts, not inferences.

Q. What is the answer, Mr. Fourman? A. I don't think at the very beginning.

Q. How many trips had been made so far as you can recall? A. I don't remember exactly.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the steamers of any other line engaged in service between Libau and New York touching at Rotterdam after the ships of the Volunteer Fleet had been put in that service? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What steamers? A. Steamers of the East Asiatic Steamship Company.

Q. Had that line prior to that time run any steamers in that service to your knowledge? A. Sir?

1659

Q. Had the East Asiatic Line run any steamers in the Libau service prior to the establishment of the service of the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. No, sir; not prior to that time.

Q. Do you recall whether or not all the steamers which were put in that service were the steamers of the East Asiatic Company? A. I don't remember exactly, but I think one of them was the Courier.

Q. You misunderstand my question. Do you recall whether or not the Russian East Asiatic Line put on this service certain ships which up to that time had not been in the East Asiatic service? A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you recall, Mr. Fourman, that two ships, which had been formerly in the service of the Hamburg-American Line were put on that Libau service?

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that question as leading and in the second place it is cross-examining your own witness. He said he did not recollect and then you asked him the same question.

1661

Mr. Spooner: You stated on the prior examination that the three witnesses were hostile witnesses. Will you state this is not a hostile witness?

Mr. Dorr: I will state on the record that the line of which Mr. Fourman is an agent has insisted on only giving information under legal process. That is the case. I do not think that they are hostile in the sense that they intend to conceal anything, but they are not volunteering anything.

Mr. Bullowa: They have been conferring with you and suggesting the line of examination within the last two days, haven't they?

Mr. Dorr: They have not been suggesting any line of examination. They have refused to answer questions which I have asked them, which I consider are pertinent to this matter, and they said they would not answer them unless they were asked in Court and compelled to answer.

Mr. Burlingham: Mr. Dorr, won't you answer the question? This is your witness, is it not?

Mr. Dorr: This witness has been called in court in obedience to direction as the two previous witnesses were.

Mr. Burlingham: And thus far you do not regard him a hostile witness.

Mr. Dorr: I regard his recollection on this point as at fault and I am endeavoring to refresh it.

Mr. Burlingham: Does that make him hostile?

Mr. Dorr: I understand when a witness is examined and he does not recollect something the examiner may, whether the witness is hostile or not hostile, he may direct his attention to any particular point to refresh his recollection. 1664

Q. (Question repeated.) A. I don't know.

Q. You have no recollection on that point whatever? A. I don't know exactly whether the steamers did belong to the Hamburg-American Line or to any other line.

Q. Didn't you know that two steamers were put on the Libau service which had formerly been in the service of the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. Bullowa: He has already answered that question, "I don't know." 1665

The Witness: I do know two steamers were put in the service, but whether they belong to the Hamburg-American I don't know.

Q. I understand that you don't know anything about the title of those steamers or the ownership, but were you not familiar with the fact that those steamers had been engaged prior to their being put on the Libau service in the service of the Hamburg-American Line, whether that line owned them or not? A. I don't know.

1666 Q. Didn't you tell me that Mr. Fourman? A. I could not.

Q. Did you testify to that before the committee in Washington? A. No; I did not.

Q. Mr. Fourman, were there not two steamers which were put on this Libau service which had not formerly been employed in the service of the East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. I do not know, Mr. Dorr, whether they belong to the Asiatic Steamship Company.

Q. You have answered that question? A. What is the question?

1667 Q. I am asking you whether there were not two steamers put on this Libau service immediately or shortly after the institution of that service which had not previously been employed in the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company's service, irrespective of whether the Russian East Asiatic Company owned them or not.

Mr. Bullowa: If you know?

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you recall the names of the steamers which were run by the East Asiatic Company from Libau to New York? A. At that time?

Q. Yes? A. That is after the beginning of the 1668 Russian War?

Q. When the service was instituted? A. I don't remember exactly, but I think it was the steamers Courier and Estonia.

Q. Were those the only steamers that were run in that service? A. I think there was the other steamer Latonia.

Q. Any others? A. I don't remember.

Q. Will you say that there were none? A. I don't know; I don't remember it.

1669

Q. Were all those steamers which had theretofore been employed in the service of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. I could not tell you.

Q. What is your best recollection?

Mr. Bullowa: If you know.

Q. What is your best recollection; I am not asking you whether you know or not; I am asking you what your best recollection is on the point?

Mr. Bullowa: He has given his recollection.

A. The three steamers mentioned were then in the service of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company. 1670

Q. Had they theretofore been in that service or had certain of them been in the regular service of the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. Bullowa: He has answered that already that he did not know.

Mr. Spooner: I object to that as leading.

Mr. Bradley: I object to the question as leading and cross-examining.

Q. Were those the only steamers employed in the service of the Russian East Asiatic Line? A. At that time. 1671

Q. You are sure of that, those were the only three? A. I don't remember; but I remember the three.

Q. You are quite clear about that, Mr. Fourman? A. Just after the beginning of the Russian Volunteer Fleet those are the three steamers that I remember; there were many others after that.

Q. Do you recall whether or not thereafter there were two steamers which had previously been in the service of the Hamburg-American Line? A. I don't know whether they were in the service of the Hamburg-American Line.

1672 Q. When you say "know," what do you mean, Mr. Fourman; do you mean you did not see them, were not on them when they had the officers of the Hamburg-American Line on them?

Mr. Spooner: I object to that as cross-examination of the Government's witness.

Mr. Dorr: This witness has before a Congressional Committee partly been desirous of giving a free and full statement on this matter. I don't know what has caused an apparent change in his attitude. I propose to search 1673 his recollection and see whether I cannot find in it now things which previously were in it.

Mr. Burlingham: That is cross-examination.

Mr. Dorr: I claim that I have a right to do that where the witness has apparently forgotten things which he previously to the knowledge of the Government knows.

Mr. Bullowa: Perhaps at that time he was testifying to things that he did not know. Now, he realizes that he is in Court and that he has to testify only what he actually knows under oath.

Mr. Dorr: He was under oath at that time,

1674 has been twice before. I don't think that testimony under oath is informal in the sense that a man is permitted to state things which are not true. I don't know of any such informality of a legal proceeding.

Mr. Bullowa: But he was not subject to cross-examination.

Mr. Dorr: I don't know that because the witness is not subject to cross-examination, therefore, he is entitled to state things which are not true. I believe his previous testimony has been true throughout.

1675

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, what were the names of the steamers which subsequently engaged in this East Asiatic service? A. The Birma, the Russia, the Kursk, and the Czar.

Q. Those are the only ones of which you have any recollection? A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, do you recall what rates were advertised by the Russian East Asiatic Line as against the sailings of the Volunteer Fleet? A. I don't remember the exact rates.

Q. What is your best recollection of those rates? A. They were similar to the Russian Volunteer Fleet, or at times lower.

Q. And do you recall whether or not the rate to Libau made by the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Line was made lower than the rate originally established by the Volunteer Fleet? A. I don't remember.

Q. No recollection? A. No.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the Russian Volunteer Line reduced its rate below $37.50 which you said was the rate which they had established? A. Yes; occasionally they reduced the rates.

Q. Was that to follow the rates of the ships the sailings for which had been set on the same date as the East Asiatic?

1677

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as calling for a conclusion, and leading.

A. It must have been for that reason.

Mr. Bullowa: I move to strike out the answer about what must have been as a conclusion of the witness.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the sailing of the ships of the Russian East Asiatic Line were fixed for the same day as the sailings of the Russian Volunteer, at or about the same day? A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you recall whether or not a rate was made by the Russian East Asiatic steamers or other steamers from Rotterdam which was less than the $30 rate established by the Russian Volunteer Line from that point? A. I do not remember the rates exactly.

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, how long did the Russian Volunteer Fleet stay in existence or maintain its service? A. Two years.

Mr. Bullowa: It is still in existence, isn't it?

1679 Q. How long did it maintain its service? A. Between Libau and New York?

Q. Yes? A. Two years.

Q. And it discontinued its Rotterdam service at the same time? A. At the same time.

Q. Did you thereafter become connected with the New York and Continental Line? A. Yes.

Q. What were the ships of that line? A. Avoca, Jelunga and Volturno.

Q. Did the Avoca subsequently become the Uranium? A. Yes.

Q. When were these steamships put in service by the New York and Continental? A. Sir?

1680 Q. When were these steamships put in service by the New York and Continental? A. For the passenger or freight service?

Q. For the passenger and freight, both? A. I don't know—

Q. I don't mean exclusively for freight; I mean for passenger and freight? A. In 1908.

Q. How long did they continue in the service; how long did the service of the New York and Continental Fleet continue? A. I don't remember. I was on the other side when they discontinued the service.

1681

Q. Can you give me the date approximately? A. It was either in August or September, 1908.

Q. August or September, 1908? A. I am not sure.

Q. Do you recall whether or not while the New York and Continental was engaged in the service between New York and Rotterdam that ships of other lines sailed on the same sailing dates as the ships of the New York and Continental? A. Yes, other steamers sail the same day.

Q. Do you recall whether or not when a ship of the New York and Continental Line sailed some ship of some other company reduced its ordinary rate to a rate the same or lower than the established rate of the New York and Continental?

1682

Mr. Bradley: Objected to as leading and calling for a conclusion.

A. I don't remember whether the rates were reduced against the steamers of the New York and Continental Line, because at that time we had the Russian Volunteer Fleet in the same offices and rates were reduced both against the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the New York Continental, at times by more than one steamer of the other lines.

Q. But there always was some steamer of the other lines, one or more steamers of the other lines with a reduced rate? A. Yes; with a reduced rate.

1683

Q. What was the rate between New York and Rotterdam which was established by the New York and Continental Line when it entered upon the New York and Rotterdam service? A. I don't remember. It is a matter of record. I don't remember the exact date.

Q. Have you got those records? A. No; they would likely be in the office of C. B. Richard & Company.

Q. What is your best recollection about it, if you have any recollection, Mr. Fourman? A. I don't think I remember the rate.

Q. You were the passenger agent at that time for that line? A. Yes; but my time was mostly taken up by the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Q. You were passenger agent for the New York and Continental, were you not; that is, you had charge of the passenger work, did you not, Mr. Fourman? A. Yes; some of the work.

Q. And the rate which was fixed for this traffic was, of course, vitally important in the getting of passenger business, was it not, for the line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have no recollection whatever as to what that rate was? A. No, sir.

Q. It may have been $60? A. No; it was not $60, but I don't remember the exact rate we quoted at that time for the New York Continental Line.

Q. Approximately what was it? A. About $28 or $30.

Q. Substantially the same rate that was established originally by the Russian Volunteer Line? A. I think lower than the original rates of the Russian Volunteer.

Q. What is your recollection as to whether or not there was any difference between the eastbound and westbound rates, or have you any recollection on that point? A. We did not book westbound passengers for the New York Continental Line.

1686

Q. You did not have charge of the booking of that business? A. We did not book them at all in New York or in the United States.

Q. So that you are not familiar with the westbound rates? A. No, sir.

Q. You were referring to the eastbound rates when you fixed the figure at $28 or $30? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have charge of securing agents for the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the New York Continental? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you experience any difficulty—what did you do in regard to agents for your lines, and what, if any, difficulties did you experience in securing them? A. I visited some of the agents who were engaged in selling steamship tickets for other lines and offered them the agency of our line.

Mr. Burlingham: Which line is this?

The Witness: The Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Q. Is that a part of the New York and Continental also? A. Yes.

1688

Q. What was the result? A. Some of them refused to accept the agency or rather to accept the tickets for the reason that they were representing so-called conference lines and stated that it was one of the rules of the conference lines not to sell steamship tickets for independent lines.

Mr. Bullowa: I move to strike that out as incompetent, irrelevant, hearsay and not the best evidence.

Mr. Dorr: It seems to the Government that where matters which are sought to be elicited by examination are matters of common knowledge which the witness learns in the ordinary course of business that the mere fact that some of that information is obtained from third parties does not vitiate his testimony.

Q. What commission did you pay to the agents for the Russian Volunteer and the New York Continental Lines? A. $3 on steerage business.

Q. Now Mr. Fourman, it has been suggested here by Mr. Nyland, the previous witness, on examination by the defendants that there was unfair competition on the part of the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the New York Continental because your lines as I under-1690 stood it, gave larger commissions to agents. Those agents gave the public part of the benefit of those commissions. Will you state the reason why you paid $3, rather than $1 or $2? A. That is, why we paid $3?

Q. Yes. A. As against $2 of the other lines?

Q. Yes. A. I don't know the reason why; we paid them $3.

Q. Your agents were confined, were they not, to representing your line? A. I guess so.

Q. Was it not one of the reasons why you paid that higher commission, in order to get agents who were 1691 compelled to act for you exclusively, you found that it was necessary to pay a higher commission?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as leading and argumentative, as cross-examination and as calling for a conclusion.

Mr. Bullowa: And cross-examining his own witness.

Mr. Dorr: I will stand on that question.

The Witness: What is the question?

Q. Was not one of the reasons why you fixed a $3 rather than a $2 commission, the fact that because of the rules of the conference, your agents would be con-1692 fined to representing your line alone? A. Yes, that was one of the reasons.

Mr. Burlingham: Same objection.

Mr. Bullowa: I move to strike out the answer.

Q. Did you experience any difficulties in securing agents?

Mr. Bullowa: Objected to.

A. In securing new agents or in securing agents who had already been engaged in the sale of steamship tickets?

Q. Agents who were experienced in the steamship business? A. I stated before, that agents who were selling tickets for other lines refused to accept the agency of our line.

Q. Did you experience any difficulty in the sale of tickets of your line in the steerage business because of representations which were made by the agents of the conference lines as to the character of the ships of your line and the way in which they were run?

Mr. Bullowa: Same objection as to the form of the question; it is leading and suggesting an answer to the witness. 1694

A. I don't quite understand your question.

Q. (Question read by stenographer.) A. Some of the conference agents were advising passengers who would ask for tickets of the Russian Volunteer Fleet that the steamers were not fit to travel on.

Mr. Beers: I move to strike that out as not responsive.

Mr. Dorr: I offer this and propose to connect it with a letter which is already in evidence from Mr. Richard to the conference lines giving to those conference lines a notice that their agents were engaged in this practice, a letter which, as I understand it, the conference lines never made any answer to. 1695

Mr. Beers: I do not understand that either Mr. Richard's letter or this witness's statement is any proof as to any facts.

Mr. Burlingham: My point is whether it is of his own knowledge he is testifying to.

Mr. Dorr: I appreciate that Mr. Beers, that mere fact that Mr. Richard wrote a letter stating that certain things were being done by conference agents is no proof that they were being done, but the fact so far as can be ascertained, the conference lines made no effort to ascertain whether or not those charges were true and ignored the letter which contained those charges, seems to me to be admissible as significant of the intent and attitude of the conference lines on this matter?

Mr. Beers: But as I recall that letter, it was to a certain extent, abusive of the lines. If so, it is perfectly natural a business man might resent something he considered a rather undignified attack on him.

Mr. Dorr: I am saying the possible source of Mr. Richard's knowledge.

Q. Did you report these matters to Mr. Richard? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the source of your information on this point? A. Well, I just heard so from our own agents.

Mr. Burlingham: Now, we move to strike it out as purely hearsay.

Mr. Bullowa: I would suggest, Mr. Dorr, that you let him specify any particular agent he heard it from, so we can place the source of this hearsay.

Mr. Dorr: I think this is no more hearsay than Mr. Nyland's testimony yesterday to the fact that people had told him that the rates of the Uranium Line were so and so, certain figures. I think in most cases it is proper to go into these matters and the Court will give such weight to this evidence as it desires.

Mr. Bullowa: I make the suggestion, Mr. Dorr, that you ask him in particular where he derived this hearsay from, what particular person, so we can follow it out.

Mr. Dorr: You may cross-examine him as much as you desire, Mr. Bullowa.

Q. Now, as to the New York Continental Line that went out of business; did you subsequently enter the employ of the Northwest Transport Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that? A. 1909.

Q. What were your duties in connection with the Northwest Transport Company? A. Same as with the Russian Volunteer Fleet and the New York Continental Lines.

1700

Q. What were the ships of the Northwest Transport Company? A. The Uranium, Volturno, Raglan Castle, the Napolitan Prince, the Sicilian Prince and the Campania or Campanello.

Q. Between what ports did these steamers ply? A. Between Rotterdam and New York, touching Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Q. Do you recall the rates which the Northwest Transport Company established for the New York-Rotterdam service? A. At the very beginning?

Q. Yes? A. I don't remember the exact rates.

Q. Take the eastbound service first; what was the rate of the eastbound service, as nearly as you can recollect? A. About $30.

Q. What was the westbound rate? A. $36.

Q. Do you recall whether or not a steamer or steamers of other lines sailed on the sailing dates set for the steamers of the Northwest Transport Company? A. Yes.

Q. And reduced their rates to a figure lower than the regular rates for such steamers and lower than the regular rates of the Northwest Transport Line?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as leading.

A. Yes, sir.

1702 Paul G. Fourman

Q. You do recall whether they did or not? A. Yes.

Q. But that was done, is that your recollection? A. That on the same date, when a steamer of the Northwest Transport sailed, there would be a steamer of some other line with a reduced rate, that is, reduced from their original rate.

Q. Reduced to a point lower than the regular rate of the Northwest Transport Line?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as leading.

Q. How did their rate as reduced, compare with 1703 the regular rate of the Northwest Transport steamers? A. What is the question?

Q. How did the rate to which the rate of the steamers of the Conference Line compare with the regular rate of the North West Transport Line? A. The reduced rate of the Conference Line compare with the original rate?

Q. The North West Transport? A. Well, they would reduce the rate a dollar below our original rate.

Q. Now after such reduction by the Conference Line steamers, did you find it necessary or did you reduce your rate then too? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the reduction of your rate, what if anything was done by the Conference Line steamers as to 1704 rates? A. Sometimes they followed with another reduction.

Q. Was that their ordinary practice? A. Not on all sailings.

Q. On what sailings did they not do that? A. I cannot exactly state, but on some of them they didn't.

Q. You mean there were individual instances where they did not do it?

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that.

A. Just one reduction would take place.

Q. Now, what was the ordinary practice?

Mr. Burlingham: If they had any?

A. They would send out circulars to their agents a week or sometimes eight or nine days before the sailing of the steamer, announcing a reduction in rate for a particular sailing, on the date when our steamers would sail.

Q. And in the event that you reduced your rate to meet that rate what would the Conference Line steamers do in the ordinary course? A. They would then send out another reduction, another circular, announcing a further reduction. That would take place about five days before the sailing of the steamer.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Are you testifying as to what you know? Do you know these things or are they hearsay? A. I know these things.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. It was part of your business; was it part of your business to ascertain not only the rates of your own line, but the rates of other lines? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you inform yourself of the public rates of the various lines as well as your own? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what point were rates reduced by the Conference Line steamers and your steamers? A. Do you mean comparative?

Q. Between New York and Rotterdam? A. Well, sometimes they were as low as $21.

Q. How long did the North West Transport Line continue in business? A. From February, 1908, until April, 1910, I think, or 1909.

Mr. Beers: From February, 1908.

The Witness: From February, 1909, pardon me, I will have to recollect that. February, 1909, I think, until April, 1910.

1708 Paul G. Fourman

Q. Now, after that time did you enter the employ of some other steamship company? A. The North West Transport Line was succeeded by the Uranium Steamship Company, same steamers, Uranium steamers.

Q. Did they have the same steamers then? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were your duties with the Uranium Line? A. Same as before.

Q. What, if anything, was done by the steamers of the Conference Lines as to sailings and rates on the sailing dates of the steamers of the Uranium Line?

1709 A. Similar to the previous tactics.

Mr. Beers: I object to the witness characterizing the acts of the other lines and move to strike out the answer.

Q. Now, as to your agents, what was the situation with regard to obtaining agents for the Uranium Line? A. Similar to those as with the other lines.

Q. That is, you experienced the same difficulties? A. Same difficulties.

Q. How about your commissions; what were your commissions for the Uranium Line or for the North West Transport? A. $3 and sometimes $4.

1710 Q. Was the commission of $4 paid to all agents? A. No, sir, to some agents, the general agents and to agents who were doing a larger amount of business.

Q. Do you recall any occasions on which the steamers of the Conference Lines did not cut their rates on the sailing dates of the steamers of the North West Transport and the Uranium Line? A. There were one or two cases.

Q. Do you recall in the early part of 1910 or 1911 that that occurred? A. I don't remember.

Q. You have no recollection whether at the beginning of 1910, there were not several sailings, two sailings successively when the Conference Lines did not oppose your steamers with a competitive steamer? A. I don't remember whether it was at the beginning of 1911, but I do remember that it was at the beginning of 1912.

1711

Q. Beginning of 1912? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When that was done, did you reduce your rates below the regular rates? A. Not necessarily.

Q. Did you? A. I don't remember.

Q. Have you any papers which would show? A. I think the circulars will show.

Q. Now, at that time from the fact that two or more sailings had gone by, in which you were not opposed, did you not alter your instructions to your agents and endeavor to insure that your agents would not sell below your published rates? A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. What steps did you take with that end in view? A. I have sent out letters and telegrams to agents, advising them that they should sell at the original rates quoted by us and that we will not accept passengers at a lower rate.

Q. Thereafter, was there a return to the previous situation, where Conference ships sailed in opposition to your ships? A. Yes, sir.

1713

Q. Where the Conference ships cuts the rates below your regular rates? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that still the situation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the most recent instance of it? A. The last steamer of our line which sailed from New York was the Uranium, that was on the 20th of June. The steamer which sailed in opposition to ours was the Cleveland.

Mr. Beers: I make the same objection. The witness is stating a conclusion. I move to strike out the answer.

1714

Q. What line is that? A. Hamburg-American Line.

Q. And did the Cleveland advertise for that sailing a lower rate than its regular advertised rate? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall what rate it advertised? A. Originally.

Q. Original rate, yes? A. I think $35.

Q. What was the rate which it advertised on the sailing of the Uranium? A. $25.

Q. Now, do you recall whether or not there were any instances where your ship did not sail on the advertised sailing date? A. Yes, sir.

1715

Q. Do you recall any instance of 1910? A. I don't remember.

Q. Of dates, open sailing dates of the Uranium? A. What part of the year, what month?

Q. January, 1910? A. If you have the circulars I might recall some of them.

Q. Now, I show you certain papers and ask whether those will refresh your recollection?

Mr. Bullowa: Which papers are they?

Q. I show you such papers which I will have marked collectively if you desire, exhibit for identification? A. I see a circular advertising the sailing of the steamer.

Q. Do not testify from the circular. Does an inspection of those circulars refresh your recollection as to whether there was an occasion in the winter of 1910—

Mr. Beers: Have you identified those circulars?

The Examiner: Defendants' Exhibit 1, for identification and Petitioner's Exhibit 90.

Q. Now do you recall whether or not in the winter of 1910, that the sailing dates of the steamship Uranium were postponed? A. I recall that the steamer Uranium which was originally advertised to sail on January 15th, was postponed to January 18th.

Q. Now do you recall whether or not a steamer of the Conference lines was advertised to sail on January 15th, the original sailing date of the Uranium steamer Graf Waldersee, have you any recollection about that? A. No, I don't remember what steamer sailed on that date, or was scheduled to sail on that date.

Recess taken until 2:00 o'clock P. M.

1718

Afternoon session.

PAUL G. FOURMAN, recalled:

Direct-examination continued by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, I show you what purports to be a steerage and third cabin circular No. 1, under date of January 3rd, 1910, of the Hamburg American Line.

Mr. Spooner: Will you let me see that?

Mr. Dorr: Yes, certainly. I offer the same in evidence. 1719

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 163.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the North West Transport Line, concerning the sailing of the steamer Uranium, Saturday, January 15th, 1910, and fixing a steerage rate to Rotterdam at $25, Antwerp $26, Bremen $27, Hamburg $28, and ask whether that is a circular of the Northwest Transport Line? A. It is.

1720 Paul G. Fourman

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 164.

Q. Now, at the time that that circular was issued, Mr. Fourman, what was the regular eastbound rate to Rotterdam of the steamers of your line? A. I have not seen that circular of our line; $25 to Rotterdam; $28 to Hamburg.

Q. Now, do you recall what the regular rate of the Hamburg-American Line was at that time? A. $35.

Q. I call your attention to Government Exhibit No. 85, which purports to be a circular, advertising the sail-1721 ings and rates by the steamer Graf Waldersee of the Hamburg-American Line, showing a rate of $35 to Hamburg? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And ask whether that was in accord with the regular published rates of that line as you were familiar with them at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: You mean to say that was the steerage rate of that time?

The Witness: Yes, sir, $35.

Mr. Dorr: As I understood, you admitted that that was the advertised rate.

Mr. Spooner: What I admitted was a white circular. I admitted this was published, but 1722 I denied its accuracy as to the $35 rate for steerage.

Mr. Dorr: Well, as I understand it, you admitted that this particular advertisement of the sailing of the Graf Waldersee, containing an advertisement of the steerage rate of $35 to Hamburg, printed January 15th, 1910, was actually issued by that line.

Mr. Spooner: This has been introduced in evidence. Qualify it in the record; the defendant will admit it. Of course, you cannot use my admission except as it is qualified.

Mr. Dorr: Then I will not attempt to use your admission, Senator, and you may strike out the admission.

Q. I show you this circular, Mr. Fourman, and ask you whether that is a circular which you obtained at or about the time of its publication? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you recall where you obtained it? I am not asking you to state where, but do you recall where you obtained this circular? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether or not it was at an office of the Hamburg-American Line or one of its agencies? A. One of its agencies.

Mr. Dorr: I renew my offer in evidence and ask to have it recorded the same number as originally offered, as Exhibit No. 85, the number which it originally bore.

Q. Now, I show you what purports to be a circular of the Hamburg-American Line, dated January 8th, 1910, providing for a reduction of the steerage outward rate by the steamship Graf Waldersee, on its sailing January 15th, 1910, to $24, and ask whether you obtained that circular from one of the agencies of the Hamburg-American Line? A. I did.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.

1725

Mr. Spooner: I admitted this circular; it is already marked No. 84.

Mr. Dorr: Referring to Exhibit 84; withdraw the offer.

Q. Do you recall whether after the advertised reduction of the rate on the Graf Waldersee of the Hamburg-American Line to $24, you made a reduction of the rate on the Uranium from the previously advertised $25 rate? A. I don't remember; if you will show me some of our circulars.

1726 Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the Northwest Transport Line, advertising a sailing of the Uranium on January 18th, and purporting to quote a rate of $22 to Rotterdam? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Burlingham: How much to Hamburg?
Mr. Dorr: $24 to Hamburg.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 165.

Q. Do you recall whether or not, prior to the issuance of the circular of the Northwest Transport Line, Exhibit 165, the North German Lloyd had issued the circular which I now show you? A. Yes, sir.

1727

Mr. Dorr: I offer that circular in evidence and will ask you to translate it.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 166.

The Witness: Do you want me to translate this?

Q. Yes? A. The circular is printed in Polish and states, "North German Lloyd from New York to Bremen, twinscrew steamer, Neckar, 520 feet long, 9850 tons register, will sail Saturday, January 18th, 10 o'clock A. M. to Bremen, rate for steerage ticket to Bremen is $24."

Q. Now, the originally announced sailing date of the Uranium had been the 15th of January, had it not? A. Yes, sir.

1728

Q. And the original rate $25? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, the Hamburg-American Line reduced the rate of the Graf Waldersee from $25 to $24 for the sailing January 15th? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did the Uranium sail on the 15th? A. Not as I can see from the published circular; the sailing was postponed until the 18th of January.

Q. Do you recall the cause of that postponment? A. Yes, sir; the late arrival of the steamer.

1729

Q. Now, after the postponement of the sailing of the Uranium had been made to the 18th of January, do you recall whether or not the North German Lloyd then advertised the sailing of the Neckar for the 18th? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether the rate of $24, so announced for the Neckar for the 18th of January, was less than the previously advertised rate for the Neckar? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the ordinary published rate for the North German Lloyd steamers at that time to Bremen? A. I think $35.

1730

Q. Now, after the advertisement of the Neckar, then the Uranium, of your line, reduced the rate to $22, for the Uranium? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether the Uranium sailed on the 18th? A. I don't think so; I don't remember.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the Red Star Line, under date of January 18th, 1910, announcing a first class rate to Antwerp of the steamer Lapland, of $22, sailing January 22nd, 1910, Government Exhibit No. 88, and ask whether that refreshes your recollection as to the postponed date of sailing of the Uranium? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what was the date to which the sailing of the Uranium was postponed? A. To my recollection 1731 it was to January 22nd, 1912.

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, when the sailing date of the Uranium was originally January 15th, the Graf Waldersee lowered its rates for that date, the Uranium sailing was postponed to the 18th and the Neckar lowered its rates for that date, postponed again to the 22nd and the Lapland lowered its rates to $22? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That $22 was not the original rate of the Lapland, was it? A. No, sir.

1732 Paul G. Fourman

Q. What was the original rate of the Lapland? A. I don't know exactly what the rate was.

Q. Can you give it approximately? A. I think it was $35, but I am not sure.

Q. I show you Defendant's Exhibit 1 for identification and offer the same in evidence and ask you whether that is the circular of the Northwest Transport Line? A. Yes, it is.

Q. I call your attention to the announcement of the sailing of the Napolitan Prince, on Saturday, January 29th, 1910, and ask whether $25, the rate entering on this circular was the advertised steerage rate for the 1733 sailing of that ship? A. Yes, sir.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 167.

Q. Now, I show you what purports to be a circular of the Hamburg American Line, advertising the sailing of the President Lincoln on January 29th, 1910, and the steerage rate to Hamburg of $35, and ask you whether or not you obtained this circular from some agents or agency of the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. Burlingham: Why don't you ask him where he obtained it for a change.

1734 Mr. Dorr: You made the qualified admission in regard to this.

Mr. Spooner: Yes.

Q. Do you recall whether or not there was a reduction in the rate of the President Lincoln for the sailing, January 29th, from $35 to $22? A. I can't remember exactly what steamer was against us at that time.

Q. I call your attention to Exhibit 86 and ask whether that refreshes your recollection? A. It does.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the Napolitan Prince reduced its rate to $22? A. As I see from our circular.

1735

Q. Is that your circular, the paper which I show you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are the facts stated on that as to the reduction in rates correct? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer that in evidence.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 168.

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, can you state whether or not the rate advertised in Government's Exhibit 167 to Hamburg, was the rate of your line to that point? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Rate of $28? A. Yes, sir.

1736

Q. Are you familiar with the inland European rates from the ports of Rotterdam and Hamburg? A. To some extent.

Q. Have you had occasion to examine them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Inland rail; have you sufficient familiarity with them to state whether or not—

Mr. Spooner (interrupting): Have you got a tariff?

Mr. Dorr: I don't think I have any Hamburg tariff. If I did have one I would use that. I will let the tariff speak for itself.

1737

Q. I show you what purports to be the tariff of the Uranium Steamship Company, European railroad tariff from Rotterdam and ask whether that was a tariff published by you? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I ask that that be marked for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 169, for identification.

Q. Did you fix the inland rates in accordance with this tariff which has just been identified? A. In connection with steerage passengers.

1738

Q. Referring again to Government's Exhibit 164, I ask you whether the sailing of the Sicilian Prince was advertised for Saturday, February 25th, for $25 for Rotterdam, and $28 to Hamburg? A. Yes, according to the circular.

Q. That circular was correct in that particular? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you Exhibit 90, purporting to be a circular of the Hamburg-American Line, advertising the sale of the President Grant on February 5th, 1908, the steerage rate to Hamburg being $35, and ask whether or not that is a circular which you obtained of an agent or agency of the Hamburg-American Line? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I renew my offer in evidence, without taking advantage of the qualified admission.

Q. Do you recall whether or not there was a reduction of the rate of the President Grant for that sailing? A. I don't remember.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the Hamburg-American Line, Government Exhibit 89, and ask whether that was received by you from an agent of the Hamburg-American Line? A. Yes, sir.

1740

I think so.

Mr. Dorr: That is already in evidence.

Q. That is a reduction from $35 to $32? A. I don't remember whether it was from $35 to $32.

Q. Well, as a rule there was a reduction? Well, go ahead and give us your best recollection about the matter? A. I cannot tell whether it was reduced from $35 to $32? This was the intermediate reduction down from $35 to $32; there might have been something between.

1741

Q. There may have been an intermediate reduction? A. Yes; that is reduced that day.

Q. That is the last reduction? A. I cannot tell whether it was the last reduction.

Mr. Spooner: Reduction from $35 on that other card, to $32?

The Witness: It seems so.

Q. As I understand, you are not sure whether or not there was intermediate reductions? A. I am not sure.

Q. Do you recall whether the rate of the Sicilian Prince of your line was reduced to $23 for the sailing of February 5th? A. I remember issuing this postal card, and offering the reduction.

1742

Q. That was accurate? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer this in evidence; this is the Northwest Transport?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 170.

Q. I show you what purports to be an advertisement of your line of the sailing of the Volturno, for April 2nd, 1910, steerage $28 to Rotterdam; was that issued by your line? A. It was issued by the Northwest Transport Line.

1743

Q. And does that accurately state the rate? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 171.

Q. Do you recall whether after the issuance of the advertisement of that rate, there was issued by the White Star Line a circular which I now show you, advertising the reduction of the rate of the steamship Laurentic to $27 to Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp and Rotterdam, third class? A. Yes, sir; I remember obtaining this particular card from one of the agents of a conference line.

1744

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 172.

Q. Has that been the usual rate of the Laurentic? A. No, sir; this was a reduced rate.

Q. What to the best of your recollection was the original rate? A. I don't remember.

Q. Well, approximately, Mr. Fourman? A. Well, either $33 or $35.

Q. Now, under this circular of the White Star Line, the same rate was made for Rotterdam, Antwerp, Bremen and Hamburg; had your line been making the same rate for those points, prior to that time?

1745

A. No; we quoted just a rate to Rotterdam.

Q. After seeing that circular did you make any change in your system of advertising rates? A. I don't remember; perhaps I did.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the Northwest Transport Line, announcing a change in sailing of the Volturno to April 9th, and a flat rate to Antwerp, Hamburg and Rotterdam of $28? A. Yes, sir, I remember that.

Q. That is your own circular? A. Yes.

Q. And accurately states the rates? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer it in evidence.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 173.

Q. I show you a circular of the White Star Line, advertising a reduction in rate for the steamship Adriatic to sail April 9th, a reduction of rate to $27 for this steamer and sailing only, rates for all other sailings will remain unchanged. Do you recall whether or not you received that from some agent of a Conference Line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether there were any further reductions on that trip? A. I do not.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 174.

Q. So that it appears from these circulars, does it not Mr. Fourman, that when the sailing of the Volturno was postponed from April 2nd to April 9th, a second steamer was advertised with a reduction in rate on the postponed sailing date of the Volturno?

Mr. Spooner: The circulars speak for themselves. I object to the question and to the witness characterizing them.

A. Yes, sir. 1749

Q. Do you recall whether or not steamers of the North German Lloyd, as well as the steamers of the Red Star Line and White Star Line and Hamburg-American Line introduced rates against your steamers? A. I didn't get that.

Q. Do you recall whether or not a steamer of the North German Lloyd at any time sailed at a reduced rate on the same sailing dates as your own steamers? A. In many cases.

Q. I call your attention as to what purports to be a circular of your line, advertising the sailing of the Sicilian Prince for March 19th, 1910, steerage rates to Rotterdam $28, and ask whether that is issued by your line? A. It is.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 175.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the North German Lloyd steamer Darmstadt, advertising the sailing of the steamer Darmstadt for Bremen on March 19th, at a steerage rate of $27? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And ask whether that is the circular you obtained from one of the agencies of the North German Lloyd Line? A. This is not an agency circular. This is a so-called hand bill and I don't remember whether I received it from one of the agents or simply in some other way. It was practically issued to the public.

Q. Did you obtain it from some public source, some source to which the public had access? A. I think so.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer that in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 176.

1751 Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the Northwest Transport Line advertising a sailing of the steamer Uranium with the rate of $25 to Rotterdam, $28 to Hamburg, $27 to Bremen, $33 to Libau, sailing December 4, 1909, and ask whether that is a circular of your line? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I offer this in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 177.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the Russian American Line announcing a change in rates only for the steamship Lituania sailing for New York, on December 4, 1909, quoting a steerage Rotterdam rate of $24, and ask whether that is a circular 1752 of the Russian American Line, which you obtained from an agent of that line or from some source where it was being issued to the public? A. It is.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 178.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the Northwest Transport Line advertising a sailing of the Volturno with a rate of $25 to Rotterdam, for November 20, 1909, and ask whether that is a circular of your line? A. It is.

1753

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 179.

Q. I show you what purports to be a circular of the Russian American Line advertising the reduction in rates on the steamship Estonia, from New York to Rotterdam for November 20, 1909, to $24, and ask you whether that is a circular which you obtained from the Russian American Line or its agents, or from some public source? A. Yes, it is.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 180.

Q. Do these circulars as to which I have been examining you illustrate the course of business of your lines and the Conference Lines as to the fixing of rates for the sailing of steamers during the period which you have testified to; that is, from February, 1906, to the present time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Fourman, will you state the course of business of your line as to the sale of prepaid westbound tickets to inland points in the United States? A. We are selling them in the same way as any other line. We are selling westbound prepaid tickets in the same way and manner as any other line does.

Q. Do you issue rail orders to your passengers which are honored by the railroads on the arrival of the passenger at New York? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you thereafter pay the railroad the sums covered by those rail orders? A. We don't pay direct to the railway companies.

Q. To the association representing the railroad companies? A. No, we pay to the so-called Emigrants' Clearing House.

Q. That is an organization which represents the railroads, does it not, in the matter? A. I suppose so.

1756 Q. Do you know whether or not that is the same way in which the other steamship companies pay railroads for their rail orders? A. I think so.

Mr. Spooner: I move that the answer be stricken out.

Mr. Dorr: I will consent that that be stricken out unless his knowledge further appears—

Mr. Spooner: Where is that clearing house located? Here?

1757 The Witness: 143 Liberty Street.

Mr. Dorr:

Q. What was the source of any information that you have in the matter, Mr. Fourman? A. In what way?

Mr. Bradley: Do you mean as to the other lines?

Q. As to the other lines, yes? A. Well, I was with C. B. Richard & Co.

Q. Do C. B. Richard & Co. represent a conference line? A. They represent conference and non-conference lines, and I remember the bills for railway 1758 tickets would come in the same way as for the conference.

Q. Now, has your line made any attempt to secure so-called commercial allowances from the railroads on eastbound traffic?

Mr. Beers: I renew my objection as to commercial allowances and passenger associations. The evidence sought to be elicited is not within the issues, incompetent and immaterial.

A. On eastbound?

Q. Yes? A. We tried to.

1759

Q. Have you succeeded? A. Not so far.

Q. Have you made an effort to secure so-called commercial allowances on Westbound traffic? A. We are getting commercial allowances on westbound business.

Q. On what part of your westbound? A. As far as Chicago, including Chicago.

Q. Have you succeeded in getting commercial allowances from the Western Passenger Association? A. No, sir.

Q. Which covers the territory west of Chicago? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you tried to? A. We asked several times to be allowed that commercial allowance but we did not get it.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you entered into negotiations with the Central Passenger Association, Mr. Donald, of the Central Passenger Association, with regard to commercial allowances? A. I think I did write a letter or two to Mr. Donald.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you received this letter which I now show you in reply (handing witness letter)? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer that letter in evidence. Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 181.

1761

Mr. Beers: Objection renewed.

Q. Do you recall what you did after receiving this letter to endeavor to secure commercial allowances from the Central Passenger Association? A. I called on Mr. Sandford.

Mr. Burlingham: That is not responsive.

Q. Is Mr. Sandford the secretary of the conference? A. At that time he was the secretary of the conference.

1762 Q. Did you have any conversation with him about commercial allowances? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the conversation?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as immaterial.

A. I asked Mr. Sandford how we could become a party to the agreement upon which we could receive the commercial allowance from the railroad companies.

Q. What happened after that? A. Mr. Sandford said that he would not have anything to do with it.

1763 Q. Is that all that Mr. Sandford said and all that you said? A. Mr. Sandford also referred me to Commissioner Donald.

Q. The same man who had sent you this letter? A. Yes.

Q. What did Mr. Donald do? Refer you back to Mr. Sandford?

Mr. Bradley: I object to that.

Q. What occurred when you went back to Mr. Sandford? A. The same result.

Q. And did you have any further conversation with Mr. Sandford? A. No, sir.

1764 Q. Do you recall whether or not you had any conversation with him over the telephone? A. Yes, I had written a letter to Mr. Sandford and not receiving a reply for about a week or ten days called him up and asked him whether my letter was received and why I did not get any answer. He again said that he had nothing to do with it.

Q. And have you succeeded in securing the commercial allowances in question? A. No, sir.

Q. Do your agents on eastbound traffic arrange for through transportation to inland points in Europe? A. In some cases.

Q. If the passenger desires it, or, what are the cases? A. Well, in connection with Russian eastbound traffic and the Austrian we make it a point with the agents to book the passengers through to their destination.

Q. Have you presented vouchers or transportation vouchers to the railroads with the request for a commercial allowance? A. On what business, Mr. Dorr?

Q. On eastbound business? A. That would be in connection with American railway fares?

Q. Yes? A. Yes, on one occasion we sent in the vouchers and a statement to Mr. Donald of Chicago.

1766

Q. Did you receive the allowances? A. No, sir; we received the statement with the vouchers back again.

Q. Do you know Malinowsky who testified here, Mr. Fourman? A. I know an agent named Malinowsky, from New Britain, Connecticut.

Q. Do you recall whether or not at any time he asked for a refund on a number of tickets of your line prepaid tickets of your line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether or not those tickets passed through your hands? A. Some of them did.

Q. What did you do with those tickets? A. We ordered the tickets for cancellation.

1767

Q. What do you mean by that? A. We instructed our London office to have the tickets cancelled—stopped.

Q. And do you recall whether or not—where are those tickets now, do you know? A. Do you refer to the cancelled tickets?

Q. The tickets which were returned to you by Mr. Malinowsky for refund? A. I don't know where they are.

Q. Do you know whether they are in this country or in Europe? A. I believe they are in our London offices.

1768 Q. I will ask you, Mr. Fourman, if you will endeavor to secure those tickets either from your London office or your New York office, if they are here. Do you recall whether or not those tickets were issued in the usual form in the ordinary course of business by your line? A. They must have been.

Q. Well, were they, from your inspection of them when they were returned to you for refund? A. I will have to see the tickets, Mr. Dorr; I could not say anything before seeing them.

Mr. Beers: I move to strike out the an-1769 swer.

Q. Did you make a refund on those tickets? A. On some of the tickets cancelled by Mr. Malinowsky, we did.

Q. Do you make refunds on tickets which are not regularly issued and issued by the authority of your line? A. Not necessarily.

Q. Well, do you? A. No.

Q. You say some of the tickets were cancelled. What was done with the others? A. I don't remember, because Mr. Malinowsky or any other agent would have quite a number of tickets. I don't know what part of them were cancelled.

1770 Q. Were the tickets on which refunds were claimed —what is your recollection as to whether they were valid tickets or whether there was anything irregular about them which made them void? A. As far as I can recollect the tickets were cancelled for the reason that the passengers—

Mr. Burlingham: He has not asked what the reason was, have you, Mr. Dorr?

Q. No, I am asking, Mr. Fourman, whether they were to the best of your recollection regularly issued tickets? A. Yes, sir, they were.

Q. Were they the kind of tickets, in the form which are regularly accepted by your line for transportation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Malinowsky a duly authorized agent to sell those tickets? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there, as far as you know from your own observation of them any defect whatsoever in those tickets? A. Not that I know of.

Q. And it was part of your duty to examine them, was it not, when they were returned for cancellation with the claim for refund? A. Yes.

Q. When a claim for refund, is made on a ticket, Mr. Fourman, what is your course of business as to an examination into the grounds on which a refund is claimed? A. There may be different reasons, Mr. Dorr. At times tickets are cancelled because passengers don't care to travel; at times they are cancelled because the purchaser does not care to have the passenger come, and at times because the passenger is unable to proceed and at times because they could not reach Rotterdam.

Q. Now, which class of those circumstances were the grounds for the refund of these particular tickets? A. I think that was the last reason, that they could not reach Rotterdam.

Mr. Burlingham: The witness doesn't know and his answer is hearsay. I move to strike it out.

Q. Is that the only time when you have had tickets returned to you under the circumstances that these Malinowsky tickets were returned? A. No, that was not the only time.

Q. It is part of your duty, is it not, as passenger agent to investigate into any causes which operate to hinder the use of your tickets? A. Yes.

Q. Did you make an inquiry at this time in the case of the Malinowsky tickets to ascertain why it was that the passengers were unable to reach Rotterdam? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you had any correspondence or conversations with Mr. Malinowsky? A. Yes.

Q. As to why these tickets could not be used by persons to whom they had been issued? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any other occasions when tickets were returned to you and the same reasons given to you by other agents as were given to you by Mr. Malinowsky or other persons as to their inability to use tickets?

1775

Mr. Beers: Objected to as irrelevant and as leading.

Mr. Spooner: I object to it as incompetent, irrelevant and hearsay, and I won't add impertinent out of respect for the counsel for the Government.

A. There were other cases where tickets have been returned to us for cancellation for similar reasons.

Q. Mr. Fourman, as passenger agent of the Uranium Line, what is your experience as to the practicability of the issuance by your line of tickets from Rotterdam to New York to persons intending to reach Rotterdam from points in Russia through Germany?

1776

Mr. Burlingham: I object to it as too vague, what is his experience as regards practicability? He has not been shown to have any knowledge whatever on the subject.

A. My experience is that Russian passengers arriving at a German frontier who had tickets of our line are not permitted to proceed to Rotterdam by way of Germany.

Mr. Burlingham: I move to strike out the answer as hearsay.

Q. Do you book passengers at your New York office of your line, third class business? A. Very few.

Q. Do you do it at all? A. Occasionally.

Q. What rates do you sell tickets at your office at? A. Eastbound or westbound?

Q. Both. Do you sell at the published rate or some other rate? A. At the published rate.

1778

Q. Do you deduct the commission? A. Not to private individuals, not to direct purchasers.

Q. That is, you allow the commission to agents? A. To agents only.

Q. Have you any arrangements with your agents by which they do their business under bond? A. Most of our agents are under bond.

Q. Have any of your agents ceased to work for you? A. For what periods? When?

Q. During the last four years? A. Well, quite a number did.

Q. A considerable number? A. Yes.

Q. Have any of those agents gone over to the Conference Lines? A. Some did.

1779

Q. Do you know whether or not any inducements have been held out to those agents by the traveling agents of the Conference Lines?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as leading.

A. I don't know.

Mr. Dorr: Your witness.

1780 Paul G. Fourman

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Burlingham:

Q. Mr. Fourman, will you give us the date of the beginning of your line here in New York? A. Which line?

Q. Your present line, the Uranium; it began as the Continental? A. No, sir.

Q. What did it begin as? A. As the Northwest Transport Line.

Q. When; give the date? A. I don't remember the exact date, but I think it was in February, 1909.

1781 Q. And then it changed its name or did it give up to another company? A. I don't know what happened, why the name was changed.

Q. What was it changed to? A. To the Uranium Steamship Company.

Q. That is a different corporation? A. I think so.

Q. Has the Northwest Transport Line gone out of business completely? A. I have no knowledge of the present situation of the Northwest Transport Line.

Q. Were you an officer of that company? A. No, sir, I was the passenger agent.

Q. What are you, the passenger agent of the Uranium Line? A. Yes, sir.

1782 Q. And are the officers of this company different from the officers of the Northwest Transport Line? A. Yes.

Q. Any of the same officers? A. I don't think so.

Q. Who is the president of the Uranium? A. I don't know.

Q. Is there any officer in this country? A. Of the Uranium Steamship Company?

Q. Yes? A. Nobody, outside of Mr. Thomas.

Q. What is his position? A. He is the New York manager of the line.

Q. What is his full name? A. Edward L. Thomas.

Q. What had he to do with the Northwest Transport? A. He was the manager of the Northwest Transport.

Q. During the whole time of its activity? A. I don't know.

Q. Did you have anything yourself to do with the New York & Continental? A. I was connected at that time with C. B. Richard & Company and was in the passenger department.

Q. Were they the agents? A. They were the passenger agents.

Q. Of the New York and Continental Line? A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. Thomas have anything to do with it? A. With the New York & Continental, I am not sure: I don't remember.

Q. Do you know when the New York & Continental began to do business here? A. No, sir.

Q. You were with it when it began? A. When the passenger business began.

Q. When did the passenger business begin? A. In 1908; I don't remember the months.

Q. You have been continuously with these three lines since 1908, have you? A. Yes.

Q. And the Uranium owns or controls the same steamers that its two predecessors did? A. I understand that they purchased the steamers.

1785

Q. Formerly they were chartered, I suppose, or something like that? A. Something like that, by the Northwest Transport Line.

Q. And you are doing a regular passenger business as between here and Rotterdam and Libau? A. No, not Libau; between here and Rotterdam and Halifax on the westbound trip.

Q. Have you statistics showing what number of third class passengers you have carried in the lines, in the years 1908, 1909, 1910 and 1911? A. I have not these statistics for 1908 or 1909, as C. B. Richard and Company were the agents at that time. Following them Vesely Company were the passenger agents, but I have the statistics of the Uranium Company.

Q. Are you familiar with these reports of Trans-Atlantic Passenger Movement? A. I saw some of them.

Q. I see, Mr. Fourman, that these reports of Trans-Atlantic Passenger Movement which were marked for identification, Petitioner's Exhibits 154 to 159 inclusive, give the number of passengers by each steamer both eastbound and westbound with dates of departure and dates of arrival and that they contain the statistics 1787 of the Uranium Steamship Company. Look, for instance, at this one of 1911, table 56, page LVI, and see whether that is substantially correct? A. You mean the number of passengers carried?

Q. Yes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you kindly look at the report for 1910, marked for identification Petitioner's Exhibit 158, table LIX, 59, and see whether that is substantially correct in regard to the Uranium? A. Yes, I think that is right.

Q. Then will you kindly look at this one giving the passenger movement for 1909, Petitioner's Exhibit 157 for identification, table 47, XLVII, showing the 1788 Northwest Transport Line passengers carried east and west during that year? A. Assuming that these figures are taken from the manifest.

Q. I don't know where they are taken from, but I don't ask you to verify them to the last figure, but from your familiarity of the number of passengers carried on your steamers from time to time you can say that they are substantially correct? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it substantially true that in the year 1909 the Northwest Transport ships made twenty-one trips from New York to Rotterdam and carried 3341 third class passengers? A. According to these reports—

1789

Q. Look at the one in 1910 now. Is it true that the Uranium Steamship Line's ships made twenty-eight trips in the year 1910 from New York to Rotterdam, carrying 10,016 steerage passengers? A. I suppose so.

Q. Now, look at the next one. Is it true that the Uranium Line's ships made twenty-six trips in the year 1911 from New York to Rotterdam carrying 13,286 steerage passengers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Fourman, did you carry all these passengers at these cut rates that you have described this morning?

1790

Mr. Dorr: I object to the form of the question "cut rates," because the witness has already testified that certain of the passengers as I understand it were carried at the regular rates.

Mr. Burlingham: I don't wish to characterize them.

The Witness: Some of them were carried at full rates.

Q. That is, you might start at $28 and then as the competition grew more active you would reduce it to $22; is that it? A. Exactly.

Q. Your business was constantly increasing I suppose in these years? A. Yes, sir. 1791

Q. I want your statement from your own knowledge on that subject? A. Yes.

Q. Have you added any ships in the last year, 1910? A. No.

Q. Or 1909? A. No, sir.

Q. There are the same ships running now? A. Yes.

Q. You have not been driven out of business yet, have you? A. Not yet.

1792

Q. Are you going on at the old stand, having ships sail every week or two weeks? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at the same time that you were the passenger agent for the Northwest Transport did I understand that you had something to do with the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the year 1908? A. In the years 1906, 1907 and 1908.

Q. That line continued in business about two years you say? A. Two years, yes.

Q. Was the Russian Government interested in that line?

1793

Mr. Dorr: I object unless the witness knows.

A. Yes, partly.

Q. Did the Russian East Asiatic Line have vessels here running from here at the same time with the Russian Volunteer? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they entirely different companies at that time? A. What do you mean?

Q. The Russian Volunteer Line and the Russian East Asiatic, were they entirely separate companies? A. Entirely separate companies.

Q. They never amalgamated, did they? A. Not that I know of.

1794 Q. The Russian Volunteer Line was known as the Russian Volunteer Fleet, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That did business for two years and then disappeared from America, did it? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether it continued in other parts of the world? A. It does continue

Q. Where? A. Between Odessa and the Far East, and then they have some other lines in the East.

Q. That is where it began doing work, was it not? A. Yes.

1795

Q. I think you said this morning that the Russian Volunteer Fleet at first plied between the Black Sea and the Far East? A. Yes.

Q. And now it has gone back to that service? A. It has not gone back to that service; it has always continued in that service with other steamers.

Q. But the steamers it had here are now engaged in that service? A. No, sir, they are laid up.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. They are laid up. One of them was sold the Austrian Government, the Moscow.

Q. How many boats did they have? I have forgotten? A. On this line, five. 1796

Q. You were examined before a committee of Congress, weren't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In January, 1911, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And didn't you say there before that committee that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was owned by the nation? A. It was to an extent owned by the nation. It was inaugurated by popular subscription after the Russo-Turkish War in 1876 and 1877, and I happen to be born in the same section of the country.

Q. What did you mean in testifying before that committee that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was practically a semi-government line belonging to the Russian Government, that the steamers were owned by the nation? 1797

Mr. Dorr: I object to that form of question. The witness should first be asked whether or not he made such a statement.

Mr. Burlingham: He said he testified. Well, I withdraw the question.

Q. Did you testify as follows before the Committee of Congress in answer to Mr. Hawley: "By Mr. Hawley: Q. Do you know the names of the managers of these lines, Mr. Fourman? A. Yes, sir, the Rus-1798 sian Volunteer Fleet was practically a semi-government line belonging to the Russian Government, the steamers were owned by the nation." Did you testify to that? A. Yes.

Q. Was it true? A. To an extent.

Q. To what extent was it not true? A. Well, I will tell you to what extent it was true.

Q. Very well; either way? A. The officers of the Russian Volunteer fleet were all of the Russian Navy. The Russian Volunteer Fleet was receiving and is receiving now a subsidy on the other lines. The steamers in time of war are to carry soldiers, ammunition 1799 and so on, and were built for that purpose. Now, I stated that the nation owned them, as I said before the Russian Volunteer Fleet was inaugurated through a popular subscription all through the Empire of Russia, and each state, or as we call it there, government, subscribed a certain sum of money to the fleet to build a steamer. That is what most of the steamers are named after the states, like Petersburg, Moscow and so on. After that the Russian Volunteer Fleet were building steamers out of the money that they made.

Q. Out of this popular subscription? A. No, out of the profits. The first inauguration of the line was 1800 a popular subscription.

Q. That is what you meant by the nation; you meant the Russian people as a whole? A. I meant the people as a whole, yes.

Q. But the government had some interest I suppose? A. The government had the management of the Russian Volunteer Fleet in that it managed the affairs of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, took charge of each department, Department of War, Department of Marine and Department of Navy, and so on.

Q. Who fixed the rates? A. For the Russian Volunteer Fleet?

Q. Passenger? A. For the Russian or American Service.

Mr. Dorr: I object unless it is made more specific.

Q. Who fixed the westbound rates for third class passengers? A. I don't know who fixed the rates; I could not tell you.

Q. Who fixed the rates for the eastbound? A. I I could not tell you.

Q. Did this competition on the part of Conference Lines exist at the time of the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. Yes, sir.

1802

Q. Who reduced the rates of the Russian Volunteer steamers? A. I don't know who reduced them.

Q. Did you? A. No, sir.

Q. Did Vesely Company have anything to do with it? A. Absolutely nothing.

Q. You were then their chief clerk and you had no responsibility for rates, I suppose? A. No.

Q. You had personally never anything to do with the Russian East Asiatic? A. Yes.

Q. What? A. When the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company went out of the conference and became an independent line, one of their steamers was on the way to New York. Mr. Richards received a cable as to whether he would not want to take care of the line as a general passenger agent. He was at that time communicating with the committee of the Russian Volunteer Fleet. The steamer came in in the meantime and I had charge of the passengers. If I am not mistaken it was the Estonia or the Sultania; I don't remember.

Q. That is your only relation? A. That is all. Oh, yes, there was another relation. C. B. Richard would not accept the agency as the Russian Volunteer Fleet, did not want them to represent two Russian Lines at the same time and they turned over the agency to Benham and Boyesen.

Q. Were those two lines the Russian Volunteer and the Russian East Asiatic, rivals in business? A. Not when they were independent; not when the Russian East Asiatic was independent.

Q. Did they have an arrangement, do you mean? A. No, they did not have an arrangement.

Q. Why weren't they rivals if they were carrying passengers to and from Russia and New York? A. They were quoting the same rates I believe.

1805 Q. You mean to say if you quote the same rates you are not competitors? A. Well, I don't know to what extent you mean, they are competitors in what way?

Q. I understood you just a moment ago to say that the Russian Volunteer Fleet did not wish Messrs. C. B. Richard & Company to take the agency of the Russian East Asiatic because they were rivals in business. Am I wrong? A. Yes; you are right; in that way they were competitors, they were rivals.

Q. And the Russian East Asiatic began in 1908, did it? A. No, I think it began earlier.

Q. And it continued until when? A. The Russian East Asiatic still continues.

1806 Q. And it has been, you say, in the conference and out of the conference? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know the dates? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, I have looked through this large number of exhibits put in by the Government, circulars announcing the sailings of vessels of the Northwest Transport and the Uranium Line and in the case of all of these that I have seen the commission on third class passage tickets is stated at $3, yet you say that the commission was $4, do you? A. Some times.

Q. Why was not that stated in these circulars to agents which were gotten out by your company? A. It did not concern all the agents.

Q. Well, did you have other circulars than these that you have not produced? A. No, but that was a special agreement. 1807

Q. Take for instance Petitioner's Exhibit 158, with regard to the Napolitan Prince, rate to Rotterdam, $22, commission $3, and this 167, notice of four steamers, the Uranium, Napolitan Prince, Sicilian Prince and Volturno, the fares are given, steerage rates to Hamburg, $28, Bremen $27, Antwerp, $26, Libau, $33, commission $3, wasn't that a general circular to all agents? A. Yes, sir, but not to general agents.

Q. Were these circulars the sole circulars that were given out to the agents here in New York City? A. Yes. 1808

Q. To the agents of the East Side, Essex Street and the streets of the East Side? A. I don't remember whether it was Essex Street.

Q. How many agents have you in New York? A. City?

Q. Yes? A. About twenty.

Q. How many are on the lower East Side? A. About ten or twelve.

Q. And these agents are in other business too, are they, mostly? A. No, not always.

Q. Do they depend for their entire subsistance in selling tickets for the Uranium? A. Yes. 1809

Q. They are in no other business? A. Maybe some of them are, but not that I know of.

Q. Did you ever know a firm of Oliner Brothers? A. Yes.

Q. Where is their place? A. 67 Clinton Street.

Q. Were they agents of the Northwest Transport Line? A. Yes.

Q. And the Uranium Line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they still? A. No, sir; they are conference agents now.

1810 Q. They are what? A. Conference agents.

Q. When did they cease to be agents for you? A. When the conference gave them the line.

Q. What date? A. I don't remember.

Q. About? A. About a year ago or a year and a half.

Q. Is that their sole business, that of agents? A. Agents and bankers.

Q. For railroads and steamships they are agents? A. There are no such things as agents for railroads, because the railroads don't allow them now any commissions.

1811 Q. Now. But how was it in 1908, 1909 and 1910? A. They were selling perhaps tickets for railroad companies.

Q. You said a moment ago that they were solely agents for the Uranium Steamship Company? A. I consider it is the same business, banking business, railway business and steamship. The ticket business is necessarily in the same hands, some of the agents represent various lines and have banking business; others have not.

Q. Then you don't wish to stand by your answer a few moments ago that these agents were dependent solely on the Uranium Steamship Company for 1812 their livelihood, do you? A. We have agents who depend upon the Uranium Steamship Company only.

Q. Did they have a salary or commissions? A. Commission.

Q. You have no salaried men, I believe? A. No, none at all.

Q. Are you familiar with the work of the agents on the East Side? A. More or less.

Q. You have had to do with them yourself. Do you go over there? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Are you prepared to swear that the commissions were never more than $4? A. On steerage business?

Q. Yes? A. I don't remember.

Q. I think you ought to remember that. Are they ever $5? A. I don't remember; maybe for a sailing or two.

Q. You mean when the competition got hot. Did the commission ever rise then to $6 or $7? A. Never.

Q. Then you do remember that? A. I do not remember exactly, but it might have been.

Q. Might have been what? A. That the commission was some times more than $3 or $4.

Q. I did not ask you that; I asked you whether it had ever been $6 or $7? A. I don't think so.

1814

Q. Are you in doubt about it? A. I would not swear to it.

Q. Are you the man in the company that knows most about this matter? A. Now I am.

Q. But $4 was very common? A. $4 was very common with some of the agents.

Q. Was it so with Oliner Brothers? A. Yes, it was.

Q. Why was it $4 with them although it was published at $3? A. Because Oliner Brothers are agents, they were clerks in an office of some conference agents on the East Side, and one nice day they decided to establish an office of their own and they applied to us for the agency. We appointed them as agents and representing our line only we paid them a $4 commission.

Q. Now, I understand you to say with regard to the Neckar notice of the sailing of which is in Polish, Petitioner's Exhibit 166, you were good enough to translate, that this was a reduced rate by the North German Lloyd; is that right? A. I suppose so.

Q. And I understood that immediately after that you reduced the rate on some steamer; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. What steamer was that? A. I don't remember now. If I had the cards before me I would know.

1816 Q. Is my recollection correct that you originally had a vessel advertised to sail on January 15th, 1910? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that then the Neckar reduced its rate and you postponed your sailing to the 18th for some reason or other? A. There was a deduction for the 15th of January.

Q. Why did you postpone your sailing; I did not understand? A. The steamer was late in coming.

Q. So the Uranium then was advertised to sail on the 18th? A. On the 18th.

1817 Q. Her original rate was what; $28? A. For the 18th, $22.

Q. Was that your only advertised rate? A. No, it was not.

Q. What was your previous advertisement? A. $25 for the 15th.

Q. It was originally to Hamburg, $28? A. Yes.

Q. Rotterdam $25? A. Yes.

Q. And you reduced it to $22? A. Yes.

Q. Was that as appears on Exhibit 165 on January, 1910? A. Yes.

Q. Look at it please, carefully? A. I see it.

Q. Did I understand you to say that was in consequence of some action taken by the North German 1818 Lloyd? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it? A. That was in the consequence of another sailing which was scheduled for the 15th, if I am not mistaken it was for the Graf Waldersee.

Q. That circular is dated January 8th, the one you referred to now, Petitioner's Exhibit 84? A. Yes.

Q. $24 on the Graf Waldersee, dated January 8th? A. Yes.

Q. You said it was in consequence of that you fixed your rate at $22; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. What had the Neckar advertisement to do with it; anything? A. With what?

1819

Q. With the reduction by you? A. The Uranium was originally to sail on the 15th. Her rate was $28 to Hamburg. The Graf Waldersee on the Hamburg American Line reduced its rate to $24, they were booking passengers for the 15th at the rate of $24. Our steamer was postponed to the 18th. We could not expect our agents to book passengers for our line sailing on the 18th at the rate of $28, when the Waldersee was to sail on the 15th for $24; changing the sailing we had to reduce our rate to $22 to Hamburg in order to get the business; the North German Lloyd finding out that the Uranium instead of the 15th would sail on the 18th, reduced their rate to $24, whereas, according to this rate our rate to Hamburg or Bremen would have been also $24 or $25.

1820

Mr. Spooner: Which, $24 or $25?

Q. When did the North German Lloyd do that? Isn't that circular dated? A. Yes, it is dated December 11, 1909.

Mr. Dorr: I don't think that purports to be the date of the circular.

The Witness: No, this is the date of the form.

Q. What is the date? A. I don't know. There is not any date at all.

1821

Q. You don't know what date it is? A. No.

Q. Then you say that is not the date; that is merely a form? A. Just the form.

Q. You don't know what date it was issued? A. No, sir.

PAUL G. FOURMAN, recalled:

Cross-examination continued by Mr. Burlingham:

Q. Have you reconsidered your translation of the Neckar circular? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that December 18th or January 18th? A. December 18th.

Q. Then of course the announcement of the North German Lloyd that the Neckar was going to sail, had nothing whatever to do with your change of rates on the Uranium? A. Not for that particular sailing.

Q. How many steamers has the Uranium Line now? 1826
A. Three steamers.

Q. What are their names? A. The Campanello, the Uranium, Volturno.

Q. Did not the Uranium or the Northwest Transport originally have more steamers? A. They were chartering some steamers before.

Q. Tell us the tonnage of the various steamers, take the Uranium? A. I do not know the tonnage.

Q. About?

Mr. Dorr: My next witness will be able to give this evidence exactly.

Mr. Burlingham: Then I won't trouble with him. 1827

Q. The Avoca was built for you, was she? A. I don't know whether she was built for us, but she was in the service of the New York Continental Line.

Q. Do you know whether her name was changed? A. Did she have another name originally?

Q. Before? A. Before she was named Avoca?

Q. Yes? A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. You don't know much about these steamers? A. No.

Q. Now, several times I notice you said the Hamburg-American Line put on a steamer, or the North 1828 German Lloyd put on a steamer. You don't mean to suggest the sailing dates of those steamers were changed, do you? A. No, sir.

Q. Never? A. No, sir.

Mr. Burlingham: I think that is all I want to ask.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Spooner:

Q. You gave some testimony, Mr. Fourman, about the sale of tickets by your agents at New Britain of 1829 the Uranium Line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prepaid tickets? A. Prepaid, yes, sir.

Q. And you stated the passengers were not permitted for a long while, who came from Russia, to travel through Germany to the initial port, you so stated? A. Yes.

Q. How long was that true, to your knowledge; how long have you been in this business? A. Six years.

Q. Only six years? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know how long that has been true? A. Sir?

Q. Do you know how general it was that passengers
1830 who came from Russia, were not permitted to go through Germany to Rotterdam? A. That is in cases they have tickets of lines who have not the concession of the German Government to have the passengers to go through Germany.

Q. That is one of the things I want to get at? A. I don't know.

Q. Why was it you do know, and you have just stated that Uranium tickets for passengers, passengers carrying Uranium tickets were not permitted to go through Germany to Rotterdam or the port of sailing? A. They were never permitted.

1831

Q. Who prevented them? A. I understand the control stations.

Q. You mean the German Government prevent it? A. I don't know whether it was the Government.

Q. Did the Uranium have any license to do business in Germany, license from the German Government? A. In Germany?

Q. Yes? A. We are not doing any business in Germany.

Q. These tickets were sold on your line, weren't they? A. Yes, sir.

1832

Q. And your passengers were going on your tickets from Germany, to take the steamer at Rotterdam, were they not? A. That is not saying we were doing business in Germany.

Q. Was that permitted in 1892? A. By whom?

Q. By the German Government? A. I don't know.

Mr. Dorr: I object to that on the ground that the Uranium Line was not in existence at that time. The witness's testimony and knowledge is confined to that line.

Mr. Spooner: I am confining him to that line.

Mr. Dorr: Since 1892 I understood you to ask.

Q. Isn't it a fact that since 1892, if you know, that passengers coming from Russian points for America, have not been permitted to pass through Germany, unless they were examined with reference to their health and so forth at the frontier?

Mr. Dorr: I object to that on the ground that the witness's knowledge of the steamship business, as already testified to, goes back to 1906, and the first and only line which he has represented, New York Continental, the Northwest Transport, Russian Volunteer and the Uranium, those steamship lines all came into existence since that time.

Mr. Spooner: There has been so much cross-examination of the witness that it is difficult to understand whether it is direct-examination or cross-examination. I am cross-examining him.

Q. Isn't it a fact that since 1908 passengers coming from Russia have not been permitted to pass through Germany, without certification in respect to health and all that at the frontier? A. I don't know 1835 the exact reason why they were not permitted to travel by way of Germany, when they have tickets of the Uranium Line, for instance, but I do know the moment they buy tickets of some other line they are permitted to proceed.

Q. Isn't the reason for that they are examined and have certificates as to their fitness to be admitted in this country? A. Our passengers never object to being examined and inspected by these control stations.

Q. These control stations are maintained by contribution of different companies who utilize them? A. I understand so.

1836 Q. Did your company ever contribute to the expense of it? A. I don't know; we were never asked; perhaps we were.

Q. Did you ever apply to them to contribute? A. I don't know.

Q. But at all events your passengers were not examined with reference to health and fitness to come through Germany, were they? A. They did not have the time to be examined; no sooner they showed their tickets, they were turned back to Russia.

Q. You mean they would not examine at the control stations passengers carried by lines which did not contribute to the expense of maintaining those stations, is that what you mean? A. I don't know any reason why they wouldn't examine them.

Q. Are they Government stations? A. I don't know whether they are Government stations.

Q. Have you ever seen them? A. These stations?

Q. Yes? A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you know it to be a fact that without an examination at those stations, the German Government will not permit them to go through Germany? A. I don't know.

1838

Q. Do you want to leave it in the record as your statement, that they were prevented from passing through Germany, because they held tickets over your lines? A. Because they held tickets of an independent line, or rather a foreign line.

Q. You testified that that was the reason why they were not permitted to go through Germany, because they held tickets over a Russian line, a line owned by Russia or over your line? A. Well, if I am to state the cases I wish to call the attention that whenever such a ticket has been returned to us it was usually stamped with a rubber stamp in German saying, "For immigrants, not valid."

Q. Not what? A. "Not valid, not good."

Q. Not valid for immigrants? A. Yes, and such tickets would have been returned to purchasers, with the request to purchase tickets over some other line, in many cases not mentioning the name of some other line, which means they could buy tickets on any other line but the one they had.

Q. Didn't the validity of that ticket depend upon the question of whether the holder of that ticket has been examined with reference to health and fitness to pass through Germany? A. Well, they couldn't have examined them for that matter as I said before. They could see whether he was fit to travel and if not, they could send him back.

Q. Who had control of these stations, the steamship lines? A. It seems so from the letters addressed to the purchasers.

Q. Who signed the endorsement from the back with the stamp? A. Agents of Conference Lines in most cases, the North German Lloyd, the Hamburg-Amerika Line, the Holland-American Line, letterheads bearing the names of the two lines were usually sent to purchasers.

1841 Q. You have never seen any one of these stations? A. No, I stated before I have never seen them.

Q. Do you happen to know what the establishment consisted of, what the system of examination was? A. Do you mean the medical examination?

Q. Yes? A. I don't know exactly, but I suppose a general medical examination would take place.

Q. Well, they had a plant there, didn't they, for fumigation and all that? A. I couldn't tell you; I suppose so, they would not be able to examine them in a barn.

Q. Your agent at New Britain testified as to a large number of tickets that were purchased by people in that vicinity who had come from Russia and who 1842 bought tickets to send over for the wife or the children, brother and sister and all that. When a ticket which had been sold by your line was rejected over there, did your company refund the money? A. Sir?

Q. Did your company refund the money? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In all cases? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said yesterday in some cases? A. In all cases.

Q. In all cases? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The testimony showed that in one case at least, your agent charged several dollars, deducted several dollars from the refund? A. That might have been his commission.

Q. They get a commission for getting back the money that had been paid for a ticket that could not be used? A. Yes; but we would return to the agent the commission he originally deducted. It is up to him to refund it to the purchaser if he is willing to. We refund the entire amount received from the agent for the ticket. We did not retain one cent.

Q. One witness testified that the agent retained several dollars? A. Well, that is the agent's business. 1844

Mr. Dorr: I object to that statement. The witness's testimony as I recall the testimony was that the agent gave a ticket on another line and so required additional money because of the higher rate of the Conference Line.

Mr. Spooner: The witness testified that the difference—he bought the ticket on another line but that he got several dollars less for the Uranium ticket in refund than he paid, and that he also paid enough more for the other ticket to make the difference, $13.

Mr. Dorr: My recollection is just the opposite about that. Of course, I may be in error about it. 1845

Mr. Spooner: I am not mistaken about his testimony.

Q. If you sold me a ticket and it was not used and I could not use it, and I returned it to you, would you give me back what I paid for it? A. If you would buy the ticket directly from us, that is, in our office, we would give you back the entire amount; but as the case here was with an agent, the agent deducted his commission when he remitted the money to us.

Q. You would make me pay, then, the commission of your agent? A. No, we do not.

Q. Then why wouldn't you give me back my money? A. In most of the cases, the agent deals with the purchaser and assuming that we refunded the entire amount of what the agent paid to us, in many cases the agent remits to the purchaser his commission that he made on the ticket.

Q. Didn't you pay the agent his commission? A. Certainly.

Q. Did he take it a second time, then, on the pas-
1847 senger? A. No, he couldn't take it a second time, because he remits to us, less the commission.

Q. What has a passenger to do with your relation to the agent? Suppose I go to your ticket office and buy a ticket; what have I to do with your relations with your agent? A. Then you haven't if you come direct to us. If you were buying a ticket direct from us, you would have absolutely nothing to do with the agent, but if you were in New Britain, Connecticut, and you purchase a ticket in New Britain, Connecticut, from our agent there, naturally, you deal with the agent. If you come to New York, we would refund the money to you in full and get the commission back from the agent.

1848 Q. Then the passenger pays your agent for the service in selling the ticket, is that it? A. It is in most of the cases.

Q. The agent is your agent, isn't he? A. Well—

Q. They are your tickets, aren't they, not his? A. No.

Q. He sells the tickets for you, doesn't he? A. Yes.

Q. As your agent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't his commission included in the price of the ticket? A. He is remitting to us the price of the tickets, less the commission, just as with any other line; absolutely no difference.

Mr. Spooner: I will buy my tickets at the main office after this.

The Witness: I wish all of the passengers would buy tickets at the main office, then we would do away with the agent.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Beers:

Q. Mr. Fourman, you testified as I understand that you have been engaged in this business for six years? 1850
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has this system of control stations in the German Government been in existence during that entire period? A. I think so.

Q. And as a steamship man and as a matter of fact, to your general information, that system of control stations has been in existence for a much longer period than six years? A. I think so just from my experience.

Q. It is your information that that system has existed since approximately the year 1892? A. I don't know whether it has existed since 1892, but I know that it did exist prior to 1906. 1851

Q. Prior to 1906? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prior to 1900? A. I would not tell you; I don't know.

Q. It has existed continuously, has it not? A. I think so.

Q. Isn't it a fact whether or not tickets for immigrants are recognized by the German Government at the control stations depends on whether or not the line issuing them has received a concession from the German Government? A. I suppose so.

1852 Q. So it is a matter of Government regulation with the German Government, is it not? A. I suppose so.

Q. Has your line any concession with the German Government? A. Not that I know of.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Mr. Fourman, the money that the Uranium Line received from the sale of tickets, is that deposited immediately to the credit of the line? A. Immediately.

1853 Q. Wasn't it, in some occasions, deposited in the State Bank? A. What difference does that make to you?

Q. Was it deposited in the State Bank? A. No, sir.

Q. In no instance? A. No, sir.

Q. Was it deposited with C. B. Richard & Company? A. No, sir.

Q. In no instance? A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you ask me what difference that made to me? A. I don't think this is anything to do with the case.

Q. What connection has the State Bank with the Uranium Steamship Company? A. None at all.

1854 Q. Or C. B. Richard? A. None at all.

Q. Was it so in the case of the Northwest Transport? A. Yes; C. B. Richard & Company were the agents.

Q. Was the money received from prepaid tickets deposited in the State Bank?

Mr. Dorr: I object as immaterial.

Q. As a separate account? A. No, sir.

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as immaterial.

Q. Was it deposited in the State Bank? A. No, sir. 1855

Q. Was it deposited with C. B. Richard & Company? A. No, sir.

Q. Was it immediately deposited in the general account of the Northwest Transport Company? A. If you wish to know the details, I will tell you that Vesley & Company were simply depositors of the State Bank.

Q. Vesley & Company— A. Were depositors just as you and I can be depositors in the State Bank.

Q. Now, when was the money that you received from prepaid tickets taken out of the account of Vesley & Company in the State Bank and turned over to the general account of the Northwest Transport Company? A. At a time when Vesley & Company were agents for the line, it was turned over to the account of the London office upon the arrival of the vessel. 1856

Q. Upon the arrival of the passenger? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not turned over upon the receipt of the money, however? A. We kept the account of the Northwest Transport Line in New York.

Q. You kept the prepaid tickets separate? A. No, sir.

Q. The amount received from prepaid tickets separate from the general account? A. We dealt with the New York office of the Northwest Transport Line, with Mr. Thomas. 1857

Q. Was there a New York office at that time on the Northwest Transport? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When they handled the funds of the Northwest Transport? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you received money for the tickets on the Northwest Transport Line, unless it was a prepaid ticket, you deposited it immediately with the 1858 Northwest Transport Line? A. We have an account with the New York office of the Northwest Transport Line and were turning over to them the money received by us for transportation.

Q. But you kept a separate account of that money received for tickets from which passengers made immediately their sailings and those in which they were prepaid tickets, so-called? A. We kept a separate prepaid account.

Q. You kept a separate prepaid account and the money received from the prepaid account was not deposited in the general account of the Northwest 1859 Transport Line, until the passenger had arrived, is that right? A. I stated it so before.

Q. That is a fact; now, why was that? A. That was a matter of regulation.

Q. Do you do the same thing now? A. No, sir.

Q. Why was that a matter of regulation at that time? A. That was, I suppose, the arrangement between the Lines and Vesley & Company.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Fourman, that C. B. Richard & Company were afraid that the steamers of the Northwest Transport Lines might not make their sailings? A. No, sir.

Q. You never said that? A. No, sir.

1860 Q. You never heard Mr. Richard say that? A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure of that? A. He might have said it to somebody; he never said it to me.

Q. You never said it? A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure of that? A. Will you repeat that question again?

Q. What did you think I meant?

Mr. Dorr: I object to it as immaterial what he thought you meant.

Q. (Question read.) Can you answer now? A. You mean to say that C. B. Richard & Company were afraid to pay over to the Northwest Transport Line, because the steamers might not sail? 1861

Q. Yes? A. Maybe C. B. Richard & Company were afraid when they were agents, I don't know.

Q. You were with C. B. Richard? A. Yes, sir; but I was not afraid, because I didn't invest anything.

Q. Did C. B. Richard invest in the Northwest Transport Line? A. They must have reasons to be afraid, you know; I don't know what reasons they had. 1862

Q. Now, at the time the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, first commenced the sailings; its steamers were not of the same efficiency as the steamers of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, isn't that true? A. No, they were not.

Q. They were inferior steamers to the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. Very much so.

Q. So that of course it was fair competition in the first instance for the East Asiatic Steamship Company to charge a less rate than the Volunteer Fleet, with its superior steamers? A. This I couldn't tell you. 1863

Q. Your agent in Chicago is one Anton Burnett, is he not? A. One of the sub-agents.

Q. Do you know anything about his previous conditions? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know if he was ever in jail? A. I don't know.

Mr. Dorr: I object as immaterial.

Q. Is he known as a notorious scalper? A. Maybe, to you.

Q. No; to the railroads? A. Not that I know about it.

1864 Q. In 1910, you were with the Northwest Transport Line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the Northwest Transport Line constructing any steamers at that time? A. I don't know.

Q. Isn't it a fact that you knew they were not constructing any steamers? A. I don't know.

Q. Were you with Vesley & Company, the general passenger agents? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had charge of getting out their circulars? A. Not all the time, not while Mr. Vesley was alive.

Q. Was he alive in January? A. What year?

Q. 1910? A. No, sir.

1865 Q. He was not? A. Yes, he was.

Q. You saw all of the circulars that went out, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now look at this circular, Defendant's Exhibit 1 and tell me what new steamers were being constructed, Government Exhibit 167? A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. That circular went out with your authority, didn't it? A. Maybe.

Q. There were other similar circulars sent out, from time to time, were there not? A. There were.

Q. And each one of them had the statement that the Northwest Transport Line had new steamers under construction? A. I suppose we have some sort of a letter from London.

1866

Q. Did you have some sort of a letter? A. We must have; I did not invent this.

Q. Have the steamers ever been built? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether the steamship Uranium has a double bottom or not? A. I don't know, sir.

Mr. Dorr: We will concede that it is a single bottom or a triple bottom, whatever you prefer, or double bottom.

Mr. Bullowa: That makes a difference.

By Mr. Burlingham:

Q. Do you remember the time that the Russian Volunteer Fleet went out of business here? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see the cablegram that came from Europe about it? A. I don't remember, sir.

Q. Wasn't there a cablegram sent from Russia to the office in New York? A. I think so.

Q. You don't recall? A. No.

Q. Have you any access to the papers of the Russian Volunteer Fleet here? A. No, sir.

Mr. Burlingham: That is all.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Isn't it a fact that all the passengers you carry eastbound for points west of Chicago who land at Halifax are shipped west through the Canadian Railroad? A. Yes, we do; through the Canadian Pacific.

Q. You get commissions on that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the railroads? A. Yes.

Q. So you are not sustaining any loss in the railroad business west of Chicago? A. Provided they go from Halifax.

Q. But you all go through Halifax, you all send them through Halifax? A. Yes, we do.

Q. East of Chicago you get your commercial allowance, do you not? A. We do.

Q. And west of Chicago, you get your allowance from the Canadian railroads? A. If we send passengers by way of Halifax.

Q. You send them all through Halifax? A. Not all; some go by way of New York.

Q. Practically all? A. I cannot say that.

Q. How many go by way of New York? A. I don't know.

Q. About? A. I cannot tell you.

1870

Q. Everything west of the State of Ohio? A. I don't know. I must look up the records.

Q. Have you records showing that? A. We have passenger lists.

Q. Your records showing where the passengers disembarked? A. Yes.

Q. And your Trunk Line bills? A. Yes.

Q. You have them all in your office? They are not in Europe? A. Some of them are in our office.

By Mr. Dorr:

1871

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, you naturally prefer to have your passengers in the western territory go through Halifax where you can get a commercial allowance, than New York? A. We like to have them go by way of Halifax for two or three reasons; the first reason is they save two or three days' ocean travel, secondly, the rates are cheaper, and the third reason is, we do get the allowance.

Q. You would rather have them go in the way in which they will be able to get an allowance? A. Yes.

Q. Certain passengers, I suppose, prefer to travel by way of New York? A. Some insist they want to go by way of New York.

Q. And in that case, you cannot get your commercial allowance? A. No, sir.

Q. And on the eastbound traffic all the passengers pass through New York, do they not? A. All our steamers sail from New York.

Q. And they do not touch at Halifax? A. No, sir.

Q. You cannot get any commercial allowance on the eastbound business? A. No, sir.

Q. In the western or eastern territory, or in any territory? A. None at all.

Q. Did you know that the Conference Lines had endeavored to induce the Canadian Pacific to refuse to give you a commercial allowance on your Canadian business; your Halifax business?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading.

Mr. Dorr: I think you have gone into the question of commercial allowances and endeavored to show that there was no injury in them either inflicted or intended. I am referring now to what occurred in the joint meeting the Western Passenger Agents Association and the Conference Lines in November, 1909, in which it appears from the minutes that an effort was made by the steamship lines to induce the Canadian Pacific to refuse to allow the Northwest Transport Line commercial allowances on its Halifax business. 1874

Q. Do you know about that? A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. In regard to the circular in which you made an error in the translation and from which in refreshing your knowledge of Polish, you now find to have been advertised to sail December 18th, do you recall whether or not you had a steamer on the 18th of December, 1910? A. I don't remember.

Q. I ask you to examine Exhibit No. 157 for identification in which it is stated that the Northwest Transport Line had a steamer, the Napolitan Prince sailing on December 18, 1909, and ask whether that is correct? A. Yes, that is correct. 1875

Q. So that the steamer Neckar which was advertising a reduced rate of $24 was sailing on the same day or advertised to sail the same day as your steamer, the Napolitan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your regular rate for the Napolitan Prince? A. I don't remember now. It was in 1909.

Q. What was your regular rate at that time? A. It must have been as usual, about $28.

1876 Q. Now, turning to Government Exhibit 158 for identification, to the advertised sailings of the Russian American Line, I call your attention to what purports to be a record of the departure of the Estonia from the Russian American Line on January 18, 1910? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it then, the Estonia of the Russian American Line and not the Neckar which was the ship which was advertised as against the postponed sailing of the Uranium for January 18? A. I don't remember.

1877 Q. Have you a circular of the Estonia? A. I don't know whether I have.

Q. Now, is Germany one country in which there were control stations? A. I understand there are some control stations now, in Hungary.

Q. Did you not have the same difficulty with the Hungarian control stations that you had with the German control stations?

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that. The witness has no knowledge on the subject—it is hearsay.

A. I don't know of any difficulties with the control stations.

1878 Q. Well, is it not a fact, that you had complaints from passengers that they were informed at the various control stations that their tickets were invalid and they could not use them? Will that paper refresh your recollection at all in that regard (handing witness paper)?

Mr. Beers: That is objected to as leading.

A. I have investigated this case and found that it was the Hungarian Government that prevented passengers from proceeding to Rotterdam.

Q. Mr. Fourman, what is your information as to whether or not the German Government or officers thereof are interested in the Hamburg-American Line and the Holland-Amerika Line?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as incompetent.

Q. What is your understanding about that, Mr. Fourman?

Mr. Spooner: Do you know anything about it?

The Witness: About what, Senator?

Mr. Spooner: About whether the German Government owned any interest? 1880

The Witness: I don't know.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. You don't know the Russian Government had any interest in the Russian Volunteer Fleet of your own knowledge, do you, Mr. Fourman, you have not been an officer of the Russian Government, have you? A. I do know that the Russian Government has an interest in the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Q. You know that of your own knowledge? A. Of my own knowledge.

Q. You are an officer of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, and have been, and have seen contracts of the Russian Government with the line? A. No, I have 1881 not seen any contracts, but I know the Russian Government has an interest, or is interested in the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Q. As to the German Government and the Hamburg-American Line or North German Lloyd Line, what is your information as to that line?

Mr. Burlingham: I object on the ground that the question is vague and indefinite, and on the further ground that the witness has already said he knows nothing about it.

1882 Q. What is your understanding on that point, Mr. Fourman?

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to. Ask him if he knows.

Mr. Dorr: I have asked him that question.

Mr. Spooner: You are cross-examining now and we object to the question.

Mr. Dorr: You have made your objection, as we understand it, as I understand it, you have made your objection. I am asking the question now, Mr. Fourman.

1883 Q. Will you answer my question? A. I don't know.

Q. You have already told me that. Now, what is your understanding about it?

Mr. Bullowa: Objected to.

A. Absolutely no knowledge.

Q. You have never heard anything on the subject at all?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to.

Mr. Dorr: I am testing this witness's recollection.

1884 Q. Go ahead, Mr. Fourman?

Mr. Spooner: I object to that, the witness having testified that he had no knowledge.

A. I don't know.

Q. You have already answered that. Now, please answer my question; have you or have you not heard it as a matter of common report in the steamship business in which you have been employed in the last six years, that the German Government was back of the Holland-Amerika Line and had financial interest in it or officers of the German Government, and had a financial interest in the Hamburg-American Line? A. Never heard of it.

Q. You never heard any such report at all? A. No.

Q. Although you have been in the steamship business in this port for six years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same as to the North German Lloyd? A. The same as to the North German Lloyd.

Q. Have you ever heard that any officer of the German Government had an interest in the Holland-Amerika Line? A. I don't know.

Q. Have you ever heard? A. No, sir. 1886

Q. Never heard? A. No, sir.

Q. And as to the North German Lloyd? A. No, sir.

Q. And as to the Hamburg-American Line? A. The same thing.

Q. You are quite sure about that, Mr. Fourman? A. Quite clear.

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, as to these control stations and the objection to use of your tickets, have the reports which you have received, complaints which you have received been to the effect that the German Government prevented your passengers from proceeding on their way or that the agents of the Conference 1887
Lines who were running these control stations turned Lines who were running these control stations turned tickets of your ships from Rotterdam to New York were invalid?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading and as calling for mere hearsay opinion of the witness.

A. Well, as I could see from the return tickets, they were stamped as I stated before by the control stations' agents, but in speaking to some of the passengers, I found that it has been done with the assistance of the government gensdarmes of the police.

1888

Q. Acting under the direction of the agents of the control stations? A. I could not say that.

Q. Has your line ever had any communication from the German Government in the matter? A. Not in New York.

Q. In every instance which you have received any complaint that your passengers were turned back with the statement that their tickets were invalid, there has been a Conference Line agent present, has there 1889 not?

Mr. Spooner: Do you know that?

Q. From the reports you have received? A. I don't know; I could not tell you whether a Conference agent was present.

Q. Did not the passengers inform you that the persons who turned them back endeavored to sell them a ticket over one of the Conference Lines?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading and hearsay.

A. Yes, sir.

1890 Mr. Dorr: I think that Senator Spooner went as far in inquiring into this witness's hearsay information on this matter as anyone could go, and I am merely following him and cross-examining. Cross-examination does not call for hearsay any more than direct.

Q. Now, Mr. Fourman, this difficulty with the getting your passengers past the control stations which were established by the Conference Lines continues right down to date, does it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the tickets which you sell your passengers, are the tickets which call for the transportation of the passengers across Germany? A. No, sir; from Rotterdam to New York only.

Q. That is the only ticket which the passenger has of yours which he presents to the control stations, is a ticket from Rotterdam to New York? A. Yes, sir; or to Halifax.

Q. Or to Halifax? And it is those tickets for Trans-Atlantic transportation that the agents of the control stations state are invalid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that it is necessary for the passenger to buy a ticket for the Conference Line? A. If he wants to proceed. 1892

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. They were to go through Germany, these passengers, by rail, were they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean to testify if these people had gotten to Rotterdam that there was any pretence that the ticket would not have been honored? A. The ticket would have been honored.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Of course, your line would have honored its tickets, would it not, Mr. Fourman, if a passenger had been able to get to Rotterdam to present them? A. The moment a ticket would have been presented to any of our officials at Rotterdam, the ticket would have been honored. 1893

Q. But the difficulty was that before your passenger got to Rotterdam, he was informed that the ticket was valueless, was he not? A. In some cases he was told that a ticket was not any good.

Q. Now, this ticket, Government Exhibit No. 54, issued to Mrs. Beckerman, in regard to which there is a letter in evidence from the agent of the North German Lloyd Line in Illowa to the effect that it was invalid, can you state whether or not that is a valid ticket of your line? A. This is a good ticket.

Q. Where does the Austro-American Line run? A. Between New York and Trieste, and I think, touches some Greek ports, but I am not positive.

Q. Does that line to your information, have the assistance of the Austrian Government? A. I don't know, sir.

Q. I show you what purports to be a certain ticket of your line and ask whether that is one of the tickets which you have mentioned as having been returned to your line with the notation that it was useless? A. Yes, this is one of our tickets, and as I see 1895 inserted in indelible pencil "Zurück" which means "back," "Ottochin," dated July 10, 1911, and signed by Arthur Oelsner.

Q. Is your information that Arthur Oelsner was one of the agents of one of the lines of the control stations? A. I think so.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Spooner: I object upon the grounds it is incompetent and immaterial and not properly identified.

Q. What is this attached to it, the order? A. This is the purchaser's receipt.

1896

Mr. Dorr: I offer those in evidence.

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 182.

Mr. Dorr: There was one exhibit referred to in the testimony yesterday and which I was under the impression I had offered at the time, the advertisement of the sailing of the Lapland for January 22nd, reduced rate of $22. I will offer that now in evidence and also a circular of the Red Star Line under date of January 1, 1910, for New York-Antwerp service, containing the advertised rates. I don't know whether that was identified by the witness or not, but if there is any question about it, I will have it identified now. I offer that in evidence.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibits No. 183 and No. 184.

Mr. Dorr: That is all.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Mr. Fourman, if a person purchasing a prepaid ticket in New Britain from some point in Russia to 1898 the United States by way of Rotterdam, would that include a ticket by rail from the point of origin of the passenger to Rotterdam?

Mr. Dorr: I object to that as a hypothetical question not based on any facts in the record. The witness has already testified that they did not sell prepaid tickets from the inland Russian points to Rotterdam.

Mr. Spooner: I did not hear that.

Q. Then you sold the prepaid ticket only to the ocean traffic? A. We are engaged only in the ocean traffic. 1899

Q. That, I know, but you sell no orders for the railroad tickets? A. We do not.

Q. That answers my question. Then a person who bought a prepaid ticket good from Rotterdam to New York would have to buy or provide in some way a rail ticket from the residence of the person to the port? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, this is one of your tickets (handing witness Petitioner's Exhibit 54)? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is printed on the back of this ticket what I read to you: "According to the immigration laws 1900 of the United States contract laborers, insane persons, idiots, cripples, deaf mutes, blind persons, unmarried females, when pregnant, persons over sixty years of age, all diseased persons, all those liable to become a public charge are debarred from landing," that is a statement from the law of the United States at that time. I suppose now it is the same? A. To some extent.

Q. And a person holding a steamship ticket and having purchased a rail ticket from a point in Russia to the sailing port would when he reached the German Line be examined with reference to whether any of these disabilities existed? A. He would be examined by our physician in Rotterdam.

Q. Yes, but suppose the German Government was not willing that he be transported through Germany? A. Then they would have to tell the passenger that he is sick and that he ought to go back.

Q. They would have to have him examined as to whether he complied with these provisions? A. We don't stop the German Government from examining persons.

Q. The German Government would not permit a person without a medical certificate to go through Germany?

1902

Mr. Dorr: There is no evidence of that sort in the record.

By Mr. Beers:

Q. Mr. Fourman, a citizen of Russia or subject of the Czar leaving that country to come to America has to have a passport, does he not? A. According to the Russian laws, yes.

Q. And that passport would disclose, would it not, whether the person was an emigrant from Russia and immigrant to the United States? A. No, not necessarily; he would simply state he was going outside of Russia.

Q. It is not difficult, to ascertain, is it, whether or not certain persons leaving Russia are in fact emigrants and immigrants to the United States? A. No, not unless they say so.

Q. These regulations of the German control stations apply to immgrants, do they not? A. I so understand them.

Q. You don't understand they apply to casual travelers passing back and forth in Russia and in Germany? A. I understand they apply to Russian 1904 emigrants going to the United States.

By Mr. Burlingham:

Q. Do you remember that in 1904 or thereabouts a new law was passed in Germany with regard to this very matter? A. No, sir.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Mr. Fourman, you instruct your agents to notify the intending passenger to go to Rotterdam via Basle, do you not? A. Our Rotterdam office does.

Q. So as to avoid the effect of the German control stations? A. Yes.

Q. So that if an emigrant leaves a point in Russia 1905 to come to this country he has to travel all the way from Russia to Rotterdam via Basle so that your physicians can determine whether he can be landed in this country? A. Yes.

Q. And if your physicians determine that he cannot be landed in this country he has to forfeit the ticket and return to his originating point? A. A good many—

Q. Answer that question; would he forfeit it? A. Yes, sir.

1906

Q. So that if he went through Germany he would have a very much shorter journey before the question was determined whether he was fit as a passenger or not? A. Yes.

Q. You are not a hostile witness, are you? A. I don't understand your question.

Q. The District Attorney said you were a hostile witness to the Government.

Mr. Dorr: I made no such statement.

The Witness: I am absolutely not hostile to both sides.

1907

Q. Before you came here you have seen the District Attorney, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. You conferred with him? A. Not exactly.

Q. Well, you gave him certain information? A. Whatever I was asked to give.

Q. Now, the steamers, the Neapolitan Prince and the Sicilian Prince formerly belonged to the Prince Line and operated on a line of steamers from Italy to this country? A. Yes.

Q. And the Prince Line was forced out of that business because these steamers did not comply with the requirements of the Italian Government? A. I don't know that.

1908

Q. You have heard that? A. No, sir. Pardon me, the United States Government has also something to say about steamers, and they see our steamers as well as they see others.

Mr. Bullowa: I move to strike out his answer as not responsive.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Did you ever hear that the reason why the Napolitan Prince and the Sicilian Prince were taken off the Italian trade was that they were single screw steamers? A. I don't know.

Q. Haven't you heard that the requirement which led to the Sicilian Prince and the Napolitan Prince leaving the Italian service was that the Italian service required that emigrant ships be twin screw? A. I understand so.

Q. Are all the ships engaged in the North Atlantic steerage traffic employed by the conference line twin screw? A. Not all.

Q. There are ships of various lines that are single screw, are there not? A. I think so.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Which one; specify any one? A. The Birma.

Q. She is not in the passenger service? A. But she was up to two weeks ago.

Q. Is that the only one? A. I don't know. Some expert in the steamship business might tell you that.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Aren't there a number of such steamers? A. I understand there are a number. They are being replaced by new steamers now.

Mr. Dorr: That is all, Mr. Fourman.

Mr. Spooner: In response to the subpoena served on the Hamburg-American officials, dated June 23rd, to produce certain papers therein designated, I produce all that they were able to find, as follows:

Circular of Hamburg-Amerika Line to agents, dated March 25th, 1908, covering through rates to special points of Europe, outward steerage Pretoria, leaving Saturday, April 11th, 1908, reduction to $23, New York to Hamburg.

I also produce European railroad tariff Hamburg-Amerika Line September 1st, 1901. European railroad tariff Hamburg-Amerika Line, May, 1909.

European railroad tariff Hamburg-Amerika Line, April, 1910. 1917

Those are all of those papers we have been able to find.

Mr. Dorr: I will ask that with the exception of the last three that those exhibits be marked and that the last three be marked for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibits 185 to 201 inclusive and Petitioner's Exhibits 202, 203 and 204 for identification.

1918 Mr. Burlingham: In response to the subpoena to the Holland-Amerika Line, dated June 25th, I produce European railroad tariff of July 1911, published by the Holland-Amerika Line.

Mr. Dorr: I ask that that be marked for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 205 for identification.

Mr. Burlingham: I have a number of other railroad tariffs published by railroad lines, but I do not understand you want them. As to the rest of the subpoenas calling for circulars, showing our advertised steerage rates, may I ask whether you refer to those issued by the 1919 Holland-Amerika Line?

Mr. Dorr: Yes.

Mr. Burlingham: I have a large number here which I will produce and have them marked for identification.

Mr. Dorr: I suggest that they be marked for identification as one exhibit.

Mr. Burlingham: But they run only from 1908 to 1912 and your subpoena calls for them for 1906 and I am informed that they have none prior to 1908.

Mr. Dorr: Just one question in regard to the subpoena to the Hamburg-Amerika, I notice the circulars which they have produced all 1920 appear to be circulars for the reduced rates. The subpoena as I recall it covered the circulars for the original rate of those steamers as well as the reduced rates. I may be in error about that.

Mr. Spooner: It says original and supplemental; they have given me all they have.

Mr. Dorr: Perhaps they did not observe that particular clause.

Mr. Spooner: I will call their attention to that.

Mr. Burlingham: I have not any original ones. I have only got the produced papers.

Mr. Dorr: We will consider your subpoena amended in that same way then.

Mr. Burlingham: Yes.

EDWARD O. THOMAS, sworn on behalf of the petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

1922

Q. Mr. Thomas, what is your business? A. Steamship.

Q. How long have you been in the steamship business? A. About sixteen or seventeen years.

Q. What lines have you been with during that time? A. I have been with the Barber Steamship Company, the Vogeman Line and the Gans Line the same, or they were at the time, I believe, the Hamburg-Amerika Line and the Johnson Line.

Q. Have you been with any other lines during that period? A. I don't think so; no, sir; that I can recollect.

Q. How about the New York and Continental? A. Oh, certainly.

1923

Q. Those are the lines you are with now? A. New York-Continental, North West Transport Line and the Uranium Line.

Q. Did you go from the Hamburg-American Line to the New York and Continental? A. No, I went from there to the Johnson Line.

Q. What line had you been in prior to your service with the New York and Continental? A. The first company—no, I made a mistake. The first company I started was Furness, Withe & Company and from there to the Barber Steamship; no to Peter Wright & Company. I was only there a few weeks and then to the Barber Line, and then to the Vogeman Line, the Hamburg-American Line, the Johnson Line, the New York and Continental Line, the North West Transport Line, and Uranium Line.

Q. What has your position been with the last three lines you have mentioned? A. At first I was the assistant manager of the New York and Continental Lines and since then I have been manager.

Q. When did you go with the New York and Continental Line? A. January 1st, 1907, I think.

1925 Q. At that time what were the ships of the New York Continental Line? A. They had a great many of them; I couldn't recall them. I have a memorandum.

Q. What was the service in which those steamers engaged in at times? A. I have a memorandum of the steamers, if you want it.

Q. Have you it with you? A. Yes.

Q. Well, you may consult your memorandum? A. They had altogether, if this memorandum is correct, twenty-nine steamers; not twenty-nine steamers, they made twenty-nine voyages, seventeen steamers.

By Mr. Bullowa:

1926 Q. You don't mean, Mr. Thomas, that they owned seventeen? A. No, they operated.

Mr. Dorr: I suggest, Mr. Bullowa, you reserve your cross-examination?

Mr. Bullowa: He said they had; I didn't know whether he meant ownership or not.

The Witness: They owned steamers.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. These steamers, at that time were chartered? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in what service did these seventeen steamers engage? A. They started in the Rotterdam-Hamburg trade, between New York and I think they kept that trade up. Later on we stopped the Hamburg trade and only continued the Rotterdam; just what line it was I don't recall.

Q. Do you recall whether they were engaged in passenger business or freight service at the time which your testimony now relates to? A. I believe they were engaged principally in the freight business. I believe the last few steamers did carry passengers.

Q. Were they the same steamers that had been engaged exclusively in the freight business? A. No.

Q. That is towards the end of its existence, they obtained steamers which were adapted to passenger business as well as freight business? A. Yes.

Q. Was there an interim as far as you can recollect, between the exclusively freight business and the freight and the passenger business? A. Was there what?

Q. Was there a period in there during which the line didn't run any steamers at all? A. Yes.

Q. That was prior to the establishment of the passenger business? A. I think so.

Q. While this line was engaged in the freight business exclusively, do you recall whether or not there was a line of steamers known as the New Hamburg Line? A. I do.

Q. What was the New Hamburg Line? A. I don't think anybody ever knew here in New York.

Q. Tell us about the New Hamburg Line, what you were able to discover about it, Mr. Thomas? A. As I say I don't know anything about the New Hamburg Line, except that it was a very strong competitor I believe of the New York and Continental Line.

Q. Did it come into being immediately or shortly after the New York and Continental steamers were put on? A. Not very long after the New York and Continental Line started.

Q. How long did it last after the New York and Continental freight steamers went out of business? A. It didn't last at all; I don't think they had a sailing; their sailings were discontinued immediately.

Q. Do you recollect who the agents for the New Hamburg Line were? A. Phelps Brothers.

Q. Were Phelps Brothers agents for certain Conference Lines? A. I think so.

1931 Q. Now tell us about your competition with the New Hamburg Line? A. Well, whatever we were in the market for freight, they regularly underbid us.

Mr. Spooner: This is objected to.

Mr. Beers: This proceeding has nothing to do with freight carrying.

Mr. Spooner: I move to strike out the answer.

Mr. Burlingham: We don't know who "they" is.

Mr. Dorr: "They" I take it to be the New Hamburg Line. Of course, as yet I have not connected the New Hamburg Line with the defendant. If I fail to do so, of course, the evi-1932 dence is immaterial.

Mr. Beers: Do you claim the New Hamburg Line was in the passenger carrying business?

Mr. Dorr: I don't know one way or the other about that.

Mr. Beers: Why encumber the record with matters that cannot be material in this proceeding?

Mr. Dorr: It seems to me that the entire efforts of the Conference Lines to put other lines out of business, whether those lines were freight or passenger, is relevant on the question of the intent of the parties to the agreement, which is the basis of the bill.

Mr. Spooner: We object to it as not within the issues.

Mr. Dorr: Here is a line which starts in as a freight line, and we will try to show that efforts were immediately made to put it out of that business; then it was transferred to the passenger business and the same tactics were pursued in the same way.

Mr. Spooner: Nobody here can decide the question; I merely say that it is not within the issues. 1934

Q. Proceed, Mr. Thomas, and finish the answer that you were giving? A. Well, whenever we were in the market for freight, it was a regular thing for this line to underbid us and bring the rates down so low that it would make it almost an impossible proposition to operate steamers against them, and it was generally understood—

Mr. Spooner: Tell what you know.

The Witness: I don't know anything about the line; nobody else knew anything about it.

Mr. Spooner: Then I would not tell anything. 1935

The Witness: That is what I started out with.

Q. Did you endeavor to ascertain? A. I did.

Q. What was the best information you could get? A. My information was that the line was operated by the Hamburg-American Line.

Mr. Spooner: I move to strike out the answer as hearsay—the witness has said he didn't know anything about it.

Q. Do you know what became of the contracts for freight which the New Hamburg Line had, when the New Hamburg Line retired from business? A. I know by what I was told.

Mr. Bullowa: By whom?

Q. What was the source of your knowledge? A. The freight brokers.

Q. Do you recall the particular names of the freight brokers who told you that? A. I couldn't swear to that.

Q. Well, what was the information that you got from the freight brokers that you cannot recall the particular names of?

1937

Mr. Spooner: I object to it as hearsay and he cannot designate or indicate the source of his information. On the further ground that it is incompetent, not being within the issues made by the pleadings.

Q. These freight brokers of whom you speak, were the freight brokers dealing in freight in Trans-Atlantic Lines at that time? A. They were.

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question as leading.

Q. Do you recall whether or not they at times acted for the Hamburg-American Line? A. They did.

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading.

Q. Now, what did you learn? A. Well, as I have stated, I might have been told by half a dozen brokers, or more or less; really I cannot recall which of the various brokers; there are a great many of them may have told me that, but I do not know; from what they told me all of these contracts were transferred over to the Hamburg-American Line, at the same rates which were probably fifty per cent or seventy-five per cent or a long way from the Hamburg-American Line, without any additional rate being charged. I know one contract that was transferred, the Standard Oil contract.

Mr. Spooner: Does not even show a combination of a single line that competes with another line.

Mr. Dorr: We have not begun.

Mr. Spooner: Then you have not laid the foundation for this testimony in this case.

Q. Did the New York and Continental Line resume business, Mr. Thomas? 1940

Mr. Spooner: I move to strike out this evidence, on the ground that it is hearsay, that the witness has been asked leading questions; that it is outside of the issues made by the pleadings and is incompetent and irrelevant.

Q. Now as to my last question, Mr. Thomas, did the New York and Continental resume business? A. They did; they stopped a while; how do you mean, did they resume business?

Q. As I understand it, it was originally merely a freight line? A. Yes.

Q. And that when it found the freight business impossible and suspended it, that is the freight line? 1941

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question as assuming facts of which there is no evidence.

A. Yes.

Q. What were the reasons for the discontinuance of the freight business, Mr. Thomas? A. Well, that would only be assumption. They lost a great deal of money. I can only assume; they never gave me the reasons.

Q. Thereafter did they institute a freight and passenger business? A. They did.

Q. What ships were engaged in that business? A. Freight and passenger?

Q. Freight and passenger, you may refresh your recollection from your memorandum? A. I am looking at my memorandum now. The Volturno, the Avoca, the Jelunga; I am not certain.

Q. Do you recall what the tonnage of the Volturno was? A. Gross is 3,581.

Q. Is it a twin screw ship or a single? A. Twin.

1943 Q. Do you recall what its accommodations were for steerage passengers? A. One thousand fifty-four.

Q. Has it accommodations for second cabin and first cabin passengers? A. It has some accommodation for second and some for first.

Q. Now the Avoca was the name of that steamer subsequently changed? A. Yes, I think she was the Uranium, or the Uranium was the Avoca.

Q. What was the tonnage of the Uranium, or what is the tonnage of the Uranium? A. Five thousand one hundred and eighty-three gross.

Mr. Burlingham: Give the net at the same time.

The Witness: Three thousand three hundred and 1944 nineteen.

Q. What is the gross tonnage of the Volturno? A. Three thousand five hundred and eighty-one.

Mr. Bullowa: What is the net?

The Witness: Two thousand two hundred and eight.

Q. How many screws did the Uranium have? A. One.

Q. Single screw? A. Yes.

Q. What is the steerage capacity? A. Of the Uranium, 1167.

Q. Did it have accommodations for second cabin?

1945

A. Yes.

Q. And first cabin? A. Yes.

Q. What is the time of the trip between Rotterdam and New York, on the Volturno? A. Via Halifax as they are coming now?

Q. Yes. A. Well, from twelve to fourteen days, in ordinary weather.

Q. What is it direct? A. It would be about a day or a day and a half less.

Q. What is the time of the Uranium? A. The Uranium is a day better.

Q. What was the third steamer which you sent to New York and the Continental Line ran in the passenger business? A. Jelunga. 1946

Q. What is the tonnage of that steamer? A. Well, that is the same as the Uranium.

Q. Sister ship, was she? A. Sister ship.

Q. Is that boat now in the service of the Uranium Line? A. No, sir.

Q. What became of that boat, do you know? A. I don't know.

Q. Now, how long did the New York and Continental mantain the freight and passenger service? A. They ran, I think, seven trips.

Q. For all three boats? A. No, altogether.

Q. During the time that the New York and Continental Line was running these steamers in the passenger business, do you recall whether or not there were steamers of the Conference Lines which sailed on the same sailing date, at a rate reduced from the regular rate of those steamers of the Conference Lines? A. I don't recollect when that opposition started. 1947

Q. Did you have charge of the passenger business at that time? A. No, sir; I had really nothing to do with it.

1948 Q. Your duties were confined entirely to the freight? A. To freight and management of the ships.

Q. What was the date when the New York and Continental suspended this passenger and freight service? A. I think the last steamer sailed on August 22nd, 1908.

Q. Thereafter did you enter the employ of the Northwest Transport Company? A. I did.

Q. When was that? A. They started operating steamers February 27th, 1909.

1949 Q. And what steamers did the Northwest Transport Company operate? A. The Volturno, Raglan Castle, Uranium, Napolitan Prince, Sicilian Prince and Campania.

Q. Was the name of the Campania subsequently changed? A. Yes, changed to the Campanello.

Q. What is the tonnage of the Raglan Castle? A. I don't remember.

Q. That is not in the service of the Uranium Line? A. No.

Q. Do you recall its steerage capacity? A. I do not; I think it was about 800.

Q. Now the Napolitan Prince? A. Did you say Raglan Castle?

1950 Q. Yes. A. I don't think she carried passengers, did she? Yes, she did too. I may be mistaken about her capacity, I was thinking of the "Princes."

Q. You don't recall the capacity of the Raglan Castle? A. No.

Q. Now the Napolitan Prince, what was her tonnage and steerage capacity? A. I don't recall it.

Q. Approximately? A. Not near enough.

Q. About the Sicilian Prince? A. Same answer; I don't recall it.

Q. Are the last two boats now in the service of the Uranium? A. The "Prince" boats?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. How long did the Northwest Transport Line continue in business? A. February 27th, 1909, to May 7th, 1910.

Q. And what occurred then? A. Then the line discontinued altogether.

Q. And whose employ did you enter then? A. The Uranium Steamship Company.

Q. Immediately thereafter? A. Yes.

Q. What ships did the Uranium Steamship Company have? A. The Volturno, Campania and Uranium.

Q. Has it added any ships? A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Thomas, is it part of your duty as general manager of the line in the United States, to ascertatin the expense at which your ships are carrying steerage passengers? A. No, sir.

Q. Does your line keep records as to the expense of transporting the steerage passengers? A. We know what it costs to carry them.

Q. What records do you keep which show the cost of carrying? A. We don't keep any records.

Q. Do you keep records which show the expenditures, which have been made on the different voyages, on the different ships? A. That is all done in London.

Q. Certain of those expenditures are made in New York, are they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that information is transmitted from New York to London? A. All of the vouchers are sent to London, including the expenses at New York.

Q. Now, Mr. Thomas, what from your experience have you found to be the cost of carrying steerage passengers on the ships of your line, where there were, we will say, 500 passengers on a sailing, per capita? A. I should say about £2, less than £2 10.

Q. That would be about $12? A. Around about $12.

Q. Now, what element does that cost of $12 include? A. Includes everything; it is put up to the ship for carrying those passengers.

Q. Now, from your experience can you say whether or not cost per capita of the carrying of a steerage passenger decreases with the number carried? A. It does slightly.

Q. Assume that there were 1,000 passengers to a sailing, what from your experience have you found to be the cost? A. About £2 6; that would be about the average for a good round lot of passengers, from 1955 500 up.

Q. Between what points is that carried, Mr. Thomas, between New York and Rotterdam? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that eastbound carriage? A. Both ways.

Q. Do you find that there is a material difference in the cost between the two, east and westbound? A. Of course, is it cheaper to carry passengers westbound than it is eastbound? No, I shouldn't say it is. The provisions over there are almost as high as they are here; in the meat bill and the flour bill there is really no difference; the only thing to consider some of the provisions are cheaper over there, but them we generally provision for the round voyage, with the ex-1956 ception of perishable goods.

Q. Mr. Thomas, what has been your experience with the transportation of passengers booked by your line from Rotterdam to New York, where they were traveling from Russia to Rotterdam, to embark to the control stations, German and Austrian frontier? A. Similar to the testimony that I have heard Mr. Fourman give here.

Q. State in detail, Mr. Thomas, what your experience has been in regard to interference with your passengers by the control stations?

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question as assuming facts not proven, as characterizing what takes place at the control stations and as hearsay.

A. Mr. Fourman is passenger agent of the line, but in my connection with the line of course, I have seen a number of tickets come in and returned. Mr. Fourman has shown me a number of the letters, stating reasons why these tickets were returned.

Q. Has it been an important matter to the line? A. It has been a very important matter to the line.

Q. As such I suppose it has received your attention as general manager? A. It would; it would come to my notice, but not my attention, Mr. Fourman dealt with that.

Q. Now, have you taken it up with your home office? A. Mr. Fourman has right along.

Q. Do you know whether or not your line has made efforts to procure the cessation of this interference? A. Always have heard so.

Q. Have you succeeded? A. I don't think so.

Q. Do you know Captain Tinsley? A. I do.

Q. Has he ever been in the employ of your line? A. Has he?

Q. Yes. A. He is now.

1959

Q. Do you recall any difficulty that Captain Tinsley had while he was in your employ?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as immaterial and irrelevant and as vague and indefinite.

Mr. Spooner: Hearsay. Captain Tinsley would be the best witness on that subject.

Mr. Dorr: The witness may know something about it.

Mr. Spooner: It is leading and assuming Captain Tinsley had trouble; a general objection.

1960

Mr. Dorr: I distinctly refrained from leading; I haven't asked him what the difficulties were.

Mr. Bullowa: I know, but you suggested that he did have some difficulties.

Q. Directing your attention to the question of whether or not Captain Tinsley ever did have any difficulty, do you know? A. I know he did.

Mr. Burlingham: Difficulties with what, marital difficulties?

The Witness: Difficulties with the Dutch Govern-

1961 ment.

Q. Will you state what you know about that matter, Mr. Thomas?

Mr. Bullowa: What the Dutch Government did, is that the question, Mr. Dorr?

Q. Did you understand the question, Mr. Thomas? A. Why the trouble—

Q. Tell us what you as manager of the line here had to do with this matter?

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Have you personal knowledge? A. I have.

Q. With the Dutch Government? A. So far as 1962 cables and letters go, that is all I have.

Q. Did you participate in it yourself, or is it hearsay? A. I participated in it in this way. Mr. Tinsley had to leave the country and I had to communicate in other parts with him, because he was not allowed to stay in Rotterdam.

Q. By whom was he prevented? A. By the Dutch Government.

Mr. Bullowa: Do I understand Mr. Dorr, you mean to connect these defendants with the Dutch Government, because if that is so, cannot I call your attention to the American Banana case?

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Now, Mr. Thomas, what did you do in this regard? A. I had really very little to do with it; it affected us very little here. Mr. Tinsley went to Antwerp.

Q. Is Mr. Tinsley still in your service? A. Yes.

Q. When will he be in port? A. He is marine superintendent and manager in Rotterdam.

Q. And does not come to this port? A. No, sir. 1964

Q. Was this matter, this difficulty which Captain Tinsley had in connection with the transportation of steerage passengers on your line?

Mr. Burlingham: I object to it as leading and upon the further ground it has been shown the witness has no knowledge on the subject.

A. It was.

Q. And what was the incident in regard to the transportation of these steerage passengers on your line?

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to as incompetent, the witness having already testified that he had no personal knowledge of it, as hearsay and irrelevant. 1965

A. The incident was that our passengers were not allowed to land in Rotterdam and had to land some place. Could not keep them on the ship and they were put on the ship and told they could not land and Mr. Tinsley was rather arbitrary, from the standpoint of the Dutch Government and he landed these passengers without the authority of the Dutch Government and they possibly and justly extradited him, keeping him away for all time. He was a very popular man in Rotterdam and this was an order of the Queen, the Queen signed the order, herself, so I was told.

Mr. Dorr: I will consent that that be stricken out.

Mr. Spooner: Just as competent as the rest of it.

Mr. Burlingham: You mean expelled, not extradited?

Q. Mr. Thomas, what was the difficulty as to the landing of these passengers; that is the only part of it which I regard as competent?

1967

Mr. Spooner: I object to it as immaterial and incompetent.

A. Well I couldn't give all the facts in the case.

Mr. Spooner: You can't give any of them, can you, except hearsay?

Mr. Dorr: Well, I will consent, if you gentlemen desire, to have all this matter stricken out.

Mr. Burlingham: Everything about Tinsley?

Mr. Dorr: Yes.

Mr. Spooner: We don't object to its remaining in.

1968

Mr. Dorr: Then I will pursue it. Do you desire to have it stand?

Mr. Spooner: I would rather it be in as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Dorr: Well, then I will pursue it a little further.

Mr. Bullowa: I move to strike it out.

Mr. Dorr: I consent that it be stricken out.

Mr. Spooner: I object to its being stricken out.

1969

Mr. Dorr: I will consent that it be stricken out.

Mr. Burlingham: I object to striking it out.

Mr. Dorr: I think we may as well have the whole story.

Mr. Bullowa: It is consented that it be stricken out.

Mr. Dorr: I have consented that it be stricken out as to you, but as to Senator Spooner I will get the whole story.

Q. What were the circumstances about this, Mr. Thomas, as you ascertained them from investigation as general manager of the Uranium Line, Northwest Transport Line in this country. 1970

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to.

Mr. Bullowa: Same objection, and I move to strike out the answer.

A. I am only the general manager of the line in this country.

Q. And you ascertained them as general manager in this country? A. I am not general manager of the line, only being the manager in America, it would not come under my province to make a thorough investigation of a thing like that. What would come to me would come to me simply from my own knowledge. I received a number of cables on it and so forth. 1971

Q. You had correspondence with your office on the other side over this matter? A. I think so.

Q. And what was the difficulty as to the landing?

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Does the correspondence show what the difficulty was? A. I don't think so.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. What was the difficulty?

1972

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

A. The difficulty was the landing passengers against the orders of the Government as I understood it.

Q. What was the occasion of the holding up the passengers and preventing them from landing.

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as vague, indefinite, and on the grounds of the objection to the former question.

A. I would have to refresh my memory on that to give an intelligent answer.

1973

Q. If you will do that, then, Mr. Thomas, I will not pursue that matter further. What was the destination of the passengers on this steamer, if you recall, Mr. Thomas? A. It must have been various points; I presume in Russia.

Q. Do you recall whether or not these passengers were in the first instance landed in Holland and that they were subsequently returned to Rotterdam from the frontier?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as leading.

A. They were.

Q. Was it before that or after that that this incident as to their landing occurred? A. You mean the second landing from the steamer?

1974

Q. Yes? A. It was after that.

Q. The landing to which the Holland Government objected? A. It was after that.

Q. Do you recall what was done by your line in regard to the transportation of these passengers to their ultimate destination? A. They were finally transported.

Q. Through Germany? A. I don't know whether they went through or went around.

Q. Do you recall what reason was given for the refusal to allow these passengers to proceed at the German frontier?

1975

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to as incompetent, no foundation having been laid for the question, and on the ground that the witness has no knowledge on the subject.

Q. Now, do you recall that shortly thereafter, immediately after this incident that you were about to transport certain steerage passengers whose destination was Russia and that you made certain arrangements for their transportation?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as leading.

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to as assuming what the witness has not testified to and also upon the ground that it is leading. 1976

Q. Now, what did you do? A. We made arrangements in Rotterdam to run special trains and we also made arrangements to try to see that all Russian passengers had passports.

Q. Well, now, do you recall whether or not you had any Russians booked for the following sailing of a ship of your line? A. No, sir.

Mr. Bullowa: Do you mean you don't recall?

The Witness: I mean I don't even know what the following sailing was.

Mr Burlingham: Why not take an adjournment and put Mr. Fourman on the stand again. 1977

Q. Do you recall whether or not at or about that time you made an arrangement for forwarding certain Russian passengers by a ship of the Holland-Amerika Line?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading and immaterial.

A. Yes, sir; we did.

Q. What were the circumstances of that, Mr. Thomas? A. I recall that the passengers were booked.

1978 Edward O. Thomas

We refused to put them on the ship because they had no passports and we knew they could only go by the Holland-Amerika Line.

Q. And you did not transport them because they had no passports? A. As I recall it.

Q. What did you do with them in order that they might get to their destination? A. Booked them on the Holland-Amerika Line.

Q. Did they have any difficulty going over the Holland-Amerika Line? A. No, sir.

Mr. Spooner: You ought to make the Dutch 1979 Government a party.

Q. The difficulty was not the Dutch Government, was it, Mr. Thomas; the Dutch Government had nothing to do with the passport business? A. No, sir.

Q. The difficulty was with the German frontier, was it not, as in the case of the westbound? A. We run up against the same thing as they did in the westbound.

Recess until 2 P. M.

1980 Afternoon session.

EDWARD O. THOMAS, recalled:

Mr. Dorr: Your witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Burlingham:

Q. You spoke, Mr. Thomas, of the cost per capita and you seemed to be in some doubt whether it was cheaper bringing the passengers eastward or bringing the passengers westward; is your mind clear on that now? A. Well I should imagine there is a slightly less cost in bringing them westward, because I know a good many of the provisions are much cheaper over there than they are here.

1981

Q. Is this statement of yours as to the per capita cost based on a careful investigation by yourself personally? A. Based on figures that I have.

Q. Have you done it for the District Attorney, or for your own business? A. I am doing that ever since I have been in the passenger business.

Q. Taking all of the items of cost, you think that per capita, carrying 500 steerage passengers, the cost is only two pounds, ten? A. It might be slightly more.

1982

Q. Then you must make a very handsome profit, carrying passengers at $20 and $22? A. I mean that is the overhead expenses. I don't mean that that cost —for instance those are the expenses that you would show in the disbursements of the steamer.

Q. That is what you mean by overhead expenses? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Define that? A. For instance the cost of the feeding of the passengers, the cost of the stewards' pay and the feeding of the stewards, the cost of insurance, the cost of painting and the upkeep of the stewards' department and passengers' department, and any repairs necessary in the passenger department.

Q. How about your crew and the navigation of the ship; do you leave that out or charge that to freight? A. We charge that to the steamer, but we have now a passenger department, a freight department and a steamship department.

Q. And you assign—? A. (Interrupting.) We assign to the passenger department everything relating to the passengers, such as stewards, etc., and the other crew is assigned to the steamship department.

Q. Then to test the soundness of your conclusion, it would be necessary to have a very considerable body of data would it not? A. It would.

Q. For instance you estimate the cost of feeding a steerage passenger at so much, I suppose? A. Yes.

1984

Q. You get at that by a careful consideration of all the bills for the year? A. All the bills for a voyage or voyages.

Q. Did you ever carry a thousand passengers? A. Yes.

Q. Very rarely? A. Frequently carried a great deal more.

Q. It does not so appear in these records, does it? For instance 1910, Petitioner's Exhibit 158 for identification.

Mr. Dorr: You are referring now to the 1985 figures of the Uranium Line, are you not?

Q. Table 59 gives the number of passengers carried eastbound by the Uranium Line in the year 1910, and the range apparently from 75 passengers to 956, and I see none eastbound carried more than a thousand? A. Does this give the westbound passengers?

Q. West are on the other column there (indicating)? A. When I see these figures, I know we have had a number of ships this year where we have had more than 2000 passengers.

Q. You made your calculations, your investigations with regard to those? A. The cost of carrying them?

Q. Yes? A. The cost of carrying them I based on 1986 actual data, actual figures.

Q. Have you those with you? A. No, sir.

Q. As I understood you you charged such expenses of the ship to the ship itself, certain to the passenger department, and certain others to what? A. Freight department.

Q. To get your best results, you want to carry both freight and passengers? A. On such ships as ours we have to do it.

Q. Well, I renew the question I asked you originally, you must have made a very handsome profit, charging $22 or $20, if it only cost you two pounds six per passenger, isn't that so? A. Passengers can be carried on certain classes of ships from $20 up and make money. 1987

Q. Everything depends on the kind of ship it is? A. You could not carry them on the Lusitania.

Q. This matter of expenses based of course upon the character of food you give, character of service, number of days, speed of the vessel? A. Everything is taken into consideration.

Q. These are British ships aren't they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Subject to British regulations, Board of Trade? A. Yes, sir. 1988

Q. Not subject to American regulation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Except so far as you comply with the Board of Trade regulations, that gives you a standing with the American inspectors? A. It does as a general rule.

Q. That is the way you comply with our laws in common isn't it, by producing a Board of Trade certificate? A. Yes, but that isn't all; they regularly inspect and measure the ships and tell you how many you can carry too if there is a change made at any time.

Q. When did the Uranium Steamship Company pay its last dividend? A. I don't think that they ever did. 1989

Q. How long has that company been in existence? A. Since May 21st, 1910, it says here.

Q. What is its capital stock? A. I don't know.

Q. Is it a British corporation? A. It is.

Q. Are you an officer of it? A. No, sir.

Q. Are there any officers in this country? A. I don't think so.

Q. What is the age of these three ships that the Uranium has? A. The Volturno, I think, was built in 1906 and the Uranium was built, I think, in 1891.

Q. 1891? A. I think so; the Campanello was built in 1902 I think.

Q. Then they were not built for you, any of them? A. No.

Q. What was the Volturno built for? A. The Volturno was built originally—I don't know.

Q. What is your information? A. I have heard that she was in the Italian trade at one time, running to Brazil.

Q. Well, it must have been prior to 1906. Are you quite sure of the date of her launching? A. I am not certain.

Q. How about the Uranium, who was she built for? A. She was originally built for the British-1991 East India Company running between India and London.

Q. Now the P. & O.? A. British-East India, that is my impression.

Q. Give her history? A. She was originally built to run in that trade, to carry a very high class of passengers. At the time she was built, she was supposed to be one of the finest ships of the day and I have often heard the captain tell passengers how she came to London, how often the builder came down to see her sail; she was supposed then to be such a fine ship.

Q. She was transferred to what lines? A. She was taken out of that trade a great many years ago and 1992 I don't know what trade she is running in.

Q. Where did you come to get her or the purchaser of your company? A. Got her from the Fairfield people, I believe.

Q. Who are they? A. An English Company, shipowners and builders.

Q. Well, was there a line of steamers known as the Fairfield Line? A. You never heard of the Fairfield people?

Q. Not as a line, is there one? A. They are very large builders; I don't think they run a line.

Q. Do you think the Northwest Transport bought her from them? A. No, sir; the Uranium Line bought her, is my impression. 1993

Q. When? A. I don't know; I imagine about the time or before the Uranium Line started operating.

Q. Have you any memorandum to refresh your recollection? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, the Jelunga, you have her how long? A. I don't know how she was running. I can tell you the number of voyages she made. She made three trips I believe.

Q. And then was she sold? A. She was not owned by the— 1994

Q. She was a chartered boat? A. She was a chartered boat.

Q. Now, the Campanello was originally the Campania, you say? A. Yes, sir.

Q. She was built you say in 1902? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of what line was she originally? A. She ran for a long time in the Phoenix Line.

Q. Where did that run to? A. Antwerp.

Mr. Bullowa: Not as a passenger boat.

Q. Freight boat? A. Freight boat.

Q. Then you acquired her when? A. I don't know when we bought her. I imagine about the time the 1995
Uranium Line was formed. I don't know whether they bought her when she was running for the Northwest Transport Line or not.

Q. And you were the general manager in America of the Northwest Transport Line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never had more than three boats in that line? A. The Uranium?

Q. Yes? A. No.

Q. In the Northwest Transport Line you had five? A. Six, including two principals.

Q. You have not built any other boats, have you? A. No.

1996

Q. None contemplated? A. I don't know.

Q. You have no responsibility for these circulars that were sent out, declaring that new boats were being constructed, did you? A. No, sir.

Q. You have testified to a great many things this morning with regard to the passenger service, but isn't Mr. Fourman the passenger agent of this country? A. Yes, sir.

Q. General passenger agent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not interfere with him do you, except in crises? A. I am the manager of the line.

1997

Q. Do you have anything to do with getting out the circulars? A. Very little.

Q. Do you have anything to do with dealing with disgruntled passengers? A. Sometimes.

Mr. Dorr: I object to that.

Q. You listen to complaints by passengers? A. Sometimes, Mr. Fourman might consult with me, take it up with me.

Q. Have you ever visited control stations? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been on the frontiers of Germany and Russia? A. No, sir.

Q. You have been in Europe? A. Yes, sir.

1998

Q. You have never investigated this yourself, have you? A. No, sir.

Q. You have a home office in London, have you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it an active real thing, do they control the business or do you? A. I can't say, I am sure I don't—

Q. (Interrupting.) My question was whether the tail wagged the dog or otherwise?

Mr. Spooner: What do you mean by otherwise?

1999

Q. I mean what I say? A. You asked me if I control the business or the London controlled it?

Q. Yes? A. I certainly do not.

Q. Your relation is that of agent in the United States for them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you take orders from them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You fix rates or do they? A. I do.

Q. Without consultation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And send out these circulars, reducing rates from time to time? A. Are you referring strictly to passenger rates?

Q. Yes? A. They never interfere with us.

2000

Q. You can do what you please? A. Practically; they leave the management of the business in this country entirely in our hands.

Q. And you raise or lower the rates, according to the competition you have to meet, is that it? A. I think so.

Q. You want to get as much as you can and give away as little as possible, is that it? A. We want our fair share of the business.

Q. You have been doing pretty well, haven't you? A. We have.

Q. Increasing all the time? A. I think the records show that we have.

2001

Q. Notwithstanding the existence of the Conference agreement, known as the District Attorney's AA? A. Well, of course they have taken away a very large portion of our profits.

Q. And you retaliate by taking away as much of theirs as possible? A. We retaliate by trying to get as much of the business as we can, in a good legitimate way.

Q. It is perfectly legitimate, is it? A. With the way we do it, it is.

2002

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Did you ever try to become a member of the Conference? A. No, sir.

Q. Never made application? A. No, sir.

Q. Did the Northwest Transport Line? A. No, sir.

Q. Who were the parties interested in the New York and Continental Line? A. Who the parties are?

Q. Yes? A. I don't know.

Q. Well, who did you get your orders from? A.

2003 From London.

Q. From whom in London? A. The Northwest Transport Line and the Uranium Line.

Q. Who were the parties that you dealt with? A. I don't know.

Q. Your letters came unsigned? A. Came signed by Northwest Transport Company.

Q. No initials? A. They were signed by different men there.

Q. As I understand the Northwest Transport and the New York and Continental Lines were simply some company in London. Now, did you ever go abroad and see the management abroad? A. Yes, 2004 sir.

Q. Whom did you see? A. I saw a man named Harding.

Q. Is he the manager there? A. I understand so.

Q. And the New York & Continental Line, is that a British corporation or a New York corporation? A. Why, the New York & Continental Line was a New Jersey corporation.

Q. Who were the officers? A. Why, a man named Peterson was president.

Q. What is his full name? A. William.

Q. Was he an American or Englishman? A. Why, he was a Dane I believe, a naturalized Englishman.

2005

Q. Was he the only officer of the company? A No, there was a secretary and treasurer.

Q. Who was he? A. The secretary and treasurer of the first one was a man named Huntington.

Q. His other name? A. I don't know what his other name was.

Q. What was the capitalization of the New York & Continental? A. I don't remember.

Q. Did they own any steamers? A. I don't think so.

Q. Chartered steamers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did McKenzie & Mann have anything to do with the New York & Continental Line? A. I don't know. 2006

Q. Did you ever hear of those people? A. Very often.

Q. In what connection? A. I have heard of them in many connections.

Q. Well any connection with the New York & Continental Line? A. I have never had any dealings with them, never even seen them, except I saw Mr. McKenzie once I think at lunch.

Q. At a meeting? A. No, I say I met him once at lunch.

Q. What was the Northwest Transport Line, was that a New Jersey corporation or an English corporation? A. I think an English corporation. 2007

Q. Who were the officers of that corporation? A. Peterson I think was president of it; I am not certain.

Q. You are not certain? A. No.

Q. Who were the other officers? A. I don't know any of the other officers.

Q. Peterson's home address was London? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know the capitalization of the Northwest Transport Company? A. No, sir.

2008

Q. Do you know whether they owned any steamers or not? A. I don't know whether they did own any; I imagine they did not.

Q. Now, the Uranium Line, is that an English corporation? A. Yes.

Q. Who are the officers? A. I only know the manager.

Q. Is Mr. Peterson connected with it? A. No, sir.

Q. What is its capitalization? A. I don't know.

Q. They only man you know—? A. I say I don't know. For instance I had all that data, naturally being the New York manager, I must certainly have 2009 filed it with the secretary of state. It has been through my hands but I don't recall it now. All that information is filed with the Secretary of State.

Q. Now these freight brokers that you spoke about, that gave you this information about the Hamburg Line taking over certain contracts, they were freight brokers for you too, they acted for everybody? A. For everybody.

Q. There was no conference among the freight brokers was there? A. Not so far as I know. There is a freight brokers' association; I don't know what it amounts to.

Q. There is a freight brokers' association? A. I

2010 think so.

Q. You deal with those brokers that are members of the association? A. I don't know what the association is. I have often heard the term but I don't know anything about it.

Q. Now, during the early part of 1908, you had competition with the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company too, did you not? A. Not direct, freight or freight and passengers?

Q. Freight and passengers? A. Well I never yet felt that competition to amount to anything. They practically were not allowed to take freight to Rotterdam. I think they have a working agreement; I know they have. 2011

Q. I didn't ask you what was the state of affairs? A. You say competition?

Q. In 1908? A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you know whether the Uranium has a double bottom or not? A. I don't know.

Q. Yet you are the manager of the line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Haven't you heard that she was rejected by the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, because they considered her unfit for their passenger service? A. No, sir. 2012

Q. You have not heard that? A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know whether that is true or not? A. No, sir. I could not imagine, because she has the finest hull of any ship on the Atlantic today, the North Atlantic trade.

Q. But yet you don't know whether she has a single or a double bottom, and you make that statement? A. I think she has a single bottom.

Q. And yet you make that statement without knowledge of the fact? A. Yes, sir; double bottom ships you know go to the bottom very often.

Q. What is the name of the manager for the Uranium steamship line in England? A. Harding. 2013

Q. What is his first name? A. H. W., Henry I think, I am not certain.

Q. Did he have anything to do with the Northwest Transport Line? A. I don't know; I don't know whether he took the management of the Northwest Transport Line or not, I don't think he did; I am not certain on that point.

Q. Did he have anything to do with the New York and Continental? A. No.

Q. But the first line that really owned any steamers was the Uranium Line? A. That I have been connected with of the three lines.

2014 Edward O. Thomas

Q. You don't know where they acquired those steamers? A. I think I stated where they acquired them.

Q. Now, isn't it a fact that while the Northwest Transport Line was being operated, that these agents, the passenger agents refused to turn over to the Northwest Transport Line the moneys received for prepaid tickets, until the passengers had actually made the trip? A. I don't know that any definite request was ever made to them. I know they did not want to do it.

Q. They did not want to do it? A. Yes.

2015 Q. And they did not do it as a matter of fact? A. They did not.

Q. Do you know why they took that position? A. Certainly.

Q. What was the reason? A. Because the passenger agent was responsible for those passengers as I understand it.

Q. They were rather nervous about turning them over? A. No, sir; not at all; never understood it that way.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Beers:

Q. There was a certain connection was there not, 2016 Mr. Thomas, between the New York & Continental Company, Northwest Transport Line and the Uranium? A. I never knew what that connection was.

Q. You never knew? A. No, sir; if there was any connection I don't know anything about it.

Q. Did you think there was any connection? A. I don't know what I thought.

Q. Had you any information on the subject? A. I don't know whether I had any information.

Q. You don't know whether you had any information? A. No, sir.

Q. You were employed ostensibly by those companies were you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was a certain sequence between the companies? A. One followed the other.

Q. There didn't any two co-exist at the same time? A. Yes, sir; there did; they exist today.

Q. Well, as running the same ships? A. No, sir; the New York & Continental Line is still in existence and so is the Northwest Transport Line. They may not be operating steamers.

Q. Do you know any reason for the transfer of these companies to another? A. I have my own private idea.

Q. Would you favor us with that? A. Well, I imagine that the people who backed the first line, found it a losing proposition. In order to get extra money to operate steamers, they probably changed the name to Northwest Transport Line. The New York & Continental Line had lost a great deal of money and found it better to start over with a clean slate.

Q. Is the same true about starting the Uranium Line? A. No; the Uranium Line started; the Northwest Transport Line failed to make a go of it. The man who was operating, the president of the Northwest Transport Line chartered the steamers from the owners. They put up money to operate, finally got tired of losing money, took the ships over and kept them going in the same trade themselves, that is all. I have never been informed of that officially.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION by Mr. Dorr:

Q. I suppose the longer time it takes a boat to cross, the greater are its lists of the expenses of transportation of the steerage passengers, for instance, foods; that is the same steamer, for instance, the Campanello would take ten days, the cost of the expense per capita would be less than if she took fourteen days? A. Yes.

2020

Q. And so would the other expenses which you have outlined? A. All other expenses increase proportionately.

Q. So that a faster boat has a certain advantage in the cost per capita of the steerage business? A. Not necessarily.

Q. As to those items? A. Well a good passenger is always cheaper, but a faster ship is not always cheaper, may not be.

Q. The steamer expense would be greater for a very fast steamer? A. As I say a very fast steamer, for instance a steamer like the Lusitania could not carry 2021 passengers for the same amount of money that a very small steamer could carry them.

Q. That is the coal bill is too high? A. The coal bill is too high, and there are very few ships like the Lusitania only two or three.

Q. And the ships which are in competition with you are—the Lusitania and the Mauretania never have been put on to fight you? A. We could not compete against such ships as that at all; wouldn't attempt to.

Q. The steamers competing with you are ordinarily ten or twelve day steamers? A. Nearly every steamer carry passengers as competing, except express steamers.

2022 Q. That run about ten days? A. Eight days up.

Q. Now Mr. Burlingham asked you about the profits of your line. Your line has not as a rule has it been able to obtain even 500 passengers, though your capacity is much larger? A. From this side, of course, our passengers have been limited.

Q. Take for instance westbound traffic in 1909? A. I don't know how nearly those figures are correct. I know how often the conference has tried to get hold of our figures and have even seen them incorrectly published. They may possibly have gotten it correctly. What are those figures, are those Government figures?

Q. No, those are Mr. Sandford's figures?

2023

Mr. Burlingham: Mr. Fourman said they were substantially correct.

Mr. Dorr: He assumed they were.

The Witness: I have seen those figures published in the conference lines in a circular, that was way off; generally they are correct.

Mr. Burlingham: Mr. Dorr, I notice that in one, I think it is 1908, there is a notation in regard to this line, saying that the figures are not official.

Mr. Dorr: Eastbound is not official.

The Witness: They always used to call us up for those figures and I always gave them to them.

Q. Take for instance Northwest Transport Line in 1909, westbound, sailing February 21st, there were only 101 Halifax passengers, 180 New York passengers, the total being considerably under 500? A. You will find though that a number of our westbound voyages where we have carried the greatest number of passengers and the sailings around Christmas where we have carried a large number of eastbound.

Q. I am talking about westbound; ordinarily they have not totaled 500, have they?

Mr. Burlingham: That is in 1909.

2025

A. You are going way back; I should say around about 500.

Q. You were saying that these figures were incorrect? A. I don't know anything about those figures and I don't really know the number of passengers we carried.

Q. With a passenger list of two hundred the cost per capita would it be higher than where you carried 500? A. Higher, yes.

Q. And the chance for profit, with a small passenger list like that would be very small, would they not? A. Very much less.

2026 Q. Now, your boats, however, were capable of carrying over a thousand passengers were they not? A. I should think so; I gave the figures.

Q. And when on the occasions, a few occasions when your ships have not been opposed by fighting steamers, have you been able to secure full passenger lists or a large passenger list? A. I don't know about the full passenger list, but it made a very material difference; I should say almost double.

Q. In 1911 it appears that you carried more passengers; still there were occasions were there not when you were not able to secure five hundred passengers?

2027 A. Many times; I don't think we would average five hundred for any great length of time.

Q. And on the Eastbound, you were— A. East or Westbound?

Q. I was showing you the Westbound? A. Including Rotterdam, Halifax and New York?

Q. Yes? A. I think we averaged more than five hundred Westbound, I don't know; I don't know what the figures were.

Q. Eastbound you have rarely been able to secure five hundred have you? A. No, sir; except around Christmas sailings.

Q. Now, what are the elements again that you have 2028 taken into consideration in arriving at your estimate of the cost of carrying steerage passengers, New York to Rotterdam and Rotterdam to New York? A. All of the items, all of the expenses that the ship is put to in carrying those passengers; in other words suppose that ship carried nothing but cargo, there would be no expense at all for passengers; all the additional expense she is put to in carrying passengers, such as stewards, feeding these passengers and stewards, the upkeep and care of the passenger department, but that does not cover the running expenses of the ship, such as the steamship expenses.

Q. The coal? A. Does not cover the coal, does not cover the crew, except the stewards, does not cover any of the officers, does not cover the insurance; does not cover any port expense, does not cover the depreciation. According to our disbursement account it might show $20 a passenger profit and yet the ship might make a large loss.

Q. Per capita profit? A. The way we have our disbursement account made up.

Q. Now will you state what the amount of the various elements of that cost are? For instance, the feeding of the passengers, what is the cost of that? A. I should say that if you can feed a passenger for twenty-two cents a day, you are liberal, I don't believe it costs anyone over that.

2030

Q. How about the steward's expenses? A. Stewards?

Q. Yes? A. It is all bulked together there.

Q. Have you figures from which you can separate? A. Not on this side, well, yes I have too.

Q. Have you also the figures as to the ship expense? A. To the ship expense?

Q. What you call ship expenses for your boats? A. I have in a great many of the items.

Q. Well, the coal? A. Well, I know about how much coal a steamer requires.

2031

Q. And the wages of captain and crew other than the stewards? A. I have some data on that.

Q. And what other items do you charge to ship expenses? A. Ship expenses?

Q. Yes? A. Charge the crew outside of the steward's department, charge the feeding of the crew and insurance.

Q. Have you figures on insurance and feeding the crew? A. I have some figures, but not very good data.

Q. Are you able to state for instance what the gross ship expenses say of the Volturno is for a voyage?

2032

A. It depends altogether on how much cargo she has and how many passengers.

Q. The charges which you call ship expenses, you don't mean the passenger expense or the freight expense, but those particular items which you attribute to the running of the steamers, irrespective of whether she carried any freight or any passengers? A. I couldn't say offhand.

Q. Have you the figures which would enable you to state with some degree of accuracy? A. I don't think so; the figures that I have don't show any depreciation.

2033 Q. Well, apart from depreciation? A. Some of them don't show insurance, which is a very large item.

Q. Well, you have some which do show insurance, have you not? A. I have on one steamer; I don't know whether I have on the others or not.

Q. What steamer is that? A. I think the Volturno, I am not certain.

Q. Well, are there any other items which you haven't got, or are there any other items which you have not got on the Volturno, other than depreciation? A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know of any others? A. I know about what all the expenses are of running the ship, but I 2034 have none of those vouchers, you know.

Q. Well, you keep a record of the vouchers you said abroad, did you not? A. Yes; but then we don't get the vouchers from the other side here.

Q. Well, on the eastbound trip you purchase the coal? A. We purchase most of it.

Q. How much coal does she burn on an eastbound trip? A. What ship?

Q. The Volturno? A. Depends altogether on the quality of the coal.

Q. Well, the coal which you ordinarily burn on the Volturno? A. She will burn on the average about six hundred tons I should say, or less.

Q. For the trip? A. Six hundred tons would be enough.

Q. What do you pay a ton for the coal?

Mr. Burlingham: When? I have seen it go up? A. What I pay a ton for my coal?

Q. Yes, ordinarily? A. I have got a contract it is very confidential; I don't think any steamship line ought to be called upon—

Q. Well, you need not reveal the person with whom the contract was made? A. Every steamship man knows who I buy my coal from.

Q. I won't ask for the particular price which you pay? A. Ordinarily coal costs from $2.85 to $3.25. The average passenger line will pay, I should say, about $3.15. 2036

Q. Is coal the chief item of the steamer's expense? A. One of the principal items.

Q. What are the other items? A. Insurance is a large item.

Q. What do you pay on insurance on that steamer? A. I don't know what the rates are.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Do you know what she is insured for? A. I do not.

2037

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. You have the figures, have part of the figures, Mr. Thomas? A. What our ships are insured for?

Q. Yes? A. I may have had some of them.

Q. Will you state, not what the Volturno is insured for, but what is your experience in the running of a steamship and perfecting insurance on them, a ship of the size of the Volturno, say? A. In other words, you want me to say what the Volturno is worth?

Q. No; but what do you pay as insurance for a voyage? A. I really don't know; I couldn't say to save my life. Insurance is an item that I have absolutely nothing to do with on this side.

Q. Well, it is not an item that is as important as coal, is it? A. No, sir.

Q. You cannot approximate the amount of insurance? A. No.

By Mr. Burlingham:

Q. On the Volturno for a voyage or a year?

Mr. Dorr: For a voyage.

Mr. Spooner: Guess at it?

2039 The Witness: No, sir; I don't guess.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. You stated a few minutes ago that you thought that you had insurance figures for the Volturno, did you not, Mr. Thomas? A. I had some, but insurance figures are one item that I have always tried to get a great deal more of than I have for I always thought it necessary for me to have some of them and some figures I have gotten and some they have refused to give me.

Q. Well, taking the figures which you have gotten as a basis? A. No, sir; I couldn't say.

2040 Q. What do you take to be the cost per voyage of insurance on the Volturno? A. I couldn't say; I don't even know what the Volturno is insured at.

Q. What other items are there of steamer expenses, Mr. Thomas, besides the coal and the insurance? A. There might be hire.

Q. What? A. If you don't own them, it might be hire.

Q. I am talking now about this Volturno. You own that, do you not? A. No, sir; we do not own it.

Q. You don't own the Volturno? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you own the Uranium? A. Yes.

Q. Let us take the hire of the Volturno. Do you know what the hire of the Volturno is per voyage? A. I am not sure.

Q. Well, give us your best information?

Mr. Burlingham: It is a written charter party, isn't it?

The Witness: I have never seen the charter party.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. You have information on it, however? A. I would have to refresh my mind on that point.

Q. You prefer not to give it, as a matter of fact, do you not, Mr. Thomas? A. What? 2042

Q. You prefer not to give it? A. Well, it is a peculiar form of charter any way; it would not do you any good to know it.

Q. Well, I should think you might be perfectly willing to tell us? A. Is that all?

Q. I should like to have you tell, unless if you feel it would prejudice your business interests— A. I don't know what sort of a charter there is. I know that the Uranium Steamship Company does not own the Volturno, and whether or not they pay anybody hire for it or what the arrangement is, I don't know what it is. I know they offset a sum of money.

Q. Do you mean they set apart a certain sum for her? 2043 A. I don't know whether they set it apart or pay it or what they do.

Q. What is the amount of the sum of money you speak of? A. Sometimes I see it and sometimes I don't.

Q. What is the amount of it?

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Have you a copy of the charter party? A. No, sir.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Where is it; in London? A. I don't know.

2044

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Thomas, what is your best information as to the hire of the Volturno?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to.

A. Well, I say I cannot answer that.

Q. All right? A. I might answer it and I might be too far away on it.

Q. What? A. I might be too far off on it.

Q. Now, aside from the coal and the insurance what other items are there that you charge to ship expense?

2045 A. We charge the upkeep of the ship.

Q. And what does that amount to per voyage? A. I could not say, sir.

Q. You have no figures on that here? A. No, sir; I have not them with me. I have some figures in my office.

Q. Well, what other items are there? How about the wages of captain and officers and the crew? A. I have said the officers and the crew are one.

Q. What are those on a steamer such as the Volturno? What are the charges to expense account of the steamer for crew and officers for a voyage? A. I don't know, sir.

2046 Q. Do you know what they are for a year? A. For a year?

Q. Yes? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, do you know what the various officers receive as wages? A. I know something about it.

Q. Can you refresh your recollection from your records? A. I might.

Q. Suppose you do that then, Mr. Thomas, on that point, and also refresh your recollection so far as you can as to the insurance from your records? A. I don't believe I have sufficient data to do it on the insurance; I am pretty certain I have not.

Q. And as to any other items of ship expense, steamer expense, which will enable you to state what the amount of the charges of the steamer expense for a single voyage amounts to? A. I can come pretty close to a lump sum.

Q. Can you give us the lump sum? A. Yes.

Q. Suppose you give us the lump sum? A. I mean by referring to my records. For instance, I know that if we book over a certain amount she usually shows a profit on her gross receipts of so much, and under certain circumstances she would not if she made a long run and had a big repair bill that goes in, which she does not generally have, and she might have.

Q. Now, then, as to your freight expense, are there any particular charges charged to freight? A. We only charge the stevedore and insurance. There are very few items we put on against the freight; brokerage, of course.

Q. So practically what you receive on the freight is available as against ship expense for profit? A. Also for passengers the same way.

Q. Your passenger expense is much greater than your freight expense, is it not? A. Oh, yes.

Q. As you say there are very few items charged to freight expense? A. We have the stevedore bill, which is a very heavy expense. Of course, if we have three or four hundred passengers, your freight expenses are very much heavier than if you have not as many passengers.

Q. Whereas if you had a larger number of passengers it may not be that way? A. Yes.

Q. Have your ships made their sailings with regularity? A. I think with a great deal of regularity with one or two exceptions, or a few exceptions. I don't think in the two years we hardly missed one.

Q. Have you lost any lives or property in this line? A. What do you mean, killed?

2050

Q. Yes, have you lost any ships? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you met with any accidents which resulted in the loss of property or lives at present? A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Have you conformed to the regulations of the United States Passenger Acts? A. I think we have done a little more than conform to them, because they were doubly strict with us.

Mr. Spooner: I did not hear that.

The Witness: I say we have done a little more than conform to them because they were a great deal stricter with us than they were with the regular lines. Where 2051 a new ship or a new line comes in they watch them very carefully to see that they do carry out all the laws.

Q. Your boats conformed to the requirements of those laws? A. Yes.

Q. You were asked some questions about the complaints of passengers coming to you. Do you recall receiving complaints as to your service other than the fact that your tickets were said to be no good at the control stations? A. Yes; we have had the usual complaints that come to every passenger line about different little things.

Q. Did you notice that they are of any different

2052 character than those which came when you were with the Hamburg-American Line and other steamship lines? A. I had nothing to do with the passenger business in the Hamburg-American Line, but I know those complaints do come to almost all lines.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Thomas, to refresh your recollection as to the various items of expense, passenger and ship that I have asked you questions about, and after you have refreshed your recollection from that data I will examine you further upon it.

By Mr. Burlingham:

Q. Mr. Thomas, did you carry more passengers westbound than eastbound in 1910? A. I don't remember.

Q. What? A. I don't remember.

Q. Well, according to this report for the calendar year 1910 you carried eastbound one thousand sixteen third class passengers and brought westbound including Halifax, nineteen thousand six hundred forty-two; does that refresh your recollection at all? A. No, sir; it does not refresh my recollection. There are a great many more come here than there are go out.

Q. The emigration from America of third class passengers depends a good deal on the times here, doesn't it, and the scarcity or plentifulness of work? A. Yes, sir.

Q. These steerage passengers go back to Europe when there is nothing to do here; is that it? A. Yes

Q. And when times are prosperous here they stay here? A. It is generally conceded that it is a sure sign of hard times coming when they commence to go out of the country in great numbers.

Q. You had greater success you said in carrying on the whole westbound passengers than eastbound passengers? A. It is only natural we brought more here than we carried out of the country. Every line has that experience.

Q. Do you claim that you were interfered with by the competition of the Conference lines in westbound steerage traffic? A. I know we were.

Q. It was not by any fighting ships, was it? A. I think they put on fighting ships on the other side too.

Q. What do you base that statement on? A. I have been told so.

Q. By whom? A. I don't know by whom but I have seen it.

Q. By some of these unknown officers of your company? A. I don't know how I know it, but I just do.

Q. You just feel it, do you? A. No; I don't just feel it.

Q. Now, Mr. Thomas, it seems to me a very extraordinary thing you should have been in the employ in a very important relation to these companies for more than six years and not know the names of any of the officers of any of the companies you have been serving.

Mr. Dorr: I object to the form of that question because it is contrary to what the witness has said.

Q. Don't you know the president of any of the companies or the chairman of the Board of Directors? A. There does not happen to be one.

Q. Is there a chairman of the Board of Directors? A. There does not happen to be a Board of Directors.

Q. Which company are you referring to now? A. The present company.

Q. The present Uranium Steamship Company? A. Yes.

Q. That is a British corporation? A. Yes.

Q. How is it governed? A. How is it governed?

2058 Q. How is it regulated; who controls it, if it has no officers? A. According to the English law, if you know anything about the English law, you don't have to have a president or you don't have to have a Board of Directors.

Q. They have a managing director, don't they? A. I don't think they do.

Q. What have they got? A. So far as I know they are simply carrying on trade.

Q. The name of the manager is Hardy? A. Mr. Hardy.

Q. And the name of the secretary-treasurer is what? A. I think his name is Marginson. I don't know how to spell it.

Q. Do you know anything about the stockholders of the company, or the people who hold the shares, if you want a British style of terminology? A. I don't think any shares are issued. I think practically none.

Q. Do you know whether there are any human beings that control it? A. I imagine there might be.

Q. Who are those that you imagine as controlling it? A. I don't know.

Q. Has the Canadian Northern got anything to do with it? A. I don't know. 2060

Q. Have you any shrewd suspicion on that fact? A. There might be suspicions, but I don't know what they are.

Q. The firm of McKenzie & Mann, is that a Montreal firm? A. I think they are a Toronto firm.

Q. And McKenzie you know, do you? A. No, sir.

Q. You have met him? A. I don't think I have ever met him.

Q. The other man, have you met him, Mr. Mann? A. I never have even seen him.

Q. Did you have any correspondence with him? A. Never.

Q. Or with the Canadian Northern? A. Never. 2061

Q. Or with their manager or agents? A. I have had correspondence with some people connected with it.

Q. Now, with all these different elements which go to make up the cost of ocean transportation, unknown to you practically so far as we can learn from the examination of Mr. Dorr, how is it possible for you to say what the cost per capita of transporting passengers is?

Mr. Dorr: I object to the form of that; the witness has testified as to the particular items of steerage expense.

2062 A. How do I know anything? I don't know how I know it.

Q. Are these some of the items that must be considered in determining cost, wages, and provisions; that one item; doesn't that have to be considered in determining the cost? A. Certainly.

Q. Port charges? A. Yes.

Q. Dues to the Government? A. Port charges and dues don't come under the way we define the cost of carrying passengers.

Q. I am not so interested in the way you do it because you have told me that you do it by maki[illegible] three 2063 divisions? A. Three or four.

Q. Three or four, but you gave me three, the ship, the freight, the passengers, but I am trying to find out what it costs per capita for you to carry your passengers? A. That is impossible; no man could define that.

Q. Nobody? A. No.

Q. It is just then a matter of bookkeeping? A. For instance, suppose you have two hundred passengers on a ship, the ship is bound to lose money.

Q. It depends on whether she had a great deal of freight at a high rate? A. I said only two hundred passengers. If you have in addition to that freight 2064 it would make a difference.

Q. If she were full of freight and high class freight she could make money without any passengers, I suppose? A. It depends altogether on the type of the ship.

Q. And the most desirable thing is to have a full cabin list, a full steerage, a full second cabin and a lot of freight; isn't that what you want? A. That is what you want.

Q. Now, besides wages and provisions and the port charges you have pilotage, don't you? A. Yes.

Q. You have repairs, ordinary repairs? A. Yes.

Q. You have the supplies, the ropes and hawsers, canvas and that sort of thing? A. Yes.

Q. You have insurance; is that so? A. Yes.

Q. And if your vessels are under charter, you have the hire whatever it is? A. Yes.

Q. And if she is mortgaged you have the interest on the mortgage? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a mortgage on the Uranium? A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Is there a mortgage on the Campanello? A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Those two boats are owned by the Uranium Steamship Company to the best of your information, are they? A. I am not certain about the Campanello.

Q. She may be owned by some outside individual or corporation? A. I think she is.

Q. Which of those boats is in port now, the Uranium? A. The Campanello.

Q. Cannot you tell from looking at her papers who the owner is? A. Yes, sir. I know how she stands.

Q. You mean you can tell how she stands at least? A. I don't think the name she stands in, she is owned by.

Q. Why do you doubt that? A. Because the man whose name she is standing in has not money enough to own her.

Q. Who is that? A. H. W. Hardy, the manager.

Q. So you have refreshed your own recollection and you say Mr. Hardy was the nominal owner? A. So far as the papers show.

Q. Can you help us to ascertain who was the real owner? A. I don't know.

Q. Have you a suspicion about it? A. I don't suspect anybody.

Q. Would you, Mr. Thomas, venture to say what it would cost the Hamburg-American Line for instance, to carry three or four hundred passengers on the President Lincoln? A. No, sir; I would not.

2068 Q. I observe in this report for passenger movement for 1910 that the Volturno sailed from here on the 21st of May, 1910, with two hundred thirty-five passengers and that the Prince Friederich Wilhelm of the North German Lloyd sailed on the same day with two hundred forty-four steerage passengers. Are you able to state what it cost the North German Lloyd to carry those passengers? A. No, sir.

Mr. Burlingham: That is all.

By Mr. Bullowa:

2069 Q. Mr. Burlingham asked you about the Campanello. I understand that the Volturno is chartered to the Uranium Steamship Company? A. I think so, but I don't know.

Q. Do you know by whom? A. I don't know.

Q. Is she also in Mr. Hardy's name? A. No, sir.

Q. Whose name does she stand in? A. The Canadian Northern Steamship.

Q. Do you know who is the president of the Canadian Northern Steamship? A. I don't know.

Q. The Canadian Northern Steamship Company? A. I don't know whether it is the Canadian Northern Steamship Company or Canadian Northern Steamships.

2070 Q. Does that go under the name of Canadian Northern? A. I don't know; I don't think so.

Q. Does it belong to McKenzie & Mann? A. I don't know.

Q. Where was it that you met Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Mann; in London? A. I never met him. I saw him in a restaurant, I just saw him across the room as he was pointed out.

Mr. Burlingham: That is all.

In response to the first subpoena dated June 10 the White Star Line produced everything called for in that subpoena except the minutes of meetings by representatives of the various Conference lines held March 25, 1908, appointing a committee of three. 2071

In response to the subpoena to the Holland-Amerika Line dated June 25 as stated this morning I produced European railroad tariff and circular to agents, but only the supplemental statements. I will produce later the original statements.

What do you lack of the documents called for in the subpoena to Lawson Sandford dated June 10?

Mr. Dorr: We have the first nine items of that subpoena. As to the eleventh we have the meetings of the American Atlantic Conference for 1908 and June, 1909, but none for the rest of that year and none for 1910. We lack the meetings of the standing complaint committee of the Continental Conference held in New York in 1907, 1908, and 1909, and also minutes of meetings of general managers held in 1908 and 1909. 2072

Mr. Burlingham: I produce minutes of the standing complaint committee of the Continental Conference from January 21, 1908, to May 12, 1908, and state on the authority of Mr. Morse, the secretary of the conference, that these are all that he has in the office, and that there were no further meetings of the standing complaint committee of the Continental Conference nor of the Continental Conference itself, but that the meetings thereafter were of the American Atlantic Conference. Mr. Crim, state what you want. 2073

Mr. Crim: Produce the data similar to that produced last week with respect to the Central and Western Passenger Associations of the Trunk Line Association during the period of time from January 1, 1908, to and including 2074 May 1, 1912, both eastbound and westbound traffic.

Mr. Burlingham: Anything further?

Mr. Crim: That is all.

Mr. Dorr: We ask for the rate lists for passenger service compiled by Mr. Sandford from 1893 to 1912. The letters and telegrams referring to the estimates of lines in competition to Conference lines, proceedings of conferences in Europe between 1903 and 1911.

EMIL LEDERER, called as a witness by and examined by Mr. Dorr:

Q. What is your business? A. I am connected with the Hamburg-American Line.

Q. In what capacity? A. In charge of the steerage business.

Q. What is your official title? A. I have none at the present time.

Q. Were you formerly assistant to the general manager? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has that office been done away with in the last two years? A. Why, the official position ceased owing to the death of our resident director and general manager and I ceased to be the assistant to the general manager.

Q. Prior to that time you were second to Mr. Boas in the affairs of the line in this country? A. As far as the steerage department or agency organization was concerned.

Q. What are the duties of the assistant to the general manager? A. Various.

Q. Did they relate to other matters besides the steerage business? A. Yes.

Q. You had charge of the steerage business since about 1895? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you in your capacity as assistant to the general manager, attended meetings of the conferences which have been mentioned here of Continen-

2080 tal, Mediterranean, and North Atlantic? A. Since 1895.

Q. During the period from 1904 until 1908, what was the steerage traffic in which your line was engaged at this port, between what points? A. Between Germany.

Mr. Spooner: You mean what ports in the United States?

Mr. Dorr: What points on the Continent and what ports in the United States?

Mr. Spooner: You mean—

2081 Mr. Dorr: Hamburg-American.

Mr. Spooner: You are dealing with steerage between the United States and German ports.

Mr. Dorr: To and from, both ways.

A. Between Hamburg and New York, between the Mediterranean ports and New York.

Q. What Mediterranean ports? A. Naples and Genoa.

Q. Any ports in the Adriatic? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you still keep up the Mediterranean business? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At all times since that time? A. Yes, sir.

2082 Q. In 1904 to 1908 or to 1909, what steerage traffic did your company handle; that is to what Continental points, to and from what Continental points? A. We did not handle continental business via the Mediterranean service at any time.

Q. During any of that time? A. No.

Q. Neither before that time nor after did you ever handle Continental business through Mediterranean ports? A. I stated before we never handled Continental business via the Mediterranean service.

Q. You never published any tariffs to Continental points from Mediterranean ports? A. No.

Q. In 1908, do you recall the formation of the so-called small committee by the conference lines in New York? A. I was not present in the city when the so-called small committee was formed.

Q. How long after its formation did you return to the city? A. About three months.

Q. Had you been appointed during that time? A. Yes.

Q. While you were abroad hadn't you attended any meetings with reference to the formation of the small committee? A. No.

Q. Had you been in conference with any officers of your line? A. Yes, sir. 2084

Q. As to steerage business? A. Yes.

Q. Had you had any conversations with them as to competition which was then existing? A. Yes.

Q. With your line? A. Yes.

Q. In the steerage business? A. Yes.

Q. Have you had any conversations with them as to methods of meeting that competition? A. In a general way.

Q. When had you gone abroad on this particular visit?

Mr. Spooner: I object to that, assuming that he went abroad on this particular visit, don't know whether he did or not. 2085

Mr. Dorr: You did not get my question. This particular trip, take out "visit"?

A. In May, 1908, I believe.

Q. In May, 1908? A. I believe.

Q. Early in that month? A. I stated I went to Europe during May, 1908.

Q. You cannot recall what time in May? A. No.

Q. When did you first learn of the plan or proposed plan to reduce the rates of some ship belonging to one of the Conference Lines on the sailing dates of 2086 steamers of the independent line or lines? A. It was always the custom to meet competition.

Mr. Dorr: I move that that answer be sticken out and ask you to answer the question. Read the question, please.

(Question read.)

A. As far as I remember we have always met competition.

Mr. Dorr: Read the question to the witness again, if you will.

2087 (Question read.)

A. I stated that that was always the custom.

Q. I have asked Mr. Lederer when you first learned of this plan?

Mr. Spooner: I think his answer is responsive to the question.

Mr. Dorr: I do not suppose Mr. Lederer has always existed or has always been in the steamship business. I am asking now as to his particular information. Now, will you answer the question?

The Witness: As long as I have been in the steam-2088 ship business I remember that the lines that were attacked by competition would find some way of meeting it.

Q. That is the lines which were united in conference by some agreement, when an independent line came into existence and put on ships and adopted the plan of designating one of the ships of the united lines to sail at reduced rates on the sailing dates of the independent line?

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question as assuming facts not proven and as argumentative.

2089

A. Well, the Hamburg-American Line has always found ways and means to protect its own interests.

Q. Just answer my question, if you will? A. I am trying to.

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike out the answer. Just read the question.

(Question read.)

A. The lines have not put on a ship on the date of the sailing of an independent steamer as you put it.

Q. Well, I will reframe the question. Have the conference lines ever since you have been in the steamship business, designated some steamer of one of the lines to reduce its rate on the sailing date of the steamers of independent lines? A. The steamship lines have—

Q. Can you answer that question, yes or no? A. I cannot answer it yes or no.

Q. Do the best you can? A. The steamship lines have always met the competition in the best way they could, sometimes by reducing the rates of all the steamers, sometimes by restricting that reduction to meet the opposition of one or two ships.

Will you read the question again?

(Question read.)

2091

Mr. Dorr: I think that is a question capable of a yes or no answer.

Mr. Spooner: The witness said he could not answer it yes or no.

Mr. Dorr: I press the question.

Q. What is there in that question that makes it impossible for you to give a yes or no answer, Mr. Lederer? A. You asked me when the Conference lines have designated a steamer to meet the rates of a steamer of an independent line.

2092

Mr. Dorr: I have not asked you that. Read the question again, please.

(Question read.)

Q. They have done that or they have not done it; have they done it ever since you have been in the business?

Mr. Spooner: You are not obliged to answer that question yes or no. He stated he could not answer the question.

Mr. Dorr: Then I take it an answer of no can be made to the question.

Mr. Beecher: "Have you quit beating your wife" I think it is for that objection.

Mr. Dorr: I understood Mr. Lederer had already answered it, the fact that they have been doing this thing as far as he can recollect, always have done it.

Mr. Beecher: I think if you strike out that date business you may get it.

Q. Mr. Lederer, as to the appointment of the so-called small committee, did a committee representing the Conference Lines and parties to the agreement of February 5th, 1908, designate a steamer of one of the conference lines which should reduce rates for its sailing on the sailing date of the independent line? A. They have selected from among the steamers sailing on or about the same time as the independent steamer, a steamer of the Conference Lines to meet the competition of the independent line.

Q. Now, suppose you answer my question? A. I believe I answered it fully.

Q. You regard that as yes or no to my question? A. Repeat the question.

(Question read.)

Q. Did they or did they not do that? A. I have answered your question fully.

2095

Mr. Spooner: Read the answer.

Mr. Dorr: You will have to let us be the judge of that.

Q. Can you answer that, yes or no?

Mr. Spooner: I have the right to have the answer he gave read.

Mr. Dorr: Certainly.

(Answer read.)

Mr. Spooner: Isn't that an answer to your question?

Mr. Dorr: I do not consider it such.

Q. Can you answer my question, yes or no? A. I cannot, not the way you put your question.

Q. Why not? What is there in it that keeps it from being susceptible of a yes or no answer? Well, let us take it up, phrase by phrase if you prefer. Was there a small committee in 1908 selected by Conference Lines in New York, Mr. Lederer? A. I have not been able to find out that such a committee was selected or appointed. The matter of fact is that some committee was charged with taking steps that were necessary to protect the interests of the Conference Lines and report results to their general managers.

Q. Have you no recollection then of the designation of a so-called small committee by the Conference Lines in New York, in 1908? A. I have not.

Q. Were you a member of a certain so-called small committee? A. I was a member of a great many small committees.

Q. Were you a member of a small committee, appointed by the conference lines in New York in 1908 or thereafter, of which Mr. Nyland was a member? A. I was a member of a small committee, which if it was appointed at all must have been appointed during 1908, while I was in Europe. I have been very anxious to find out how this committee was appointed. I have not been able to ascertain the exact date of the meeting at which it is alleged that small committee was appointed, but there is no doubt that a small committee existed nominally.

Q. And that small committee was composed of representatives of Conference Lines, was it not? A. That small committee was composed of members of the so-called complaint committee.

Q. Mr. Lederer was or was not this small committee composed of representatives of Conference Lines?

2099

Mr. Bullowa: He has answered the question.

A. I have specified.

Q. Was it or was it not? A. Members of the complaint committee of the New York Conference.

Q. It was then composed of representatives of Conference Lines? A. While I was a member of the small commitee, I don't consider myself a member of the Conference Lines.

Q. Was it or was it not composed of representatives of Conference Lines?

Mr. Spooner: I object.

A. Yes.

Q. It was. Now, did the various lines, various Conference Lines appoint different representatives in rotation as members of that committee? A. Yes.

Q. Was that committee known as the small committee? A. Yes.

Q. Did that committee designate some ship of a Conference Line to reduce its rate for its sailing on the sailing date of a ship of an independent line? A. They selected—

2101

Q. They did not designate; they selected, is that the only difficulty with that question? A. You may call it designate if you prefer.

Q. I do not care; I want to know the fact; you prefer to say selected?

Mr. Spooner: They could not very well select without designating it, could they?

Mr. Dorr: That is for your employe to say.

Mr. Spooner: That is for your intelligence.

Mr. Dorr: He is choosing the words; not I, Senator.

2102

A. The small committee was selected from among the steamers owned by lines of the conference, to meet the opposition of independent lines.

Q. Well, did they designate a ship or select a ship to reduce its rate on the sailing date, on its sailing on the sailing date of an independent line; did they or did they not do it? A. Sometimes, yes.

Q. Did they do it? A. Sometimes they did.

Q. Now sometimes? A. Yes.

Q. Can you state how many times since 1908 the ships of independent lines have sailed from New York, engaged in the North Atlantic steerage traffic, on which sailing date some ship of the Conference Lines has not reduced its rate? A. Several times.

2103

Q. Well, state when they were? A. I could not state the exact dates.

Q. By several you mean two or three, or three or four? A. About that.

Q. Now, when was it that your knowledge, to your information, some ship of a Conference Line was selected by representatives of Conference Lines to reduce its rate for its sailing on the sailing date of an independent line? A. I could furnish you with an exact statement, showing steamers and dates of the independent line.

2104 Mr. Dorr: I move to strike it out as not responsive and ask that the witness answer the question.

Mr. Spooner: You did not want the information then in complete and accurate form.

Mr. Dorr: I will get my information in the order which I ask for it Senator if I have to stay here all day.

Q. Now, Mr. Lederer will you answer the question? A. Whenever we thought it necessary to do so to meet the competition.

2105 Mr. Dorr: Will you read the question again? (Question read.)

Q. When was that first done to your knowledge?

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike out the last answer.

A. I can look up the records, exact records, exact facts.

Q. Have you any present recollection when that was done? A. I don't recall the time when there was not some trouble among some group of steamship lines.

2106 Mr. Dorr: I move to strike that out as not responsive.

Q. I repeat Mr. Lederer, when was the first time that you know of or which you had information of that representatives of Conference Lines selected some steamer of one of the Conference Lines to reduce its rate for its sailing on the sailing date of an independent line? That calls for a date. If you cannot give it correctly give it as nearly as you can? A. sult in the recommendation to reduce rates.
Meetings of the various committees did not always re-

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike that out as not responsive and I repeat my question.

(Question read.)

A. I cannot give you the precise date, as I have not always been a member of committees that have such matters in charge.

Q. Well, this question Mr. Lederer, if you will pay attention to it, calls for your knowledge or information on the subject. I am not asking you to testify positively when this was first done as a matter of history, but when it was first done to your information and knowledge. Let us have the first date of 2108 which you have any knowledge or information? A. I should think you would prefer to get the exact information.

Q. I will get what you have to say first?

Mr. Spooner: You will have to submit to a certain amount—

Mr. Dorr: You will have to submit Mr. Lederer to a certain amount of insistence that my question be answered. Of course, we have not here the protection of the Court, so the witness is able to waste a considerable amount of time.

Mr. Spooner: I think if the Court were here 2109 he would protect the witness.

Mr. Dorr: I think if the Court were here he would make the witness answer my question.

A. I would say 1908, as far as I can remember.

Q. In 1908? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no information prior to that as to the selection of the ships of the Conference Lines or the representatives of those Conference Lines to reduce its rate for its sailing on the sailing date of independent lines prior to that time? A. No.

2110 Q. When did you first learn that this practice had in fact been adopted? A. In 1908; September, 1908, upon my return from Europe.

Q. Had you learned prior to that time that it was proposed by the Conference Lines, or by certain of them, or by certain of the officers, to establish this practice? A. No.

Q. You had heard nothing whatever about the matter? A. No.

Q. Had you had any discussions about the matter? A. No.

2111 Q. When you were abroad in May or thereafter in 1908? A. No.

Q. You had no discussions with any of the officers of your line about the matter? A. No.

Q. You were in charge of the steerage business of your line, were you not, in 1908, under Mr. Boas? A. Under Mr. Boas.

Q. But you were the practical man in charge, were you not, assistant to the general manager? A. I received my orders from Mr. Boas.

Q. But Mr. Boas did not attend to the details of that business, did he? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that all you did was simply to carry out his specific instructions? A. Exactly.

2112 Q. Had no discretion of your own? A. Exactly.

Q. Your judgment was not asked about matters in the steerage business? A. It was at times.

Q. You had the experience of twelve years in that business, did you not, at that time? A. Longer than that.

Q. Well, thirteen years at that time, to be exact? A. With the Hamburg-American Line.

Q. With the Hamburg-American Line, yes; were you not? A. Yes.

Q. And you were over there in May on business of your line? A. Yes.

Q. And the part of the business of your line with which you were concerned was the steerage business, was it not? A. Yes.

Q. And you have learned, have you not, that it was in May, 1908, that the first so-called small committee was elected or appointed, or however they came into being, which committee in fact dealt with the selection or designation of the so-called fighting ships; you have learned that, haven't you? A. I understand that the order to meet the competition of the outside lines was given by the companies in Europe to their officers in America.

2114

Mr. Dorr: Move to strike it out as not responsive.

(Question read.)

A. I don't know when this committee was appointed nor by whom it was appointed.

Q. You have already stated that you did not know how it came into being; have you not ascertained the facts by conversations with others, and in other ways, that the committee did come into being in the latter part of May or June, 1908? A. I so understand from some of the testimony given by some of the witnesses.

Q. You never had any information about that prior to that testimony? A. I didn't know the time or place at which this committee was supposed to have been appointed.

Q. While you were abroad in May on business of your line, do you mean to say, Mr. Lederer, that you were not consulted as to the institution of this practice? A. This subject was never mentioned by anyone on the other side.

Q. What officers of your line did you see over on the other side? A. I met several of the officers.

Q. Who were they? A. The director general and some of the other directors.

2116 Q. Did you confer about steerage business? A. I did.

Q. But did you confer about the existence of any independent line? A. No.

Q. Or mention any independent line? A. No.

Q. It never was discussed at all? A. The subject was not mentioned.

Q. While you were over there and prior to your return, did you have any conversation with Mr. Peters? A. I met Mr. Peters.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Peters? A. Not in business matters.

2117 Q. Nothing connected with the Conference Lines? A. No, sir.

Q. Who was the Mr. Peters you referred to? A. He was secretary of the pool in Europe.

Q. Now, Mr. Lederer, when you returned, or after your return you became a member of the so-called small committee? A. Some time after my return from Europe I was told that the lines—

Q. Can't you answer that question, yes or no? Sometime after your return did you or did you not become a member of the so-called small committee, which you refer to in your testimony? A. Nominally, yes.

2118 Q. You became nominally a member of that small committee, is that what you mean? A. Yes; this small committee is a myth.

Q. There wasn't any small committee? A. Not that I know of.

Q. Purely mythological? A. The committee has never held any meetings as long as I can remember. There is no doubt the fact that the passenger agents of some of the lines selected a steamer, selected an opposition steamer from among the ships sailing on or about the same time and belonging to the Conference Lines to meet the opposition of the independent lines.

Mr. Dorr: I move that it be stricken out.

Mr. Beers: That is responsive, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. Dorr: The latter part of it was not.

Mr. Beers: It was exactly in line with your question. I may be mistaken.

Mr. Dorr: I will withdraw my motion, I was not paying strict attention to the answer.

Q. In Exhibit No. 106, which is already in evidence, a letter from the Holland-American Line to the defendant Adrian Gips, states under date of April 16, 1909, "the small committee, consisting of Mr. Emil Lederer, for the month of April; Mr. Nyland, for the 2120 month of April, and Mr. Winters for the months of April, May and June, then took the matter of considering a fighting steamer against the S. S. Uranium scheduled to leave to New York on the 24th in hand." There wasn't any such small committee? A. I am not responsible for what Mr. Gips writes to his company.

Q. Have you any correspondence of your own company with the home office about that time? A. On what subject?

Q. Have you any correspondence whatever from this country, your own company to its home office? A. Correspondence from the company? 2121

Q. Correspondence from your New York office to your home office? A. I believe we have.

Q. And that is in New York? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your line was served with a subpoena to produce any letters relating to the so-called fighting or defendant ships? A. I have not seen a subpoena calling for that.

Q. Have you had Senator Spooner ask you to institute a search for such letter? A. The subpoena did not call for any correspondence.

Mr. Spooner: There was no such subpoena.

Mr. Dorr: I knew that, but I understood you to say you would have a search made.

Mr. Spooner: They are not in default at all.

Mr. Dorr: I am not intimating that; I will put it on record if you desire. I asked if he made a search according to your direction.

Mr. Spooner: No, I did not direct him to.

Q. You have not received any directions from Senator Spooner in the matter? A. No.

2123 Q. Do your officers make a report to the home office, when one of the steamers have been selected to reduce its rate on the same sailing date as a steamer of an independent line? A. Our company invariably advises the home office by cable of the number of passengers carried by a ship as soon as she leaves port.

Q. That is very interesting, Mr. Lederer, if you try to listen to the question— A. I have answered your question fully.

(Question read.)

A. We make a report of everything.

Q. If I don't make my question clear, let me ask another question: Did the New York office of your 2124 line report to the home office the selection of one of its ships to reduce its rate for a sailing on the sailing date of an independent line, when such selection had been made? A. Yes.

Q. You wrote a letter to your home office—to that effect, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. Did your line—the New York office of your line —report to the home office, the fact, if it was a fact, that this selection had been made by the so-called small committee? A. We simply reported the departure of a steamer, giving the number of the passengers carried and the rate at which the passengers were carried.

Q. Did you make any report to your office that the so-called small committee had made the selection in question? A. I never wrote on that subject.

Q. Did you ever see any letter on that subject? A. No.

Q. What? A. No.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you communicated the fact of the selection of one of your steamers by the so-called small committee to any officer connected with you? A. I did not write on that subject to anyone.

Q. Did you inform Mr. Boas as to that fact? A. I informed Mr. Boas as to the condition of the business 2126 from week to week.

Q. Did you inform Mr. Boas of the fact—when it occurred—that the small committee had selected one of the steamers of your line to reduce its rate for sailing on the same sailing date as the ship of an independent line? A. I always submitted the question for his approval as far as it concerned our ships.

Q. That is, after the small committee had made the selection you would discuss that selection with Mr. Boas? A. I can hardly speak about the small committee other than I did before; there was not a small committee.

Q. Was there a group of three men who at meet- 2127
ings that they held or over the 'phone, or by correspondence, discussed among themselves— A. The usual—

Q. —the selection of some ship of a conference line to reduce its rate for sailing on the date of an independent line? A. The usual procedure was—

Q. Can't you answer that question, whether there was such a group, that did do those things; can't you answer that question, Mr. Lederer? A. I am trying to give you the facts.

Q. Try to answer the question, Mr. Lederer, and we will get the facts, I think, quicker in that way than any other? A. You will get the facts quicker if you let me answer in my own way.

Mr. Beers: Let him answer and if you don't like the answer move to strike it out.

Q. (Question read.) Was there such a group of men to your knowledge or information who in fact did these things; isn't that fairly clear; do you understand that Mr. Lederer? A. I understand your question fully but I cannot answer it in that form.

2129 Q. Was there such a group of men? A. No.

Q. You know Mr. Nyland, and you know Mr. Winter? A. Yes.

Q. In April, 1909, or if you cannot recall the precise date, but about that time, did you and Mr. Nyland and Mr. Winter, discuss the selection of some steamer of the Conference Lines to reduce its rate for its sailing on the sailing date of an independent line? A. I discussed it with either one or the other of the two gentlemen, or with both, and with others.

Q. These discussions which you had at the period when you would do that discussing, would amount to about how long? About a month, two months, three 2130 months? A. Oh, once in a while they called me up over the telephone and got my opinion as to which would be the best ship to select from among those scheduled on or about the time the opposition, or the outside lines, made the lower rates, to meet that opposition.

Q. Then at certain times, at any rate, there were two or three men who used to discuss this question of reducing the rates of some steamer of the Conference Lines, was there not? A. To discuss matters in a general way.

Q. As to who those men were—who the particular men were who discussed that at that time, name them?

A. It was discussed amongst all the representatives of the lines.

Q. This group of men or this small number of men, if you prefer that, was that or was it not known among the members themselves as the small committee? A. I understood that some of the members of the so-called complaint committee should consider the situation from time to time and select from among the steamers of the Conference Lines, sailing on or about the date of the opposition steamer, the best ship or boat to meet competition.

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike it out as not responsive.

Q. Now, if you will read the question (question read); now will you answer the question Mr. Lederer? A. Yes.

Q. It was known as the small committee? A. Yes. I answer it that way to get through quicker, although I understood that the small committee was a myth and was non est.

Q. But this myth had the name of the small committee, that was the name given to the committee? A. I had not heard the name of that small committee until I read the testimony.

Q. Why do you answer now under oath that that group of men was known amongst its members as the small committee? A. I understood so from the testimony of some of my colleagues.

Q. When a ship has been designated to reduce its rate, do you recall what steps if any were taken, for the compensation of the line whose ship was appointed? A. I do not.

Q. Perhaps I had better put that question—or split it up into two parts. In the first place, do you recall whether or not there were any steps taken for the compensation or remuneration for such steamship line, and whether it was discussed by you with any person? A. I do not.

Q. You never had any conference with any one about that subject? A. No.

Q. Did you ever see any correspondence in relation to it? A. No.

Q. Can you state positively whether or not there is an agreement by which the different lines mentioned in the conference shared the losses or the profits through running reduced rate ships? A. I know there is such an agreement.

Q. What is your information and when did you obtain the information as to the existence of such an agreement? A. When the subpoena was served upon our company to produce such an agreement.

Q. Did you produce that agreement? A. Our company did produce that agreement.

Q. What agreement do you refer to? A. To the agreement that was called for in the subpoena.

Mr. Dorr: Have you it, Mr. Spooner?

Mr. Spooner: You have it; you have had it a long time.

Mr. Dorr: I don't recall that particular paper.

Mr. Beers: About compensation for the loss—

Mr. Dorr: For sharing the loss or profits of the fighting ships.

Q. You turned that over to Senator Spooner? A. I turned it over to the late Mr. Boas who handed me a package requesting me to pick out the paper which the subpoena called for.

Q. And then the subpoena to which you refer was the subpoena to produce certain documents before the Grand Jury, and not a subpoena in this proceeding?

Mr. Spooner: Before the Grand Jury?

Q. What was the answer Mr. Lederer? A. Investigation by the Grand Jury.

Mr. Spooner: I want to say none of those papers did I receive. I say that because you ask about the papers.

Mr. Dorr: Yes, I ask that to clear it up so that it would not appear in your hands.

Mr. Spooner: It has never been in your hands, or any of the papers that were subpoenaed before the Grand Jury.

Mr. Dorr: The Government states on the record that it is not intended by its questions to 2138 imply that Senator Spooner has now the papers which were turned over by Mr. Lederer to Mr. Boas for production before the Grand Jury.

Mr. Spooner: I have not now and never had them.

Mr. Dorr: Or that Senator Spooner has ever had them.

Mr. Spooner: I didn't know that they were in existence.

Q. What were the terms of that agreement, Mr. Lederer? A. I didn't read them over.

Q. Did you ever read them over? A. I did not. 2139

Q. How did you know it was the paper called for in the subpoena? A. By looking at the title.

Q. What was the title? A. The title that was called for in the subpoena.

Q. What was it? A. I don't remember.

Q. Can you explain why no such agreement has ever been produced, or not produced? A. All the agreements that were in the possession of our company have been produced.

Q. Did you produce them? A. I did not.

Q. Were you present at the Grand Jury room when Mr. Boas was present? A. No, I was not.

2140

Q. Do you know what he produced? A. He produced the agreements that were called for in the subpoena?

Q. You were there and know what he produced? A. I was not present at the Grand Jury room.

Q. You appeared before the Grand Jury, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you were asked this question—and made this answer—

Mr. Spooner: I object to the question on the ground that it is an incompetent and im-

2141 proper disclosure—

Mr. Dorr: I withdraw the question.

Q. I show you a certain paper, Mr. Lederer, and ask you to read it?

Mr. Burlingham: What are you showing the witness?

Mr. Dorr: A paper.

Mr. Burlingham: Are you going to show it to us?

Mr. Beers: How can we cross-examine him now if we don't see it?

Mr. Dorr: I am showing the witness a paper and ask him to read it and see if it refreshes 2142 his recollection.

Mr. Bullowa: I ask to have the paper marked for identification.

Q. Now, Mr. Lederer, I ask you this question: Can you state positively whether there is or is not an agreement by which the different lines mentioned in the conference shared the losses or profits through running reduced rate steamers?

Mr. Burlingham: Will you kindly inform the stenographer what you have shown the witness so that we may have the benefit of that?

Mr. Dorr: I have shown the witness a paper.

Mr. Bullowa: Will you have it marked for identification?

Mr. Dorr: I haven't the slightest objection.

Paper with the figures 39 in the upper corner marked Exhibit No. 207 for identification.

Mr. Burlingham: It seems to me if Mr. Lederer answered the question he should be asked if his recollection was refreshed from the paper.

(Question read.)

2144

Mr. Bullowa: It seems to me before you put that question you should ask the witness if he read it.

The Witness: No, I didn't have a chance to read that.

Q. Oh, you didn't; I will lay it before your eyes (handing witness paper); have you read it? A. Yes, sir.

(Question read.) A. There is not.

Recess taken until 2:00 P. M.

2145

Afternoon session.

EMIL LEDERER, recalled:

Direct-examination continued by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Lederer, do you recall whether there was any discussion between you and the other members of the so-called small committee, as to arranging for a remuneration to be given by the other Conference Lines to that line whose steamer was selected to put in effect the reduced rate? A. I do not.

2146 Q. Didn't that question ever come up at all in that small committee? A. No.

Q. Did it ever come up with Mr. Boas? Did you ever take it up with Mr. Boas? A. No.

Q. Did you ever discuss it with him at all? A. No, sir.

Q. Were you familiar with the general provision of agreement "AA" which has been offered in evidence, to the effect that the various parties to that agreement would share proportionately in the steerage traffic? A. I have heard of that agreement.

2147 Q. That is, you knew that there was that agreement between the various Conference Lines that were parties to that agreement to the effect that each one would be entitled to a certain pro rata share of the North Atlantic steerage traffic? A. Yes.

Mr. Spooner: Which agreement is that?

Mr. Dorr: Agreement "AA."

Mr. Spooner: That speaks for itself, doesn't it?

Mr. Dorr: Yes; I am asking him about his knowledge of it.

Q. Now, what was the practice under that agreement in determining the pro rata shares; what was the 2148 practice as to those passengers who were carried by the reduced rate ships; were they considered and treated as part of the pro rata share of the particular lines whose steamer was designated to run at the reduced rate? A. I don't know that.

Q. Had not you had any conversation with Mr. Boas or any other officer of your line in regard to that? A. No.

Q. You have no information whatever on the subject? A. No.

Q. Direct or indirect? A. No.

Q. In regard to how those pro rata shares were arrived at? A. No.

Q. Or how they were affected by the passengers which were carried on the reduced rate ships? A. No.

Q. Now, at times it happened, did it not, Mr. Lederer, that more passengers would be booked for a reduced rate ship than that ship could carry, that happened did it not at times? A. It did happen that ships were overbooked.

Q. And it happened in regard to these reduced rate ships, did it not? A. It may happen in the case of a 2150 ship.

Q. Haven't you information definite enough on the subject to say whether or not it did in fact happen as to such ships? A. It happened frequently in the fall and winter seasons.

Q. And it happened in regard to these reduced rate ships? A. It may have happened.

Q. When you say may, what degree of certainty have you in your mind, Mr. Lederer; aren't you basing that on information which you obtained as a passenger man, steerage passenger man of your line? A. I can speak only for the steamers of the Hamburg-American Line.

Q. Hadn't it happened in the experience of your 2151 line? A. Yes.

Q. In regard to these reduced rate ships? A. All ships.

Q. Including the reduced rate ships? A. All ships.

Q. Now, whenever you overbooked on these reduced rate ships, what did you do with the passengers who had been so overbooked? A. When we overbooked on any ship—

Q. I am talking about these particular ships? A. It applies to all ships that you mention.

2152 Q. I am asking you about the reduced rate ships; now what did you do in regard to that? A. I made no distinction between reduced rate ships—

Q. Just a minute, Mr. Lederer? A. It applies to all ships.

Q. Just answer my question first, Mr. Lederer and then your counsel will bring out anything that he desires in connection with the matter. Now what did you do in regard to passengers who were overbooked for a reduced rate ship; what has been your practice? A. I don't know exactly what you mean by reduced rate ships.

2153 Q. What I called fighting ships, when a fighting ship or defending ship, if you prefer to call it such, when overbooked, what did you do with the surplus passengers whom you were unable to carry on that particular ship? A. I don't know what you mean, your expression "fighting ships;" you mean opposition steamer?

Q. I am talking now about the ships which are mentioned in that letter which I just showed you, supposed to be appointed by the small committee; you know what I mean? A. Passengers that were overbooked in every case were transferred to the first outgoing steamer.

2154 Q. That is, if you overbooked for a so-called fighting ship, you would transfer them to the first outgoing steamer of your line or some other line? A. Passengers overbooked by any ship are transferred.

Q. Just answer my question. A. (Continuing.) To the next following ship.

Q. Did you when you overbooked passengers for a fighting ship, transfer the surplus passengers to the first outgoing ship, irrespective of what line that was? A. I cannot recognize the term "fighting ship."

Q. You recognize—you have heard some of these letters of the Holland-Amerika Line read in evidence, have you not? A. Only one.

Q. Well, do you recognize the term "defending ship"? I believe that was the expression which was used by the answer of your line; do you recognize what that word means? A. Yes, defending ship, opposition steamer.

Q. Well then, using your term defending ship, when a defending ship if you prefer that to a fighting ship, had overbooked, did you transfer the surplus passengers to the first outgoing ship, irrespective of what line that ship belonged to? A. Yes.

Q. Did your line pay the other line for those passengers, if the first ship happened to be a ship of another line? A. Undoubtedly our line paid for those passengers.

Q. What rates did they pay? A. I don't know.

Q. Did they pay the rate which you had been charging those passengers, or did they pay a higher rate? A. I couldn't state that; payments were made on the other side.

Q. Well, can you state positively whether any payments at all were made? A. I have no doubt that our company paid for the passengers overbooked, transferred.

Q. Now, you have definite information that payments were made and that those overbooked passengers were not reckoned in on the pro rating of the passenger traffic? A. I have no idea as to that.

Q. Then you don't mean to say positively that there were any payments made whatever? A. I am sure that our company paid for the passage of the overbooked passengers.

Q. Have you any information as to whether they paid the regular published rate of the other line or whether they paid the same rate which they had received from these passengers themselves? A. I don't know, but I can obtain that information for you if you so desire.

Q. You have no information about that on this side in your office? A. No; payments were not made on this side. The line simply accepted the passengers and honored our tickets. In other words our passengers were forwarded under our tickets, on our tickets; the settlement was left to the other side.

Q. Now, just before recess, Mr. Lederer, I understood you to say that there was no arrangement by which the steamers of other lines shared either the profits or losses if there were any, resulting from the operation of the reduced rate ships; there was no such agreement? A. Not that I know of.

2159 Q. Now, on a rate of $20, would there be a loss in carrying passengers? A. I don't think so.

Q. If passengers were carried in large numbers at $20, would there not be a profit? A. Perhaps.

Q. Well, cannot you speak more positively than that about it, Mr. Lederer? A. No.

Q. Have you any more accurate information about it now than you had in 1910? A. No.

Q. Did you not state in 1910 that they certainly could be carried at a profit?

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that.

Q. Haven't you stated on some occasion in 1910
2160 that they certainly could be carried at a profit? A. I refer to my answer to your last question.

Q. Just answer this question, if you will, Mr. Lederer? A. My last answer covers that question.

Q. I show you and ask you again to look at this Exhibit 207 for identification, and read the same (handing book to witness)?

Mr. Spooner: Are you reading that, Mr. Lederer?

The Witness: I am trying to read it.

Mr. Spooner: What are you reading from?

Mr. Dorr: From the paper which I showed him, Senator Spooner.

2161

The Witness: Typewritten book.

Mr. Spooner: Testimony given before—

Mr. Dorr: I object to the witness being interrupted; not cross-examination. I ask the witness to look at the paper, and I object to my examination being interrupted.

Q. Well, at the $21 or thereabouts on your reduced rate ships, did you not make a profit in your steerage business? A. We do.

Mr. Dorr: Your witness.

2162

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Spooner:

Q. Mr. Lederer, when you were testifying this afternoon the District Attorney handed you a book, open book, do you remember? A. Yes.

Q. And called your attention to something in it? A. Yes.

Q. Did you read it? A. I did.

Q. What was it? A. A question.

Q. I know but— A. Which I remembered to be one that was asked of me by the United States District Attorney in an investigation before the Grand Jury.

2163

Q. That was marked as an exhibit, was it not, for identification, No. 207?

Mr. Spooner: Will you permit me to see that page, Mr. District Attorney, for the purpose of cross-examination?

Mr. Dorr: For the purpose of cross-examination.

Mr. Spooner: Of the witness; that page only.

Mr. Dorr: I do not suppose you want to see anything more except those matters that relate 2164 particularly to the questions asked of the witness?

Mr. Spooner: That is all.

Mr. Dorr: I prefer to take the matter up with you tomorrow. I am perfectly willing to state on the record that there is nothing in the exhibit for identification which does not agree with the testimony which the witness has just given, if that is what is in your mind?

Mr. Spooner: Will you be kind enough to permit me to have before me that page which you showed the witness and which was his own testimony on a former examination on the same subject, for the purpose of cross-examin-2165 ing him.

Mr. Dorr: I do at this time. I have no objection to your postponing the cross-examination, until I can give you a final answer on that.

Mr. Spooner: I have no right to ask him what he testified to before the Grand Jury?

Mr. Dorr: I take it neither of us have.

Mr. Spooner: Of course, you have no right to do directly what you have no right to do indirectly, and you have no right to do indirectly what you have no right to do directly. I want to confine myself entirely to what you 2166 showed the witness and not interrogate him about anything else.

Mr. Dorr: At this time this is a paper marked for identification.

Mr. Spooner: But you used it.

Mr. Dorr: And the contents of it have not been brought out by my questions or the witness's answers, it seems to me.

Mr. Spooner: Did not you ask him whether he testified what it was?

Mr. Dorr: No, I did not.

Mr. Bullowa: You asked him to refresh his recollection.

Mr. Spooner: My recollection is you did ask him.

Mr. Dorr: I think, Senator, I did not; in fact, I am quite sure I didn't. Of course the record will show.

Mr. Spooner: Can you turn back readily?

Mr. Dorr: I ask him this, which may be what you have in mind; I asked him whether he did not state at a previous time a certain thing.

2168

Mr. Spooner: You handed it to him to read, did you not?

Mr. Dorr: No; I ask him whether he had made such a statement; that is all.

Mr. Spooner: You could not have asked him that without using the Grand Jury testimony.

Mr. Dorr: You are assuming, pure assumption on your part. He does not know and cannot know what these papers are, from the very nature of them.

Mr. Spooner: Why, cannot he know?

Mr. Dorr: If they were what you think they are he certainly could not.

Q. Mr. Lederer, suppose—take the case of a fighting ship, or a defending ship or whatever you call it, designated to sail on the same day, or approximately a near day, of a ship belonging to the independent or opposition lines, under this agreement who would have the profit and loss of that ship; I mean, who would have the profit and who would have the loss of the fighting ship, in respect of steerage passengers? A. The profit and the loss of the respective ships is borne by the owner.

2170 Q. And the profits in the transportation of the steerage passengers? A. By the owners.

Q. All of it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, what the District Attorney was trying to get at, I think, was what proportion, if any, of profits or loss, loss we will call it, would be borne by the Conference Lines in case of a fighting ship? A. I understand that the difference between the reduced rate and the regular rate, with a certain maximum, would be borne by the lines, members of the agreement "AA," in accordance with the proportion allotted to them under the agreement.

2171 Q. That is all there is to that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You speak of meeting competition of the so-called independent ships; what did you mean by that? A. I mean that we had to take the necessary steps to protect our interests. We could not afford to sit by idly and see—

Q. That I understand; that is the reason for sending the ship, the defending ship. I am speaking now of the rate which was made on the defending ship; was that a rate which simply met the independent or outside ship, or was it a rate which cut under the rate of the outside ship? A. We have never fixed our rate below that of the competing steamer.

2172 Q. Simply met their rate? A. We have met their rate far enough to secure to ourselves a proper share of the business, or in other words, to prevent the competing steamers from running away with all our business.

Q. You say you have met their rates; you stopped there, is that what you mean you did? A. We quoted sometimes a rate that was higher than the one advertised by the competing ship, but in no case did we reduce our rate below their actual rates.

Mr. Spooner: I expect to resume this, but will leave it for the present.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Lederer, are you quite positive that no ship of your line reduced its rates below the published rate of the independent line? A. Below the actual rate.

Q. It is true then that you reduced it below the published rates of the other lines; your published rate was lower than their published rates? A. The published rate of the Uranium Steamship Line, for instance, if that is the line you have reference to.

Q. Just answer my question; did you reduce it below the published rate of the Uranium Steamship Company? A. No.

Q. Never did? A. No.

Q. There is no mistake about that (handing witness Government's Exhibit 84) being one of your circulars, Mr. Lederer? A. No.

Q. No mistake about the rate you advertised there being $24, is there? A. No.

Q. And if at that time the published rate of the Uranium Line was $26, then your statement would be an error, would it not? A. Yes.

Q. There was some question arose, I think by Senator Spooner, in regard to certain of these exhibits, for instance, Exhibit 85; was that a regular advertisement issued by your line as to the rates on the Graf Waldersee? A. Not a regular advertisement, no.

Q. Was it an advertisement which was issued by your line? A. A special circular and postal card.

Q. Sent out to the public or your agents? A. To agents, apparently.

Q. And for the sale of tickets, to inform them as to prices at which they should sell tickets on your line? A. For a certain steamer and day.

Mr. Spooner: That was admitted to be true, wasn't it?

The Witness: Contains all rates, first cabin, second cabin, third cabin and steerage.

2176 Mr. Spooner: They admitted they issued it, but they claim the steerage was not accurate as applied to particular lines, mentioned in the testimony.

The Witness: A mistake seems to have been made in quoting the steerage rate.

Q. What is the mistake? A. This appears to be a special notice of the sailing of the Graf Waldersee, January 15th, from New York, quoting the rate in the first cabin, second cabin and third cabin, also steerage rate, but the steerage rate is evidently wrong.

2177 Q. What is the error? A. From the circular which you showed me a minute ago, it appears that there is a discrepancy between the two circulars.

Q. When do you fix the rate for your steamers? A. Rates are subject to change.

Q. When do you begin to publish rates for steamers such as the Graf Waldersee, how long before the sailing? A. The rate is changed from time to time.

Q. When do you begin to publish the rate sheet, how long before the sailing of the ship? A. There is a regular published tariff by our company, quoting steerage rates for all steamers. If a change is made, agents are notified of that change by a special circular, until the tariff, regular tariff is reissued, cor-

2178 rected accordingly.

Q. Well, now, do you mean to say that the rate advertised on Government Exhibit 85, does not conform to the general tariff issued by your company for that sailing? A. I stated that inasmuch as the two circulars which you have shown me quote different rates, one of them must be wrong; apparently this (indicating) is wrong.

Q. The second circular, if I may call to your attention, Government's Exhibit 84, refers to reduction of the steerage outward rate. Isn't it a fact that you first advertised the rate of $35 subsequently announced the reduction of that rate to $24? A. The circular which you call the second one, may have been the first one; if you will let me see it.

Q. Just answer that question; is that what may have been the situation? A. This circular does not bear a date, and that one (indicating) does.

Q. Just answer my question. Did you at times reduce the rates, change the rates that had been published? A. Rates are subject to change at any time.

Q. Did you not in fact change the rates on certain steamers? A. Subject to changes at any minute.

Q. Didn't you change them on certain steamers? A. Certainly we did change them.

Q. What is it that makes you think Government's Exhibit 85, which appears to have been sent out by your line for information of agents, was not accurate information at the time it was sent out? A. If you will trust me with the other circular, I will settle that question definitely.

Q. What is it that makes you think that that is not accurate?

Mr. Spooner: The issue of the other circular.

A. It seems you do not want me to bring out facts. If you will show me that other circular, I would settle it absolutely.

Q. Give me your answer, Mr. Lederer? A. I cannot give you any answer to that.

Q. You cannot say what it is that makes you say that was incorrect at the time it was published; there is nothing on the face of it to indicate? A. There are two circulars quoting different rates for one ship. One of these circulars must quote an incorrect rate.

Q. Suppose the rates had been changed; they may be both correct at the time they were issued, might they not? A. No; special circulars quoting different rates.

2182 Q. You never changed the rate of any steamer then? A. We changed them lots of times.

Q. Might not two publications, different rates of the same steamer, both be accurate if they were published different times? A. Well, let me see the other circular.

Q. Just answer that question? A. I cannot answer it.

Q. You cannot answer that? A. No.

Q. What is the date of that circular? A. If you want the truth, let me see the two circulars.

2183 Q. Just confine yourself to answering questions? A. You don't give me a chance to answer a question.

Q. Confine yourself to answering what questions are asked you. Simply because there is no judge before whom you may be reprimanded, don't take advantage of that fact. What is the date of that circular? A. Apparently there is no date.

Q. Circular 85; have you any means of ascertaining when that was issued? A. I think I have.

Q. What are they? A. I will be able to state when you show me the other circular.

Q. If you see the other circular you will be able to tell when this was issued? A. I think so, yes.

2184 Q. Well, let us see if you can (handing witness the circular)? A. This circular which you called the second circular, was issued January 8th.

Q. When was the other one issued? A. And the second circular which you called the first circular, was printed January 10th; consequently this must be the second circular and your second circular is the first circular.

Q. How do you know that was printed at that date? A. Look in the left-hand corner and you will see the date of the printing.

Q. Is that the date when it was issued or the date when the bill sent forth? A. That is the date it was printed and it was issued after that date, and shows conclusively that the rate printed thereon is wrong, is incorrect.

Q. I show you another circular, Government's Exhibit 87, and ask you whether it is a regularly published circular of your line? A. I can't remember what the rate was two years ago, two years and six months ago on a particular ship and date.

Q. You can't say whether that was regularly issued or not? A. This is not a regular circular; I explained that that was a special notice.

Q. Now, to come back to this Graf Waldersee circular, which you say is the second one, Government's Exhibit 85, as a matter of fact, was not that the third? Wasn't it a fact that you published the regular rate of the Graf Waldersee for $35, subsequently on January 8th reduced to $24, and after that when you found that the sailing of the Uranium had been postponed from the 15th to the 18th that you reissued the original rate of $35; now, isn't that the fact? A. No, you are wrong.

Q. You are positive that is not the fact? A. You are wrong, positively.

Q. What do you take to be the fact? A. Well, I will look it up and give you the records.

Q. How do you account for the issuance of this $35 after the issuance of the $24 and coincidental or substantially coincidental with the postponement of the sailing of the Uranium from the date of January 15th? A. Clerical error.

Q. Look at that circular, Government Exhibit No. 87; what have you to say as to that? A. What is the question, Mr. Dorr?

Q. Is that a circular which is issued to your agents for information as to rates? A. It is a postal card.

Q. Correct, so far as you know? A. Yes.

Q. I show you Exhibit No. 89, is that a circular reducing the earlier rate? A. That is a circular quot-2188 ing the rate for a different steamer and a different date; that is the second error.

Q. I showed you, I think, Government Exhibit No. 87, look at Government Exhibit No. 90, and I ask whether that is a regularly issued circular by your line to agents? A. A special notice announcing the cabin rates and incidentally of the steerage rates.

Q. Was that a correct statement of the steerage rate? A. I presume so.

Q. And is this Government Exhibit No. 89 a circular reducing that steerage rate? A. A special circular announcing a reduction of the steerage outward 2189 rate for the President Grant, scheduled to leave New York February 5th, 1910.

Q. Now, both of those are circulars announcing rates for that ship by your line, are they not? A. Yes.

Q. Both of them were correct at the time they were issued? A. Yes.

Q. Turning again to this circular No. 87, the President Lincoln, as I recall, you were in doubt as to whether that was the correct rate or not; I ask you whether you can state whether that is the correct rate? A. Wrong.

Q. It is an incorrect rate? A. Yes.

2190 Q. What is it that shows you that that was incorrect? A. Let me see that circular, please?

Q. Are you in the habit of issuing incorrect circulars all the time? A. That will happen in the best regulated families.

Q. And true in the same month, or even a month between? A. I have only admitted the clerical error in this one case.

Q. I understood you to admit the clerical error in the case of the Graf Waldersee, or what you state to be a clerical error; do I understand you to say this is also wrong? A. Don't try to juggle the deck of cards here; I can't make head or tail of it.

Q. They are your cards? A. Don't try to juggle them up like that. You speak of a bunch of February 5th and shove over circular of January 29th; I don't know what cards you are speaking about.

Q. You have already spoken of this Exhibit No. 87 and I have asked you whether or not it is— A. You have not asked me in reference to this card before, did you?

Q. Now, Mr. Lederer, I ask you again whether this circular which you have just stated is incorrect is or is not correct? A. Which circular?

Q. Government Exhibit No. 87? A. Do you mean 2192 to ask to know whether the steerage rate quoted on this postal card is correct?

Q. Whether the circular is correct; if there is any portion of it which is incorrect call my attention to it? A. I can't state whether the rates in Exhibit No. 87 are correct.

Q. What did you mean when you stated in response to my question that that circular was not correct? A. I didn't refer to this circular.

Q. What circular did you refer to? A. The circular of the Graf Waldersee and to the postal card issued in connection with that sailing.

Q. You cannot tell whether this is correct or not? A. Which one? 2193

Q. Exhibit No. 87? A. Apparently this is correct.

Q. I now show you Exhibit No. 190, and ask whether that circular is not a reduction of the earlier rate, and whether that also is another inaccuracy on your part? A. I have already stated that this is a circular announcing the reduction of the steerage outward of the President Lincoln, scheduled to leave New York for Hamburg, January 29th, to $22.

Q. That is a reduction from the rate that is in Exhibit No. 87? A. That is a reduction to $22; what the previous rate was I don't know.

Q. Doesn't that circular Exhibit No. 87 show you what it was, that it was $35? A. There may have been changes in the railroad rate between the date of the postal card, apparently issued January 10th, and the special circular announcing the reduction under date of January 24th.

Q. Is there anything to indicate to you that that circular No. 87 is incorrect, or was incorrect at the time it was issued? A. This one? Which one?

Q. Exhibit No. 87? A. I stated before that this circular apparently is correct.

Q. And this, the Government Exhibit No. 190, is, is it not, a reduction either from the rate advertised by the Government Exhibit No. 87, or some intermediate rate between those two? A. Evidently.

Q. I show you Government Exhibit No. 164, under date of January 3rd, 1910, and call your attention to the published steerage rate of $25 to Rotterdam, and $28 to Hamburg, and ask whether or not you are still prepared to say that you did not reduce your rate before that published rate of the Uranium? A. I maintain my position.

Q. You did not reduce it below? A. We certainly did not.

Q. What is the published rate to Rotterdam? A. I want to call your attention—

Q. One minute; what is the published rate to Rotterdam? A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know? A. No.

Q. Steerage rate to Rotterdam $25, and that does not mean published rates? A. That does not mean anything. I wish to state that when the Hamburg Line publishes a rate of $25 it means what is said, $25; when the Uranium Line has a rate of $25 it means nothing, and I will prove it by your own circular.

Q. That is, when you issue a rate of $35 it means $35? A. Yes.

Q. Until a fighting ship is put out and then you put it down to $22? A. It means exactly what each circular calls for. I will prove it by your own circular—

Q. That is not my circular; it is a circular issued under the stress of competition? A. Ninety-five per cent of the passengers that went on that ship didn't know they were going on that ship.

Q. That, of course, you know of your own perosnal knowledge? A. I am certain of it.

Q. But on this Graf Waldersee your tickets were purchased at the published rate of $35 and there were also those who purchased tickets at $24? A. That is not very likely to have been the case.

Q. You advertised tickets for sale for $35, did you not? A. Passengers generally bought tickets—

Q. Did you not? A. I testified to that before.

Q. You did then advertise a rate of $35? A. Yes.

Q. And in the ordinary course passengers would have purchased those tickets, would they not? A. If the rate had remained $35 they would have bought tickets at $35.

Q. It remained $35, did it not, until shortly before the sailing of the ship, within a week before the sailing of the ship? A. The exact date is given in our circular.

Q. What date is that? A. You have the circular.

Q. January 28th; that is exactly one week before the sailing of the ship? A. This circular was issued January 28th.

Q. You mean to tell me that you did not sell tickets to passengers more than one week before the sailing of the ship? A. Very rarely that a ticket is sold prior to one week before the sailing; in fact, ninety per cent of the tickets are bought one day before the sailing.

2200 Q. Have you the records of the purchase of tickets for that steamer? A. I think I can get it for you.

Q. Suppose you produce them tomorrow. It frequently does happen, does it not, however, that the passenger purchases at the higher rate, tickets at the higher rate, which you subsequently reduce, Mr. Lederer? A. Very rarely.

Q. When it does happen what do you do? A. We refund the money.

Q. In all cases? A. Yes.

Q. Irrespective of whether the passenger makes claim or not? A. When it calls for the same destina-2201 tion.

Q. Irrespective of whether the passenger makes the claim or not? A. We refund all differences at the dock prior to the embarkation of passengers.

Q. Irrespective of whether the passenger makes any claim? A. Yes.

Q. Suppose you produce the records of that ship and the refund? A. What kind of record do you want, Mr. Dorr?

Q. I want the record you have of the transactions? A. We have all kinds of records for those ships.

Q. I want the correct one, showing in full? A. Showing what?

2202 Q. The original record is what I want? A. We have only original records here.

Q. Showing the number of tickets you sold at the original rate, the number of tickets sold at the next reduced rate, if there were more than one and the amounts of the refund? A. All right.

Q. And any records that you have which show any extra remuneration which your line received from other lines as to or any compensation for running a reduced rate ship? A. I haven't any such records and I cannot produce them.

Q. Well, produce what you have got? A. Then, that is all.

Mr. Spooner: I reserve the right to recall the witness.

MAX STRAUS, sworn on behalf of the Government, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Straus, what is your business? A. I am a 2204 member of the firm of E. A. Johnson & Company, general passenger agents, of the Russian-American Line.

Q. Are you a defendant of this proceeding? A. I am subpoenaed.

Q. Are you a defendant in this proceeding? A. I don't know that I am.

Q. Are you a defendant in this case? A. I suppose I am.

Q. How long have you been in the steamship business? A. With the Russian-American Line?

Q. How long have you been in the steamship business? A. Oh, I have been in the steamship business 2205 for about twenty-five years.

Q. What lines have you been with during that time? A. The Scandinavia-American Line and Russian-American Line.

Q. Between what ports does the Scandinavian-American Line ply? A. Christiansand, Christiana and Copenhagen.

Q. Those are the only ports between which vessels of that line ply? A. Yes.

Q. How long has that line been in existence? A. I believe for about twenty-five years.

2206 Max Straus

Q. Is it a member of the North-Atlantic Conference? A. I don't think so.

Q. Continental Conference? A. No, sir.

Q. Of any conference? A. No, sir, except in New York, if that is what you mean.

Q. Is it a member of the North-Atlantic Conference? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Is it? A. Yes, New York.

Q. How long has it been a member of the North Atlantic conference? A. Ever since it is in existence.

2207 Q. Ever since the conference is in existence or the line is in existence? A. The line.

Q. Has it at any time ceased to be a member of the conference? A. No.

Q. Has it been engaged in the steerage traffic? A. Yes.

Q. The North-Atlantic steerage traffic? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many ships has it? A. At present we have four steamers in that particular trade.

Q. Do you know whether your line is a party to an agreement with which the amount of the steerage traffic is regulated? A. No, sir.

2208 Q. You don't know? A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. What is your information on the subject, derived from officers and agents of the line? A. We have no information on that subject whatsoever.

Mr. Spooner: When you say your line, you refer to the Scandinavian Line?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. You have no information whatever upon that point? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you at any time represented a non-conference line? A. Yes.

2209

Q. What non-conference line was that? A. The Russian-American Line, Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Ltd.

Q. You represented both lines at the same time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the time when the—is the Russian-American Line a member of the conference? A. No, sir; we were not a member of the conference when they started in.

Q. You were not a member? A. We were not; we applied.

Q. When did the Russian-American Line start in business? A. About five years ago.

Q. In 1907? A. Yes.

Q. At that time, what ships did you have? A. We had, I think, three or four steamers.

Q. What were they? A. One of them was called the "Estonia," "Artania," "Lituania," "Birma."

Q. Were those the only steamships that your line operated at that time? A. And the "Courier."

Q. Those were the only steamers that your line operated at that time, in 1907 or 1906? A. That is right, between New York and Libau, in 1907.

Q. When did you begin operating these steamers? A. I couldn't give you the exact dates; I think it was in April.

2211

Q. April, 1907? A. I think so.

Q. Were any of these steamers operated in that trade prior to that time? A. Not that I know of.

Q. What trade had they been operated in? A. In the Far East; in the Vladivostock trade.

Q. And all of them had been operated by your line in that Vladivostock trade? A. That I couldn't tell, because I don't know.

Q. What is your information? A. I haven't any information on that subject.

2212 Q. Did you become a member of the Continental Conference shortly after the institution of this line?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as immaterial and irrelevant, and not within the issues.

A. I believe about ten or eleven months after they started in, we applied immediately and were admitted to the conference.

Q. That would be in 1908, would it not? A. I think so.

Q. You were not a member of the conference prior to 1908? A. Not for the Russian-American Line.

2213 Q. Are you quite clear about that? A. Quite clear.

Mr. Spooner: What do you mean by a conference, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. Dorr: The Continental Conference.

Mr. Beers: The agreement "AA"?

Mr. Dorr: What I mean is that group of lines who were trading together known under some agreements, formal or informal, as the Continental Conference.

Mr. Beers: But the agreement "AA" makes certain provisions for the lines being called a conference, and you have also referred to this New York Conference and the Continental 2214 Conference and the North Atlantic Conference.

Mr. Dorr: My information was that prior to 1908 there were two, more or less, independent conferences, the North Atlantic and the Continental Conferences, each of which had related agreements, and in 1908 the two conferences were consolidated informally, if not formally, into the American Atlantic, and all the lines which were parties to the two conferences became parties to that agreement "AA." That is just my understanding of it.

2215

Mr. Beers: But you are not now speaking of the arrangement in New York?

Mr. Dorr: You mean the "AA" agreement?

Mr. Beers: When you used the expression "conference" you did not mean this New York Conference, dealing with the local lines here, with the agents of the railroads?

Mr. Dorr: I am not; not exclusively.

Witness: Excuse me; my answer only referred to the New York conferences because I know nothing else of any other conference.

Q. Isn't it a fact that your line has been a member of the Continental Conference down to about December, 1907, and that then it ceased to be? A. Not that I know of, and I certainly would know it if they were members of the conference while we were passenger agents and agents of the company.

Q. Between what points did the Russian-American Line run? A. New York, Rotterdam, Libau.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the steamship conference lines reduced their rates on or about the sailing dates of the ships of the Russian-American Line in 1908, prior to the summer thereof? A. I might not know the exact date, but the conference lines had reduced their rates against the Russian-American Line; what particular date I could not tell you, except you give me some circular to refer to.

Q. Do you recall the date when you joined or rejoined, as the fact may be, the Continental Conference; does this refresh your recollection, if you do not (handing witness paper)? A. Yes, I do recall that.

Q. That was September, 1908, was it not? A. Yes.

Q. I notice that you testify positively that was the first time your line belonged to the conference? A. Yes.

Q. I now call your attention to Government Exhibit No. 141? A. We were not agents of the Russian-American Line; this is December 27, 1906?

Q. Yes? A. We were not agents of the Russian-American Line or the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Ltd., at that time, and therefore I know nothing of it.

Q. Yes, but I understood you to testify, Mr. Straus, that you became agent when this line was instituted and that the ships which were in that line had prior to that time been engaged in the East Asiatic trade? A. Yes, but I know nothing about this at all, because 2219 this is long before the Russian-American Line, and you are speaking of the Russian East Asiatic Line, Ltd.

Q. By whom are the steamers of the Russian-American Line owned? A. They are owned by Russian capital on the other side.

Q. By the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Ltd.? A. That I couldn't tell you.

Q. Is there any corporation known as the Russian-American Line? A. Yes.

Q. When was that formed? A. I couldn't give you the exact date of that. I think I file a report here at Washington each year, which gives it.

2220 Q. Was that prior to the time you became agent or afterwards? A. I don't think the Russian-American Line was formed prior to the time we became agents; about the Russian East Asiatic Line prior to that I know nothing.

Q. What were the ships of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. Prior?

Q. In 1907 or 1906? A. In 1906 I don't know anything about those steamers.

Q. You were a steamship man at the time? A. Yes.

Q. And the agent of the Scandinavian Line? A. Yes, but not interested in that.

Q. And you have no information as to what steamers were operated by the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Ltd.? A. Not interested in them at all.

Q. I call your attention to this answer which purports to be the answer of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Ltd., Alexander E. Johnson & Max Straus? A. Well, the Russian-American Line is a line supposed to be owned by the Russian East Asiatic Company, Ltd.

Q. I understood you to say you didn't know who owned it? A. I don't know who owns the line, no, sir.

Q. You verified this answer, did you not? A. I suppose I verified an answer, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Q. This answer admits, does it not, the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Ltd., is operated in competition between Libau and New York? A. Yes, but the name of the line we represented is the Russian-American Line and the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Ltd.

Q. In other words, that is simply a subsidiary of the Russian East Asiatic Company, Limited? A. I wouldn't wonder.

Q. When you speak of becoming a member of the Conference, the Russian East Asiatic Company, Limited, became a member of the Conference, didn't it? A. I wouldn't say that; I wouldn't like to say that because I don't know.

Q. Here is a circular dated September 1, 1906, which states that the Russian American Line (the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited), was a member of the Conference, is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. That it is a fact, is it not, that the Russian East Asiatic Company, Limited, rejoined the Conference?

A. Well, you can put it any way you like, but I don't know anything about the Russian East Asiatic prior to the time I was agent of the company.

Q. Have you any question that these earlier circulars of the Continental Conference are accurate, the circular of December 27, 1906, Government Exhibit No. 140, which states that agents are advised that the "Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, has this day resigned Conference membership"? A. It might be accurate and it might not, but I really know nothing about it.

2225 Q. But it is the same steamship company that you now represent, is it not? A. The Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, is the company that we represent.

Q. And yet, when you became its agents, it was not a member of the Conference? A. It was not.

Q. And from that time until it did become a member of the Conference, you met with the opposition of the Conference Lines which were sailing at reduced rates? A. Yes.

Q. At or about your sailing dates? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall when this opposition ceased? A. I think it ceased in September, when I joined the Conference in New York.

2226 Q. What was the arrangement which the members of your company had with the other lines which were members of the Conference as to steerage transportation or transportation of steerage passengers? A. The arrangement we had is simply to live up to the rules and regulations of Conference in regulating agencies.

Q. Do you mean to say that there is no agreement by which the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, secured a certain pro rata share of the steerage passenger business of the North Atlantic? A. No, sir; all I know is that we pay a pro rata to the Conference in order to maintain it.

Q. You pay a pro rata share? A. Yes.

Q. State just what you mean? A. For instance, it takes probably fifteen or twenty thousand dollars a year to run a Conference and our share is probably five hundred dollars or six hundred dollars a year; we pay our share towards the payment of Sandford's salary, or the official salaries of those there.

Q. Do you mean to say there is no agreement between the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited; no agreement since September, 1908, by which the Russian East Asiatic Company, Limited, is allowed a certain pro rata share of the steerage passenger business of the North Atlantic? A. What they are allowed I don't know; they may be allowed a percentage, but what that percentage is, I don't know anything about it.

Q. What is your best information; that they are allowed a percentage, is it not? A. I believe they are.

Q. What are the sources of that belief or that information? A. I suppose one has to have a certain amount of imagination. They know there must be some percentage, but what that percentage is, I don't know.

Mr. Spooner: You cannot imagine?

Witness: No, I can imagine lots of things.

2229

Q. Have you had any— A. I don't know that there is any percentage; I don't talk of it.

Q. What are the sources of your knowledge about the matter? A. Conversations, possibly.

Q. With whom? A. I don't remember with whom.

Q. With representatives of your line? A. Not our line, no, sir.

Q. Have you ever had any conversation with any representatives of your line? A. Yes.

Q. Who are the officers of your line? A. The president of our line is M. Bonasobsky.

2230 Max Straus

Q. Are there any officers in this country? A. No, sir.

Q. You have been on the other side in Conference with them? A. No, sir.

Q. Never? A. No, sir.

Q. Have any of them been here? A. Yes, one of the members of the company was here about a year or so ago.

Q. Did you learn from him anything about the relation of your line to the other lines? A. I never discussed the question with him.

2231 Q. Is your firm the agent of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, in this country? A. Yes, we are the passenger agents only.

Q. Who are the freight agents? A. Messrs. Benham & Boyesen.

Q. Are you the general agents? A. We are the general passenger agents; Benham & Boyesen are the general agents.

Q. The corporation which you represent has received a subpoena calling for certain agreements? A. Yes.

Q. What efforts have your corporation made to comply with that subpoena? A. We have no agreements of any kind in our possession.

2232 Q. Your corporation has no agreements of any kind in its possession? A. You mean A. E. Johnson & Company?

Q. No, the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. You have got everything that I have got.

Q. I am not asking you about what you have; I am talking about what your corporation has, of which you are agent? A. The Russian-American Line?

Q. The Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company?

Mr. Bullowa: These are in Europe.

Mr. Dorr: The Russian East Asiatic Company which has appeared in this case.

Witness: We have no agreements—

Mr. Bullowa: We have no agreements.

Q. What steps has your corporation taken to ascertain whether it has these papers in its possession in places other than New York? A. Mr. Bullowa represents the corporation; I don't.

Q. You are the agent of the corporation, are you not? A. Yes, sir; I am general passenger agent.

Q. Well, what steps has the corporation taken so far as you know to comply with the subpoena? A. I believe they have given Mr. Bullowa what they had.

Q. Did you communicate with the home office? A. Yes.

Q. And asked for the various agreements which the subpoena called for? A. Yes, and I understood they communicated with Mr. Bullowa.

Q. Have you a copy of the letter which was sent to the home office? A. I think I can produce it.

Q. In regard to the obedience of that subpoena? A. I think I can produce that.

Q. If you will. Have you had any reply from the corporation? A. Except I had a reply the other day by telephone from someone.

Q. I understood you to say there were no officers of the corporation in this country? A. It was not an officer of the corporation; it was someone who had a right to reply.

Q. Who was that person? A. Must I answer it?

Q. Yes? A. Mr. Bullowa.

Q. Is he an officer of the company? A. Yes, he is their attorney.

Q. And you had no reply from the corporation itself? A. I think they replied something of this kind, that everything will be arranged through Mr. Bullowa.

2236 Q. Have you got the letter? A. I think I can find that letter.

Q. If you will produce that. Your office has kept the records of the passenger transactions of this line? A. Yes.

Q. The records will show the dates of sailing? A. Yes.

Q. And the rates charged? A. Yes.

Q. And the rates published? A. Yes.

Q. Your corporation were, I think, served with a subpoena for the production of various circulars showing the published rates? A. I delivered—

2237 Q. You delivered, did you not, various circulars from 1911 and thereafter, and 1912; where are your earlier circulars? A. I think I explained to you that they were destroyed or thrown in the waste basket prior to receiving notice from you.

Q. You have, however, records which do in fact show the rates you charged for the various ships of your line prior to that time, have you not? A. I don't know; I couldn't say that exactly.

Q. Don't you keep records? A. We keep records, but I don't know whether I have got those.

Q. What tickets you sold, and on what ships and what price? A. We have a record that shows these 2238 things, but I don't think they go so far back.

Q. What did you do with the old records? A. They have been of no material use any more and they may have been destroyed, but if found, I would be glad to deliver them to you.

Q. Suppose you look those records, Mr. Straus, and produce them? A. All right, sir.

Q. You had from time to time, certain correspondence, did you not, with your company? A. Yes.

Q. And correspondence relative to the opposition steamers put on against your line? A. I think so.

Q. And as to what measures should be taken, legally or otherwise, to meet that opposition? A. I don't remember that exactly, legal or otherwise.

Q. You had correspondence about the opposition steamers, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Where is that correspondence? A. I think you will find everything there.

Q. Have you produced it? A. Mr. Bullowa has everything.

Q. Will you produce it now? A. Yes.

Mr. Bullowa: Do you want everything we have got?

Mr. Dorr: Documents pertaining to this very subject. 2240

Mr. Bullowa: I think you ought to specify them.

Q. Have you got them, Mr. Straus? A. Yes, Mr. Bullowa has all I have got.

Q. Do you produce them? A. Yes, you can have everything I have got.

Mr. Bullowa: (Produced papers.) Have them all marked for identification.

Mr. Dorr: I ask to have marked for identification correspondence and papers relating to opposition steamers and the relations of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, with the Conference, produced in obedience to subpoena. 2241

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 208 for identification.

Q. Prior to the re-admission of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, to the Conference—

Mr. Bullowa: Why do you say the re-admission?

2242

Mr. Dorr: The evidence is not in, but I presume the Russian East Asiatic Company—

The Witness: I don't think you should qualify me as to that. I will give you any information I really know anything about, but I don't want to guess at it.

Q. Fortunately we have very definite information that your line formerly was a member of the Conference and I am asking you whether it is true? A. What's the use of asking me about them?

Q. Prior to the re-admission of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, to the Conference, had you conferred with the representatives of any independent line as to measures to be taken to meet the opposition of the Conference Lines? A. If you will leave out the word re-admission, I would rather you leave it out.

Q. Unfortunately we cannot; I have to frame the question on the evidence as it stands, Mr. Straus?

Mr. Beecher: Why don't you say prior to 1906?

A. I will answer the question that I had conferred with other outside lines.

Q. With whom did you confer? A. I conferred with the representative of the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Q. Who was that? A. Mr. Oscar Richard, member of the firm of C. B. Richard & Company.

Q. What measures did you take in regard to the matter? A. We fought back as hard as we could.

Q. Did you employ counsel in the matter? A. I did not.

Q. Mr. Bullowa was not counsel for your line at that time? A. He was counsel, but he was not employed for that purpose.

Q. What further measures did you take? A. Oh, we were willing to fight it out; we didn't care; we knew very well that we would win and get in; we were coming direct from Libau to New York, the only Russian Line that was coming here, and it was only a question of time that we knew we would be admitted into the Conference. 2245

Q. That is, you felt confident you could force the Conference Lines to admit you? A. We didn't have to force at all; there was no forcing; we were glad to get in.

Q. You were a party to the arrangement on the other side by which you were finally admitted to the Conference? A. The company might have been. 2246

Q. Were you? A. Me?

Q. Yes? A. No, not me personally; my company might have.

Q. But you can state positively that there was no forcing on the part of your superiors on the other side of the water? A. Oh, they didn't force us at all.

Q. You were thoroughly familiar with the negotiations? A. I didn't know anything about the negotiations.

Q. How did you know they attempted to force their way in or not? A. Because I know enough about the business to know it would be unnecessary to force anybody. 2247

Q. How long did you remain agents for the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, after you first became agents for that line? A. How long did we remain agents after we became agents?

Q. Yes? A. We are still agents of the Russian East Asiatic Line.

Q. There has not been any break in that relationship? A. None whatsoever.

Q. Do you recall whether or not prior to September, 1908, you represented lines other than the Russian American Line and the Scandinavian Line? A. We represented the Scandinavian-American Line prior, and do represent them now.

Q. Did you sell tickets for any other line other than the Russian-American and the Scandinavian Line? A. Yes, we were sub-agents for all the Conference Lines.

Q. Did you sell tickets for any lines that were not Conference Lines other than the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited? A. No, I don't think we did.

Q. But you did sell them for the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited? A. Yes.

2249 Q. And also for the Conference Lines? A. Yes.

Q. Was there any objection made to your so doing on the ground of Rule 9? A. There might have been objection, but somehow or other we might have had a lot of friends at Court.

Q. It was contrary to the rule of the conference was it not? A. I wouldn't wonder if it was contrary.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, did your line on the other side have a certain understanding with the Holland-American Line? A. About what?

Q. As to this very matter of observance of Rule Number 9? A. That was simply a matter here be-2250 tween the New York Conference and ourselves, that is all.

Q. Now, Mr. Straus, did you communicate to the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, the corporation of which you are the agent, that the Government was subpoenaing—had subpoenaed—an agreement or copy of agreement by which it became a party to the so-called Agreement "AA"? A. I believe Mr. Bullowa did; I don't know whether I did or not.

Q. The corporation has not produced such a supplemental agreement? A. I don't know; I think Mr. Bullowa might have it; I haven't.

Q. You are the agent of the line here, are you not? A. I am general passenger agent.

Q. Does the corporation produce the supplemental agreement? A. I don't know anything about the supplementary agreement or any agreement, and I am sure if there is such an agreement in existence Mr. Bullowa has it or ought to have it.

Q. Yes, but the process is directed towards the corporation, and as I understand it you are their general passenger agent and representative in this country? A. That is correct.

Q. Does the corporation produce that agreement or not; if not do you desire to state any reason why it has failed to do so? A. I received a telephone message as I told you from Mr. Bullowa in reference to this matter which might clear the situation. If you wish—I had my stenographer make a memorandum of it.

Q. Do you desire further time for your corporation to produce this document?

Mr. Bullowa: Mr. Dorr, as a matter of self-evident thing you served a subpoena on the 12th of June and it takes at least twelve days to go to Libau; we couldn't possibly have produced it by this time.

Q. I am asking Mr. Straus whether he desires to have further time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have taken steps to notify the corporation that that document has been required, the corporation did you? A. We went so far as receiving no answer cabled, and they informed Mr. Bullowa that they never received his letters on that subject; it had been mislaid or misdirected.

Q. Then you anticipate that the corporation will be in a position to produce those documents at a subsequent hearing? A. I am quite certain of it.

2254 Max Straus

Q. There is no disposition on the part of the corporation to do otherwise than to produce it? A. No, sir.

Q. Well then, if you will take such steps as you can to expedite its production? A. We will.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Bullowa:

Q. As I understand the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, were doing business in this country before you represented them, prior to 2255 your becoming the agents for them? A. Yes, I believe they were doing business prior.

Q. When you represented it you thought it advisable, rather than have the name Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, you called it the Russian-American Line? A. Yes.

Q. And the Russian-American Line is simply a trade name? A. I believe so.

Q. In 1908 you were informed, I understand, by cable that you were admitted to a conference? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know anything about the terms of that agreement? A. No, sir.

Q. You have never been informed? A. Never was 2256 informed.

Q. You don't know anything that transpired in Europe? A. No, sir.

Q. Since that time I assume you have been informed that you are out of the conference? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand your information was that some time in September you entered the conference and got out of it some time in February, 1911? A. I received that information from you.

Q. While you were out of the conference prior to 1908, did you have any difficulty in getting passengers? A. Certainly, we had difficulty, it was not such an easy matter.

Q. Did you get your full share? A. We never get the full share, you know.

Q. You always want more? A. We always want a little more.

Q. Now Mr. Straus, you know that prior to the agreement so-called "AA" by the District Attorney, what was the method in which steamship agents did business with the different steamship companies? A. Prior to that? Of course you mean prior to the Conference?

Q. Yes? A. The Conference has been in existence many years.

Q. Well, prior to that? A. And sometimes the Conference would disband due to some misunderstanding between the different lines, then everbody goes out and pays as high as they can, $2 commission, $3 commission, $4 commission, $5 commission, if necessary, and reduces the rates cut the rates as low as $10 to Hamburg; I have seen it—I have reason to say that I know of the rates being as low as $6 to Hamburg net, and $1 to Chicago by the Pennsylvania Railroad, so the passenger could go from Hamburg—

Mr. Dorr: Object to that as not responsive.

Mr. Beers: He is answering it.

The Witness: A party could go from Hamburg to Chicago—

Mr. Dorr: It is not cross-examination.

A. (Continuing.) Go from Hamburg to Chicago for $7. The Pennsylvania Railroad would take $1, the Hamburg Line would take $6.

Mr. Spooner: How much profit was there in that?

The Witness: I suppose there was $7 profit.

2260

A. (Continuing.) There was no profit.

Mr. Beers: Do you desire to strike out the answer of the $7 profit?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: Let it stand.

The Witness: In fact there was a loss I believe to all of us.

Q. Well, what was the object of these steamship lines getting together?

Mr. Dorr: I object; the witness has not testified to anything like that on direct.

Q. What was the result of this competition which reduced the rate to $7 to New York?

Mr. Door: I object, the witness is not properly qualified as such and not relevant to anything on direct.

A. Well, naturally, that would be the cause of bringing people together; instead of losing money, building ships, if you have an interest in your stockholders, you naturally have to get together and raise your rates to such a point where you can make money; or some lines would have to drop, the weakers ones would have to drop out of the game.

Q. Have you always been agent for some of the railroad companies? A. Yes.

Q. Which lines? A. I represented as general agent up to March 1st, the Lackawanna Railroad, the Lehigh Valley Railroad; prior to that I represented the West Shore Railroad under Mr. Charles E. Lambert; prior to that I was passenger agent of the New York Central.

Q. Prior to the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Limited, entering the Conference in 1908, did you receive the commercial allowance from the railroads? A. Yes.

Q. Although you were not a member of any agreement at that time? A. I believe we received the commercial allowance up to Chicago and beyond Chicago, in a great many instances we received more than the Conference lines received.

Q. You are sure of that? A. I am quite positive.

Q. So that the agreement between the Conference Lines and the railroads did not injure your competition? A. It benefited it in certain districts and territories.

Mr. Burlingham: In response to the request of the District Attorney made on Thursday, the 27th, ultimo, I produce from the office of the Conference in New York, reports of the Trans-Atlantic Passenger meetings for the years 1899 to 1905 inclusive. 2264

MAX STRAUS, recalled:

Cross-examination by Mr. Bullowa:

Q. When you became agent for the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Mr. Straus, they had the Estonia, Lithuania, Korea, Birma and Arconia? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What happened to those steamers? A. They are practically out of the trade. We have other steamers which we have built since then, twin-screw express steamers Russia, Kursk and the steamship Czar.

Q. Does that include the accommodation for the passengers? A. Oh, my, yes; a great deal of difference between accommodations on new steamers built now for the trade and the old antiquated steamers. 2276

Q. Is that one of the results of entering the conference?

Mr. Dorr: I object as calling for a conclusion.

Mr. Bullowa: Cross-examination; go ahead and answer the question, Mr. Straus.

A. I should not wonder.

Q. What other class of passengers does your line bring over? A. From the other side?

Q. Yes? A. Fifty per cent, we might say forty per cent of the class of travel that we bring from Russia to America, are Hebrews and sixty per cent are gentiles if that is what you mean. 2277

Q. Yes; now in connection with bringing the passengers, are there any Russian regulations regarding passports? A. Oh, yes.

Q. What are those regulations? A. The passengers coming from Russia to America going with our line, each and every passenger must have a passport.

Q. That the Russian subject comes through Germany on the same passport requirement? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have to have the same? A. Yes, but a great many go over the border line without a passport.

Q. They cannot go on the steamer without a passport? A. They must have a passport. The only way to receive a passport, the police department of Russia must have nothing against the person before they can get a paper, which will give them the privilege to go to America, showing that their records must be entirely clear; otherwise they would be refused.

Q. Now while you were out of the conference, prior to 1908, I assume you were fighting with all the lines and with every one? A. Oh, yes, that was natural.

Q. That lasted I assume up to about September, 1908? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it began when you became agent for the line? A. You mean the fight?

Q. The fight? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now was that demoralizing the agents? A. Well, it was to a certain extent.

Q. I suppose you were trying to subdue conference agents? A. I think we did subdue them. We would offer conference agents if possible more commission than we would give our own agents, in order to induce them to put some of their business over our line.

Q. Do I understand correctly that these conference agents represented all lines? A. Conference agents generally represented all the lines.

Q. They were not allowed to recommend any one line, were they? A. If a purchaser goes before a conference agent to purchase a ticket if it is a respectable decent conference agent, which the most of them are, he will not suggest a line to the purchaser, but will allow the purchaser to select his own steamer and line.

Q. That is he cannot be an advocate of one line? A. He cannot put one steamer against another and say this is a better boat, that is a better boat; he must permit the purchaser to select.

Q. That is the idea of the conference agent? A. That is the idea of the conference agent. If he does not do that, he is liable to disqualification or fine.

Q. The idea of the conference is to build up in the form of agents, ticket offices throughout the country, joint ticket offices? A. Something of that kind, yes, sir.

Q. Now, prior to this idea was the demoralization among the agents? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe it? A. Well, passengers could buy tickets at almost any price. Some agents received $2 commission, some received $3; some received $4. No particular restriction whether the agent would give the passenger part of the commission or not. We did not care. What we wanted was heads that is all, regardless of revenue.

Q. Well, did you have runners? A. Broadway was full of runners the depots were full of runners.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. At what time? A. In 1907, six and seven. A runner could get just as much commission as the ticket agents in any of the offices.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. What were these runners supposed to do? A. Oh, they were sort of body snatchers.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Ran people aboard your ship? A. Ran them into the office and booked them.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Well, was it the same condition that existed with the railroads prior to the railroad association? A. Yes, sir; before the Western Passenger Association was established or arrangements made with the steam-2284 ship companies, the commissions were so high, the demoralization was so great that if you sold a ticket to an emigrant to any person to Minnesota, you received as high as $6 to $7 commission on a rate where the western lines received only $11.50; they paid from $6 to $7 commission on that ticket. The commission on a ticket from New York to Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, was as high as $10 and $12. I have paid as high as $17 myself commission on a San Francisco ticket when I was in the railroad office, in connection with the steamship business.

2285 Q. Was that what made the railroads agree on having the office below Rector Street? A. That was not the reason.

Mr. Dorr: I object to that.

Q. Is there an agreement regarding the dead line? A. Yes, sir, there is a presidents' agreement.

Q. What was the reason for that agreement? A. Demoralization of the immigrant rates by the immigrant agencies as I understand; the presidents of the different railroads decided there should be no railroad office south of Rector Street.

Q. Well now, with your experience, in and out of the conference, are the conference regulations as far 2286 as you know them reasonable?

Mr. Dorr: I object to that.

A. Very reasonable.

Q. Are they necessary and essential for the preservation of reasonable rates and regulations for the steamship passenger business? A. The conference does not make rates; they simply regulate the agent in New York.

Q. You are talking of the New York regulations? A. Yes, sir, I know nothing of the other side.

Q. New York conference? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are not speaking of the "AA" ageement? A. I am not speaking of the conference on the other side.

Q. You know nothing about that? A. No.

Q. Your idea is that you are instructed to live in harmony with the other companies? A. That's my instructions.

Q. To live in harmony with the different companies that are doing business? A. That our company simply wishes to live in harmony with their competitors.

Q. Without any agreement as far as you know of? 2288
A. Without any agreement as far as I know of now.

Q. And I assume your attitude toward the Uranium Line is that you don't know who the substance is behind the shadow? A. My personal attitude, I received instructions from the other side whenever I make a rate against the Uranium Line.

Q. I assume you understand that the Uranium Line is the Canadian Northern Railroad, as far as your information is?

Mr. Dorr: I object as to whether he has any information.

Mr. Spooner: Everybody else had.

A. I have always so understood. 2289

Q. I suppose from the same information that is had that the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern have somewhat of a controversy? A. That I couldn't say just now. I believe the Canadian Lines are in the steamship business as well as in the railroad business, which is different from the Trans-Atlantic Lines. The Canadian Pacific Railway have a Canadian Pacific Steamship Company who competes against all of the New York steamship companies, as well as having their own railroads from Montreal through to the Pacific Coast.

Q. I suppose your line is not anxious to enter into a controversy with the railroads or get into the railroad wars, which the railroads are having among themselves? A. No, we do not care to get into any controversy, except tend to our own business.

Q. Now regarding the rates which your line maintains do you consider those reasonable rates? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the rates made in accordance with what the traffic will bear or in accordance with what is fair remuneration for the capital and expense.

2291

Mr. Dorr: I object, entirely unqualified.

A. I think our rates are fair; in fact I believe our rates should be higher than some of the other lines.

Q. Why so? A. Because as I said before, we carry quite a number of Hebrews, particularly those of the orthodox religion and they will only eat a certain class of food called kosher. We therefore have on board of our steamers a mash giach, which is a sort of a rabbi. As I said before the mash giach's duty is to look after the food, meats and such things that are aboard, not alone in this country, not alone in Russia, but also here and there are certain slaughterhouses here, such as Schwartzschild, who have this kind of meat, called kosher and that costs from one, two and three cents a pound more than any other kind of meat, because it has to be cured, put in salt twenty-four hours and it wouldn't pay us to have two different kinds of meat on the ship, so we give the benefit of this kosher meat to all of our passengers, and therefore, I think it costs us more than any other line to feed our passengers.

Q. And is your passage from New York longer? A. Yes, sir, it is longer.

Q. Now when the line first was instituted between New York and Russia, was it the custom to follow that direct route, or was it accustomed to go by way of other ports? A. The traffic from Russia before our line was established, there was a line in existence called the Russian Volunteer Line. They always carried a number of passengers, not alone from Russia to America but also from America to Russia. In fact the steamers were mostly always full.

Q. Do you know whether they went out of the business?

Mr. Dorr: I object.

A. I think they went out of business, because they did not care to maintain, have an agency here, after going full backwards and forwards, making no money, the rates seemed not to pay them, so they decided to quit the business. That I have from very good authority.

Q. Do you know why they did not make money? A. Because their rates were low.

Q. Was there internal trouble? A. No, no. You know the Volunteer Line is not a line that you could say they could bust, because it belongs to the Government.

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as not responsive.

2295

A. There were no dividends to pay, no stockholders pay and still they decided of their own accord to go out of business. You could not force them if they did not want to go out.

Q. Were you forced into any conference? A. No, sir.

Q. Was it a voluntary act? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was your advice as I understand, Mr. Straus, that it would be better to agree regarding control of agents here than to educate an entirely new body of agents? A. The decent respectable agents of the reliable companies the reliable agents were all conference 2296 agents and we would like to have the benefit of that particular agency and that is the reason we asked for admission into the conference here.

Q. But you were getting your share of the business? A. But we had to deal with a very peculiar class of people.

Q. You were taking unwarranted risk? A. We had to, had to take certain risk because some of them were not reliable.

Q. That is financial risk? A. Yes.

Q. You mean as agents? A. As agents.

2297 Q. Unreliable that they would sell tickets and you didn't know whether you would get the proceeds of the tickets in every case? A. We had to chase them pretty hard to get the money.

Q. In some cases you did not get your money? A. In some cases we did not get our money.

Q. Then you can safely state that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was not driven out by reasonable competition? A. I feel quite sure that they were not.

Mr. Dorr: Same objection.

2298 Q. Did you ever hear the witness Fourman tell you that while he represented the North West Transport Line, that he was afraid to turn over the proceeds of prepaid tickets to the North West Transport Line, because of the character of the line? A. Well, I would not put it that way.

Q. Put it in your own way then? A. The reason that C. B. Richard & Company retained the money here for the prepaid tickets, was because they felt in case the line did go out of business that they would have the money here to refund to the purchasers and they would only pay such money to the Company when they forwarded the passenger from the other side.

Q. If they turned it over to the line, they were afraid that they would not secure the money back to repay to the purchaser? A. They felt responsible, as I understand it.

Q. In case the sailing was not made, in the case the person did not come? A. Yes.

Q. Who told you that? A. Mr. Fourman told me that I believe and I am quite certain Mr. Oscar Richard told me that himself.

Q. Have you ever contributed to the control stations abroad? A. No, sir.

Q. Not necessary for your line to do it? A. We have nothing to do with the control stations.

Q. Your passengers come direct? A. Our passengers come direct.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Spooner:

Q. I want to ask you one question: If there were no understandings such as is complained of here among the steamship companies that each line was competing with the other line, what would become of your business, your company? A. Be so demoralized I suppose that we would have to seek other channels.

Q. That is, unless there were some understanding or arrangement, you would go out of business? A. Some sort of understanding as the railroads have had amongst themselves in this country.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. You consider that the understanding among the steamship companies is protection to the weaker steamship lines? A. Just as much.

Q. It is mutual protection against the state of absolute unlimited competition? A. Yes.

Q. And in your experience there has been no restraint in competition; the rates have so fallen that none but the strongest would survive.

2302 Max Straus

Mr. Dorr: I object to that; the witness is entirely unqualified.

A. The rates will show that.

Q. Your experience has gone back twenty-five years? A. Yes.

Q. And you have lived through several rate wars? A. I have been through them all.

By Mr. Beers:

Q. Mr. Straus, is the present conference existing between the lines similar in character to the agreement
2303 which exists between the railroads in the United States?

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as entirely immaterial and irrelevant.

A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: The witness is not sufficiently qualified to testify as to what the railroad agreement is.

Q. Have you represented railroads in your business for a considerable period of years? A. Yes.

Q. How many years? A. I could go back twenty-four or twenty-five years. The first railroad we repre-
2304 sented was the Northern Pacific, with the land and immigration agents of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Our business was to arrange to put settlers on the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, particularly Scandinavians.

Q. Have you represented other railroads? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What railroads? A. I represented the New York Central as the passenger agent in New York, some twenty odd years ago, and I represented the West Shore Railroad under Mr. Charles E. Lambert, the general passenger agent.

Q. Any others? A. And I was appointed by Mr. B. D. Caldwell, general agent of the Lackawanna Railroad, up to March 1st of this year and also represented the Lehigh Valley Railroad. I was appointed by Mr. Jarvis, vice-president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad.

Q. Have you also sold tickets over most of the railroads operating west of New York? A. Yes, sir; I have also represented the Western Passenger Association in an advisory capacity for three years in New York.

Q. What is the Western Passenger Association? A. The Western Passenger Association consists of lines west of Chicago. 2306

Q. All the lines? A. All the lines operating West of Chicago.

Q. With what subjects did that association deal? A. With the first, second and this class business; also theatrical business, tourist business, mileage books and things of that kind.

Q. The immigrant business? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has your business been connected with the railroads for the last twenty-five years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Continuously? A. Continuously.

Q. Down to the present time? A. Up to March 1st, 1912. 2307

Q. Have you during the past twenty-five years been familiar with the manner in which the business of transporting immigrants in the United States has been transacted on railroads? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not there has been and is a railway pool among the passenger lines operating west of New York, with respect to carriage of immigrants arriving at the Port of New York?

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as immaterial and irrelevant; it cannot have any bearing on the case.

2308

A. You mean railroads west of New York?

Q. A government pool? A. West of New York?

Q. West of New York? A. There is a division of seven trunk lines which start from the port of New York west, and either under an agreement reached either February 1st or March 1st of this year, each trunk line receives an equal share.

Mr. Dorr: Is that agreement you are testifying to in writing?

The Witness: That I don't know, sir.

Mr. Dorr: Produce the writing before sec-
2309 ondary evidence as to its competency is offered.

By Mr. Beers:

Q. Do you know whether in fact the immigrants arriving at the port of New York and proceeding thence westward are divided among the trunk lines operating west of New York in accordance with some agreement or pool? A. Yes, sir; I do know they are.

Mr. Dorr: Same objection as to its materiality.

Q. How long has such an agreement, or how long has such agreement been existing to your knowledge?
2310 A. For the past many years; I couldn't say exactly how long.

Q. And is it a fact to your knowledge that for many years past the immigrant arriving at the port of New York and then proceeding westward have been apportioned among the railroads in accordance with an agreement between the railroads?

Mr. Dorr: The same objection.

A. Yes, sir. I would like to say the Interstate Commerce Commission know all about it and have agreed to it.

2311

Mr. Dorr: I ask that be stricken out as something to which this witness is certainly incompetent to testify to.

Q. You recall do you not Mr. Straus the investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission about the year 1904? A. Yes, I think it was around that date.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Search your memory a little and tell us, Mr. Straus, if you can, how far back your knowledge goes that that has been the distribution of traffic going west from New York. A. I can only tell you what I understood from very good authority that the first and second class business out of the port of New York was under arbitration I think of Albert Fink many years ago who was then commissioner.

Q. How many years ago? A. I think it was about twenty, odd years ago, whereby he, I think, as arbitrator decided what percentage each trunk line should receive on first and second class business out of New York.

Q. Well that does not take in immigrants? A. And whatever percentage or proportion of the first and second class business that they fell short of they received so and so many more immigrants to make up the shortage.

2313

Mr. Bullowa: Compensation and—

The Witness: I don't know what you call it; whether it is compensation, but they did not receive it in money, but received it in passengers which is the same as money.

By Mr. Beers:

Q. There was in fact proportioned immigrant traffic west of New York to your knowledge and there has been for a considerable period of years past? A. Yes, sir.

2314 Q. Has that been a matter of common knowledge among railroads and steamship agents in this city?

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as purely immaterial.

A. As I understand the railroad people have so stated this to the Interstate Commerce people themselves.

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as to what the witness's understanding is; incompetent and irrelevant.

By Mr. Bullowa:

2315 Q. Mr. Straus, there is another question: As I understand it the Russian Volunteer Fleet did not make any serious effort to send first class passenger or freight; confining itself almost entirely to the steerage business? A. That I could not say. I was not familiar enough with the way Messrs. Richard & Company handled the first or second class business.

Q. Of course, any line to do any reasonable paying business, and to be on a reasonable paying basis, must take both freight and steerage business? A. Must have different classes.

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as leading and he is 2316 not qualified as an expert.

Q. I understand, Mr. Straus, the steerage passenger business moves at different times than the freight business?

Mr. Dorr: I object to Mr. Bullowa's understanding being embodied in record in this way.

A. In certain seasons of the year, there are more steerage passengers travel than at other seasons. It is a sort of a supply and demand. If there is plenty of work here, plenty of passengers come here; if there is no work here, a great many of them go back.

Q. That is, the steerage business is an index of the prosperity of this country? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I object to all this line of examination as the witness is incompetent to testify, as to qualifications, irrelevant and immaterial.

The Witness: But it is absolutely true, Mr. Dorr.

Q. When is the heaviest immigration from this country? A. If you speak of Scandinavians, I will tell you round Christmas.

Q. On the Russian Line? A. On the Russian Line generally spring and about the holiday season, Christmas and New Year's.

2318

Q. When is the heaviest emigration to this country from Russia on your line? A. The farmers come on our line and generally go to the west, while the majority of other emigrants who come on our line are more tickets that have been sold here of passengers that have been here, sending for their wives and families when they have become prosperous or decided to become citizens.

Q. I mean what is the season of the heaviest immigration? A. It is a very difficult question to answer, seasons, because it goes by prosperity more than anything else.

Q. And financial conditions? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, without some conference agreement, some arrangement between the lines, would it be possible for the lines to build up the present fleet of steamers, differing from your own fleet and retain the regularity of service? A. I don't think it would be possible.

Mr. Dorr: I object as it is the witness's conclusion without having qualified as an expert. It does not appear he has any knowledge as to the financial operations of his line; he is merely a passenger agent on this side of the water, without being acquainted with the affairs of his 2320 country, even the agreement under which they are operating with other lines.

Q. Mr. Straus, when there is a sailing of some line that materially reduces the rates in a certain week, does that affect all the steamship lines? A. Yes, sir; for instance, there would be a fighting steamer sail on Thursday, every steamer of that particular week would go out practically with no steerage passengers, because everybody rushes towards the fighting steamers or the low priced steamers and all steamers, if it is Thursday, that follow Friday and Saturday up to Tuesday 2321 suffer on account of that particular steamer that goes ahead.

Q. So the sailing of a steamer with a nominally low rate hurts all lines? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I object to the form of that question.

Q. What effect has the sailing of a steamer with a low rate on the other lines, sailing about that time? A. As I said before they carry hardly any third class steerage passengers, due to the cheap rates, where the public will go to the cheap rate boats in preference to the others, because they can save so much money.

2322 Q. To maintain a reasonable rate for the transportation of steerage passengers, is it necessary and essestial for the line to have a number of steerage passengers on the sailing?

Mr. Dorr: I object to the question on the ground that the witness is not qualified.

A. You will have to have a large number of passengers in order to make any profit out of a rate like $20. The ship must be practically full. A fair reasonable rate in my judgment for a third class passenger would be from $35 to $40.

2323

Mr. Dorr: I object to that as not responsive, volunteered and not qualified.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Now, if the competitive steamer sails with a large number of passengers at a low rate, it means that the other lines sailing in that week suffer if they maintain the old rate, the high rate? A. They would receive no money. If you turn to Sandford's statistics, their weekly sheets show the sailings every week. For instance, we had a steamer I believe went out last Thursday with 1,218 steerage and the Pennyslvania which followed, I believe, two days later had fifteen steerage, so we captured everything that was in sight and the other steamers got nothing.

Q. So that anybody coming into the business, with any kind or type of old tramp steamer and making a sailing from this country to Russia or vice versa, would secure the business?

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as not based on the evidence.

A. If he put in these low ruinous rates.

Q. Then it would not be possible for steamship lines to maintain the present type of steamer and regularity of sailing, consisting of a steamer almost every day? A. I don't think it would be possible for them to keep it up.

2325

Mr. Dorr: Objected to; the witness is not qualified.

Q. That is what the object of the maintenance of reasonable rates throughout the year is, to maintain a regular sailing? A. That is the object.

Q. That is, in certain seasons of the year you are obliged to sail steamers that are not paying? A. Regardless of how many passengers are there, the steamers will go out on time, whether it pays or not.

Q. You maintain them whether they pay or not; you keep and honor the schedule whether it pays you or not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a company coming in the business without any regular schedule can put on steamers in the seasons of the year where the immigrants are moving, without regard to the other seasons? A. They can if they wish to.

Q. And that has been the experience of these lines that have not owned vessels or maintained regular officers? A. I don't want to say anything about their experience, only my experience.

Q. I mean that has been your experience with these outside lines? A. I was an outside line once myself.

Q. Mr. Straus, as I understand it today, you are competing with the other members of the so-called conference, for the traffic?

Mr. Dorr: I object to that on the ground that there has been no such testimony heretofore.

A. Yes, sir; we are competing just as much today as we ever did in our lives for every passenger we get.

Q. That is, you try to get them all? A. We try to get the business.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Try to get them on the ship? A. Yes, sir; that is what we are paid for.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Now, Mr. Straus, with regard to this conference, you regard it as something of great advantage to your line, do you not? A. I think so.

Q. Why did you leave it? A. I never left it.

Q. Why did your line leave it? A. I wasn't the passenger agent of the line when you said they left it.

Q. Are you in it now? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are in the conference now? A. Yes, sir; in New York.

Mr. Bullowa: As I understand it, Mr. Straus, they are not in any agreement—

Mr. Dorr: I am willing to take Mr. Straus' word on the matter.

The Witness: I wanted to read you something, Mr. Dorr, that I had over the telephone, but you have not permitted me to do it yet.

Mr. Dorr: We will let Mr. Bullowa testify himself as to any matters he desires to put in evidence.

Q. Now, Mr. Straus, are you prepared to say positively that there is no arrangement between your line at the present time and the other conference lines as to the division or pro-rating steerage traffic in the North Atlantic? A. I don't know anything about prorating steerage passengers as far as I am concerned.

Q. Well, if you don't know anything about it, I think you answered the question. A. I can state it positively as far as I am concerned.

Q. You know nothing about it? A. I know nothing about a division.

Q. You know nothing about as to whether there is still such an agreement in existence? A. I have never seen any agreement; there may be an agreement in existence, but I have never seen it.

Q. You testified as I recall in answer to Mr. Bullowa's question, that your line was not forced into the conference that it was amply able to take care of itself; did you not so testify? A. I stated that our line was not forced into the conference.

Q. Did you not also state that it was amply able to take care of itself and that you knew that you could 2332 continue doing business? A. Yes, sir; I hope so.

Q. Now, at that time, you were charging what rates to Libau prior to your joining the conference? A. If you can give me some records here, I could tell you, but the rates change so often that it would be very difficult for me to tell you offhand what rates we charged to Libau.

Q. Well, we will get your best recollection first, and then perhaps we can go into it a little more in detail? A. Possibly we charged I think as high as $27, $28, $29 or $30 to Libau.

Q. What did you charge after you went into the 2333 conference? A. We charged $30, $31, $32, $33 and I think $35.

Q. What do you charge now? A. We charge now to Libau steerage or third class $35.

Q. And from Libau, an increase of how much in the rate? A. From Libau, I think we charge now $45.

Q. $45? A. Yes, sir; plus $4 head tax for the United States Government.

Q. What did you charge before you entered the conference? A. I think we charged $32, $35, $36 and $37; I cannot exactly tell you.

Q. Did you say you never charged under $30? A. We might have charged under $30, but I don't exactly 2334 remember; I shouldn't wonder if we did.

Q. Do you keep a statement? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of the accounts, of the voucher, each voucher of your ship or ships? A. Yes, sir; you have got them here.

Q. Do they give the disbursements for each voyage? A. I have nothing to do with that. I understood you meant if I keep amounts and accounts of the voyage of the ships, for the passenger tickets.

Q. You keep no figures as to the disbursements? A. No, sir.

Q. For each voyage? A. No, sir.

2335

Q. Have you seen such figures? A. No, sir.

Q. Haven't made any study of them? A. Oh, I have an idea of them.

Q. Do you know whether such accounts are kept in the freight agent's office? A. They keep certain accounts in the freight agent's office; yes, sir.

Q. Do they keep a record of the disbursements and receipts for each voyage? A. What they pay out; yes, sir.

Q. Do those accounts include the expenses for the voyage of the ship? A. Partly, I suppose.

Q. What expenses do they not include? A. Oh, 2336 they would not include I suppose coal; they would not include stevedoring; they would not include baggage; they would not include hundreds of things possibly.

Q. Who pays those expenses? A. The company have their contracts on this side with certain people.

Q. Who makes those contracts? A. One of the managers of the company comes over here once or twice a year.

Q. Where are those contracts kept? A. I don't know.

Q. That information is not on this side of the water? A. I don't think so.

Q. You have not seen it? A. I have not seen it.

Q. Are you familiar with the rates charged for 2337 freight? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with the receipts from freight? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with the expenditures for freight, expenses of the company for freight? A. I know about what expense the company has but am not exactly familiar with it.

Q. Do you know the company's expenditures for insurance? A. It is very high, but I don't know how much it is.

Q. You mean the rate is high? A. No; I know they pay a lot of money for insurance.

Q. You don't know how much it is? A. No; one of the managers told me our insurance is very high.

Q. That is all you know about it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Simply he told you it was very high? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know anything about the freight rates either way? A. Oh, I have an idea.

Q. Do you keep track of the amount of freight carried by your ships? A. I don't keep track of it, but I know about what they receive.

Q. Do you know whether there is any agreement as to freight rates between your line and other lines?

2339 A. I don't know anything about that at all, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Now, that is objected to. I move to strike it out; not within the issues made by the pleadings, neither re-direct or cross-examination.

Q. Do you know whether there is any agreement between your line and other lines as to freight rates?

Mr. Beers: I object to that as not within the issues.

A. I don't know anything about freight.

Mr. Spooner: Same question exactly, I ob-

2340 ject to it.

Q. You don't know? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether there is any agreement between your line and other lines as to pro-rating of the freight traffic, either eastbound or westbound.

Mr. Beers: I should like to inquire whether the Government claims this is within the issues raised by the petition.

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

Mr. Dorr: The principal object here, Mr. Beers, is my cross-examination of the witness's competency to answer the questions which have been put to him on the direct, certain question. I can see that this has a very direct bearing on certain questions that have been answered. I do not think I should be compelled to state it at this time.

Mr. Beers: The questions which you asked this witness on a previous examination had to do as I understand, entirely with passenger traffic and for that reason I think we are entitled to know whether the Government claims the issues extend to any issues as to freight.

Mr. Dorr: I think it is clearly competent in cross-examining this witness on his testimony as to the necessity for an agreement such as has been testified exists here in the passenger business, to ascertain whether there is any such agreement for freight. 2342

Mr. Spooner: Same objection as before.

Mr. Beers: All this is subject to the stipulation.

A. I don't know anything about it.

Mr. Dorr: I suppose that same stipulation applies to the Government's objections. As I understand it we must make an objection and we can later insert the grounds, but we cannot insert objections. 2343

Mr. Beers: My understanding of the stipulation is that all objections are reserved except as to the form of the question and that they might be inserted at any time in the record. The objection as to the form of the question must be made at the time.

Mr. Dorr: If that is what we agreed upon that is entirely satisfactory, but I was making a number of objections because I was afraid I would not be able to insert the grounds unless I did state the reasons for the objections.

Q. Do you know of any agreement between your line and other lines as to the division of freight traffic, pro-rating it among the lines?

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

A. No, sir.

Q. You stated Mr. Straus, on Mr. Bullowa's examination, that at the time that you were out of the conference, you obtained a larger commercial allowance than the lines which were in the conference, was that true? A. Yes.

Q. From what lines did you obtain that larger com-
2345 mercial allowance? A. I said in certain sections, in certain territories.

Q. What are the lines that paid you that larger commercial allowance? A. Must I answer that question?

Q. You must? A. We have in the city what we call the first ward, that is the term that is given to the outside agents in the first ward, that is the section from Rector Street to the Battery, the Dead Line; we have outside agents that represent certain lines and when our passengers arrive at Ellis Island, the Trunk Line Association pays up a commission up to Chicago; the outside agent which we happened to be also, one of them at one time in certain sections of the country 2346 would allow us from fifty cents to a dollar more than the regular ten per cent commission allowed to the steamship companies. Therefore, I stated we received at times more.

Q. Was that in violation of their agreement with the steamship companies? A. The outside agent had no agreement with the steamship companies; they had an agreement with the railroad companies.

Q. What was the name of the outside agent who used to allow you this additional allowance? A. Well, is it right and fair for me to state that?

Q. Yes, we are testing your recollection? A. Peter McDonnell.

Q. And Peter McDonnell—you dealt with the railroads then through Peter McDonnell? A. Dealt with the trunk lines directly; we dealt also through Peter McDonnell.

Q. When you obtained this extra commercial allowance you were dealing through Peter McDonnell? A. When we got the extra commercial allowance, we dealt, of course, through Peter McDonnell.

Q. And Peter McDonnell did not deal with the road substantially as your representative, did he; he proposed to be acting for himself, did he not? A. I don't know anything about his arrangements with the road.

Q. What is your understanding, Mr. Straus, on that point? A. It would only be guesswork on my part.

Q. We have had considerable of that; now let us have it on this point? A. Well, I believe—

Mr. Beers: I object to the form of the question.

Mr. Dorr: I will reframe the question.

Q. What is your guesswork on this point?

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that as clearly objectionable, what the guess is.

2349

Q. What is your understanding about the matter, Mr. Straus? A. Well, I understood that Mr. McDonnell had a number of very good arrangements with the railroad companies and it took many years of Western Passenger Association before they could break these arrangements and today he is salaried by the Trunk Line Association.

Q. Mr. McDonnell? A. Yes, sir; in order to keep off the grass.

Q. Then it is a fact, is it not, that Mr. McDonnell, that you understand it that Mr. McDonnell did not ostensibly represent you in dealing with these railroad 2350 lines and getting this allowance? A. I don't know what you mean by did not represent us; McDonnell represented himself.

Q. And in dealing with the railroads, he purported to represent himself and not to be acting as agent for you? A. I don't know.

Q. What is your understanding? A. I don't think that is necessary.

Q. What is your understanding?

Mr. Bullowa: You can have an understanding, Mr. Straus, or did you accept it as a fact?

The Witness: Of course, if I answer the question
2351 it is purely guesswork again.

Q. What is your understanding?

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Did you have an understanding, if you did have one? A. I never thought that far about that particular transaction.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Thinking about it now, what is your understanding? A. I don't think the railroad companies care whether he represented me or not; they wanted the business.

2352 Q. Now, answer my question if you will, Mr. Straus? A. It is a very hard question, Mr. Dorr.

Q. So it seems; do your best? A. I shouldn't wonder that the railroads didn't know anything about it, I don't think they cared.

Q. You don't think they knew anything about it? do you? A. I don't think they cared about it.

Q. You don't think they know anything about it? A. I don't think they knew or cared about it.

Q. Will you answer the question as put; do you think they know about it? A. I don't think they knew or don't think they cared about it.

2353

Q. Mr. Straus, will you kindly answer the question? A. Do you wish me to answer?

Q. I wish you to answer that as put to you and nothing else? A. Let me have the question again.

Q. Do you think that the railroads knew about this matter? A. Possibly they did.

Q. Do you think that they knew?

Mr. Spooner: That is merely asking him for his opinion, whether he knew it or not.

Mr. Dorr: It is asking him for his understanding of the situation, you gentlemen having presented h[illegible] as an expert in this matter.

2354

A. I don't know whether they did or not.

Q. Well, I asked what you think? A. It is a difficult question to answer.

Q. It was not a difficult question a minute ago, Mr. Straus, when you said three times, as the record will show, that you did not think that they knew, and insisted on adding you did not think they cared; why is it any more difficult now? A. Very well, they did not know, if that suits you better; I will answer that way.

Q. If that is your idea of testimony, Mr. Straus, you are at liberty to answer any way you please.

Mr. Spooner: Don't put that down.

Mr. Dorr: Yes, I insist on having the witness's testimony.

Mr. Spooner: I don't think your characterization is correct.

Mr. Dorr: I do not care about that, but I insist on having the witness's characterization of his own testimony go down.

Witness: I don't think they cared and I don't think they knew.

2356 Q. Has the witness yet answered the question? Do you think that they knew? A. I don't think they knew, no.

Q. Now, the Estonia was a ship of what tonnage, Mr. Straus? A. I don't remember exactly the tonnage; I didn't bring the memorandum with me to show the tonnage of these different ships.

Q. What was the approximate tonnage? A. I think the Estonia is about five thousand tons.

Q. Just one other question on that commercial allowance matter. Did you receive any commercial allowance on eastbound business before you joined the 2357 conference? A. On eastbound, that is from Chicago to New York?

Q. Any point in the United States, eastern? A. Yes, sir. No trouble to get it.

Q. You received that right along? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from what lines? A. I believe the Wabash Railroad was one of them, Nickel Plate, Grand Trunk, the Baltimore & Ohio; in fact, I believe we received commercial allowances from all railroads except the standard lines, which are the Pennsylvania and the New York Central and their connections, such as the L. S. & M. S., Lake Shore & Michigan Southern.

Q. I want you to be positive about this, Mr. Straus.
2358 Think it over carefully. Are you prepared to say that your line received commercial allowances from the railroads that you have mentioned on eastbound business prior to the time you became a member of the conference? A. I am quite certain we received it; in fact the arrangements with the Central Traffic Association were not in existence when we were an outside line, and everything was go-as-you-please in Chicago when everyone received it.

Q. Was that both west and east of Chicago that you received this eastbound allowance? A. You could not receive it west and east of Chicago.

Q. Did you receive it on traffic which originated west and east of Chicago? A. We are only speaking now from Chicago.

Q. I am talking now about the commercial allowance on eastbound traffic; did you receive a commercial allowance on traffic originating west of Chicago as well as for traffic which originated east of Chicago? A. East of Chicago I could not say that we received that but from Chicago and west of Chicago, up into certain territory, such as the Twin Cities, particularly where there were seven different railroads going into that section of the country, where the competition is great, we received that commercial allowance from the Twin Cities to Chicago.

Q. Then you received the commercial allowance on eastbound traffic only between the United States river gateways and Chicago? A. And from Chicago to New York.

Q. If it originated east of Chicago, you did not receive any? A. If it originated east of Chicago I do not believe we received it, because there was no such arrangement made.

Q. Now you testified that the amounts which the railroads paid in commercial allowances varied from time to time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At times the railroads have paid as high as thirty per cent have they not of the inland, for commercial allowances? A. It did not go by percentages; it went by flat figures.

Q. Well, weren't they flat figures that amounted in percentages to thirty per cent? A. Amounted sometimes to over fifty per cent.

Q. And the amount of the allowance was determined by the relative strength of the competition between the railroads and the steamship lines for that business? A. It was determined between the different railroad companies in competing with one another.

2362 Q. For the steamship business? A. For the steamship traffic and the labor traffic.

Q. That is the steamship lines controlling, routing their passengers, made the railroads bid against each other for that traffic? A. No, sir; not the steamship lines; the steamship agents and their own agents, at times the railroad agents.

Q. Well, the persons whether they were steamship companies or agents of steamship companies, or independent agents— A. Yes, sir.

Q. Controlled in effect the routing of the steerage passengers, did they not? A. Certain agents con-2363 trolled the routing of the passengers.

Q. A gentleman like Peter McDonnell controlled the routing of a considerable number of passengers did he not? A. Certain agents.

Q. And the steamship lines controlled the routing of a considerable number of passengers, did they not? A. Certain steamship lines never retained one cent of the commission but paid it all out.

Q. Then answer my question; the steamship lines, certain of them at any rate, controlled the routing of a considerable number of other passengers, did they not, or steerage passengers? A. The steamship lines themselves?

2364 Q. Through their agencies? A. Through their agencies controlled?

Q. Controlled through the routing a large part of the steerage passengers? A. That is true.

Q. Inland routing? A. That is true, too, naturally.

Q. And so that they were able to divert steerage passengers to one road or another as those roads offered the higher commercial allowance? A. Was not used that way, sir.

Q. Were they not able to do that? A. They were and they were not; I can answer it both ways.

Q. Did the railroad which offered a higher commercial allowance ordinarily get the traffic from the steamship agencies? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now was any commercial allowance allowed on the inland transportation in Europe; did your line receive any? A. The roads are owned by the Government.

Q. Did your line receive any commercial allowance? A. Not that I know of.

Q. You sell prepaid inland transportation from points in the United States to points in Europe, do you not? A. Yes.

Q. And you sell prepaid inland transportation from points in Europe to the point of embarkation do you not, on westbound traffic? A. Yes, sir. 2366

Q. Have you produced certain papers? A. I gave them to Mr. Bullowa, to give to you.

Mr. Bullowa: They are marked for identification. Do you want to offer them in evidence?

Mr. Dorr: I am not going to offer a lot of immaterial things.

The Witness: This (indicating) is a letter I received today, just happens to be on the subject.

Mr. Dorr: Have you any objection to the Government looking at the papers the witness has produced? 2367

Mr. Bullowa: I do not care.

OSCAR L. RICHARD, sworn on behalf of the petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Guiler:

Q. Where do you live? A. 46 East 72nd Street.

Q. Are you in business in New York City? A. Yes, sir.

2368 Q. And what line of business are you in? A. Steamship business.

Q. How long have you been in the steamship business? A. Forty years.

Q. That is, you mean by that you have been a steamship agent for forty years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during that time what lines have you represented? A. I have represented the Hamburg-American Line, the Union Line, Hansa Line, The Austro-Americano Line, Prince Line, Sicula-Americana Line, Lloyd Italiano that is all that I can remember. Oh, the New York and Continental Line and North West 2369 Transport Line and the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Q. Now when did you represent the New York and Continental Line? A. When?

Q. Yes? A. I think it was 1907 and 1908.

Q. 1908? A. New York and Continental Line, 1907, I believe.

Q. And at that time was the New York and Continental— A. From April, 1908, to August, 1908.

Q. Was that line at that time a member of the American-Atlantic Conference or not? A. No, sir.

Q. It was not a member of any conference, was it? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, later on did you represent—when did you 2370 represent the New York Transport Company? A. North West Transport Line?

Q. Yes? A. February, 1909, to May, 1909.

Q. During that time was the North West Transport Company a member of any conference? A. No, sir.

Q. And from what time to what time did you represent the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. From July, 1906, to July, 1908.

Q. And that line at that time was not a member of the conference? A. No, sir.

Q. It was a so-called outside line, was it not? A. Yes, sir.

2371

Q. Now, do you remember what boats the New York and Continental Line sailed during the time you represented them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they? A. The Avoca, Jelunga and Volturno.

Q. And in regard to the North West Transport Company, what boats did they sail at that time? A. The Volturno, Raglan Castle and Uranium.

Q. Did they subsequently get any other vessels? A. Not while we represented them.

Q. Do you know whether they did or not sail any other than those you have mentioned? A. I don't recollect.

2372

Q. Well, what vessels did the Russian Volunteer Fleet have while you represented them? A. The Russian Volunteer Fleet had The Kherson, The Petersburg, The Saratov, The Moskowa and The Smolensk.

Q. Were these vessels of the Russian Volunteer Fleet in good condition, were they good vessels? A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what tonnage did they have approximately? A. Well, they were different, from about 5500 to 7500, about.

Q. What had these vessels been before they became vessels of the Russian Volunteer Fleet; who was running these vessels before they became vessels of the Russian Volunteer Fleet; in what service were they? A. Well, they ran between Odessa and China ports.

Q. Were they at any time run by the Russian Government as cruisers? A. Yes, sir; during the Russo-Japanese War.

Q. And subsequently to the Russian-Japanese War they were put on the service from Libau to New York, is that right? A. Before the Japanese War, the Russian Volunteer Fleet intended to organize a service between Odessa, Naples and New York and we were the agents at the time, but they never came here, because 2374 the war broke out and after the war, I induced them to put on the service sailing from the south to the north.

Q. Were you the sole agent for the Russian Volunteer Fleet in this country? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Represented them all the time that they were running? A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you were representing the New York and Continental Lines what opposition did you suffer from the so-called conference lines?

Mr. Beers: I object to the form of the question. It assumes a fact not proven and is leading.

2375

A. We met with all manner of obstacles.

Q. Will you name some of the obstacles that you met with during that time? A. Chief amongst which were so-called Rule 9 of the conference, which prohibited agents from booking for any line not a member of the conference.

Q. Well, how did that rule work, that is what was done by the conference lines in regard to Rule 9 to oppose you?

Mr. Beers: I object to the question. It assumes the reason for what the lines did.

2376 A. Well, they prevented any of the agents which really were our agents, as we built up a large network of agencies before we had the New York and Continental Line, from accepting the agency of the New York and Continental Line.

Q. Did the so-called conference lines take away any agencies which you had? A. Quite a number of instances when an agent who was not a conference agent, worked up a considerable business and the conference line would ascertain that fact they would take him away.

Q. Did you spend a great deal of time and money in appointing and instructing your agents?

Mr. Beers: That is objected to as leading.

Q. About how many agents did you have while you were representing the New York and Continental Line? A. Oh, I should say about twelve hundred.

Q. What was your method of training these various agents in their representation of your line? A. No training required; we sent them blanks and they issued the tickets and got the commission.

Mr. Spooner: You educated them to take the commission? A. Needed no training for that.

Q. How were these agents situated financially?

Mr. Beers: That is too indefinite, twelve hundred agents.

Q. Were these agents responsible agents who represented you? A. We were obliged to appoint anyone who was willing to accept the agency and we placed little reliance upon their financial responsibility.

Q. Why was that that you were obliged to appoint anyone who would take it? A. Because the conference had the most responsible ones and they wouldn't accept our agency.

Q. Now, what class of agents did the conference take away from you, were they the best or the worst?

2379

Mr. Beers: The same objection is made.

A. I don't know; I can only answer the way I answered before: When they found an agent was doing a large business with us, they took him away from us, because in every instance they found it.

Q. Did you have any method of ascertaining whether an agent was good financially or bad financially, an agent to represent you? A. We made enquiries.

Q. How did you do that? A. If there was a bank in the town, we enquired of the bank, and if there was a well rated merchant we would enquire of him.

2380 Q. Did you have anyone go around and make these enquiries for you? A. We had a traveller who sometimes appointed an agent.

Q. Did he ascertain as best he could what condition their finances were? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bullowa: Mr. Guiler, cannot I suggest that you do not lead the witness, he seems to be a friendly witness.

The Witness: I am not friendly or unfriendly.

Q. Now, Mr. Richard, did you represent or do you represent a non-conference or conference line at the 2381 present time? A. I represent the conference line at the present time.

Q. Exclusively? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How recently did you become their representative? A. In 1906.

Q. Who had you been representing previous to that time? A. New line.

Q. Which line was that? A. Lloyd Italiano.

Q. Now what you have said about agents in regard to the New York Continental Line applied to the agents who represented you while you were the general agent of the North West Transport Company and the Volunteer Fleet? A. Yes, sir.

2382 Q. And the same opposition was experienced by you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now did you experience any other method of opposition besides the matter of the agents?

Mr. Beers: The question is objected to as leading and because it characterizes the effect of the conference rules as to agents as "opposition" to the witness's line.

A. The matter of rates.

Q. Do you mean the rates on the sailings of your steamers? A. Rates were reduced; yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us what happened in regard to the sailing of these various steamers, and the rates which were charged by the conference lines as opposed to your non-conference lines? A. Frequently when other lines had sailings at the same time that our steamers sailed, the rates of the conference lines running against our steamers were reduced.

Mr. Beers: I move to strike out the answer. The witness can state facts if he is able but not conclusions.

Q. In regard to the sailing of the various steamers of the conference line, whenever you had a sailing of 2384 your vessel, did the conference lines have a vessel on the same date in opposition to you? A. I won't say it went every time, but occasionally.

Q. Was it occasionally or ordinarily, was it a regular process? A. You are talking of the Russian Volunteer Fleet?

Q. I am talking of all three? A. Well, I haven't got particulars, I don't know.

Q. Well, take the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. The Russian Volunteer Fleet, the rates were reduced, commenced to reduce them almost the year after the line had been running. The rate to Rotterdam and Libau were reduced about a year after the line com- 2385 menced to run.

Q. What rates did you ordinarily have on your vessels? A. $37 to Libau and $30 to Rotterdam.

Q. Were the rates of the so-called conference line reduced to $27 in opposition to your steamer?

Mr. Spooner: Let him testify. He has got the figures there; show him the figures. Moreover your question is improper as embodying a conclusion.

A. I don't know what the opposition charged, but I believe we reduced our rate to the same rate as the opposition to Rotterdam.

Q. How low did you have to reduce your rate to meet the so-called conference rate?

Mr. Spooner: It is assumed he did.

A. We reduced our rate in the first instance from $30 to $25, to Rotterdam. Then a few sailings later to $23 to Rotterdam and a few sailings later to $20 to Rotterdam, and to $27 to Libau ultimately and the time came when we increased again.

2387 Q. Was the $20 rate the lowest that you made to Rotterdam? A. Yes, sir; according to the extracts that were given to me by the bookkeeper.

Q. In regard to Rule 9 that you have mentioned, Mr. Richard, did you in any way complain to anyone connected with the so-called conference lines as to the workings of that rule? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who did you complain to in regard to that? A. I complained to Mr. Sandford, Mr. Gustav H. Schwab of the North German Lloyd and Oelrichs & Company.

Q. Anyone else? A. I wrote a letter, I communicated with my lawyer.

Q. Now, I show you a letter marked Government's 2388 Exhibit 13, dated February 28th, 1907, to Lawson Sandford and signed by you; is that a letter which you sent to Lawson Sandford at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Copy of the letter? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In this letter of February 28th, 1907, you speak about a boycott against the Russian Volunteer Fleet by the conference lines and the result thereof. What did you mean by that?

Mr. Beers: Does not it speak for itself? I object to the question.

Mr. Guiler: No, it does not speak for itself.

A. That was in reference to the same Rule 9 referred to before.

Q. Can you explain further in regard to that what you meant by the boycott? Just explain what the actions of the conference had been there so as to result in your calling it a boycott?

Mr. Burlingham: I object to it on the ground that there wasn't any agreement then. This is prior to the making of the agreement "AA" and not within the issues.

Mr. Spooner: Let him state the facts.

Mr. Guiler: I have asked him to do that.

Mr. Burlingham: I object on the ground that the evidence already before the Court established that there was no agreement in fact at the time the letter was written.

A. The only complaints that we had to make against the conference lines was that they prohibited us from appointing any agents we wanted to appoint, and against remarks which agents made derogatory to the lines, that steamers were unseaworthy, that they had been shot full of cannon balls during the war and would be liable to sink at any time; remarks of that kind.

Q. Were there any further remarks made about your line by the so-called conference agents? 2391

Mr. Burlingham: Doesn't appear that any were made. His letter is not evidence of the facts stated in it.

Mr. Guiler: It appears in this letter here (indicating).

Mr. Spooner: That is in evidence.

A. It is so long ago I don't recollect.

Q. Now, did you at any time, Mr. Richard, ever have a conference with Mr. Straus, Mr. Max Straus, of A. E. Johnson & Company in regard to the working of Rule 9? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What conversation did you have with him?

Mr. Spooner: What date was that?

Q. Well, the last one, when was that? A. At various times.

Q. Can you tell us just what conference you had in regard to Rule 9 with Mr. Straus?

Mr. Spooner: What has that got to do with the case?

2393 Q. This was while you were representing the Russian Volunteer Fleet, were you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And while Mr. Straus was representing the Russian East Asiatic? A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. And at the time the Russian East Asiatic steamships were out of the conference? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were fighting each other?

Mr. Guiler: Just a minute, Mr. Bullowa; you will have a chance later on.

Mr. Bullowa: Expunge it, please.

2394 By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Now, will you tell me of those conferences you had with Mr. Straus?

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that as incompetent.

Mr. Spooner: Object to it as incompetent and irrelevant.

Mr. Bullowa: Would it be competent now, at that time? He was not an agent or a member of the conspiracy.

Mr. Spooner: Object to it as incompetent and irrelevant.

Q. Now, go ahead? A. Mr. Straus came to me repeatedly with suggestions of the best method to adopt.

Q. Well, tell us what the suggestions were?

Mr. Spooner: Was he a conference agent?

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Well, it is objected to.

Mr. Dorr: He is a defendant, Senator.

Mr. Bullowa: Is his past history at issue?

Mr. Dorr: Any admissions he may make will certainly show his state of mind.

2396

Mr. Burlingham: Is our state of mind in issue?

Mr. Dorr: The Government does not claim that what Mr. Straus said at the time that he was not a member of the conference, nor a party to the conspiracy then in existence is binding on the other defendants. These conversations are only evidence against Straus. So long as they are confined to a period prior to his joining the alleged conspiracy. Of course, so far as the evidence relates to conversations after that date, they are binding upon the defendants if the conspiracy is proved.

Q. Go ahead? A. He urged me to reduce rates, which I refused to do. I told him it would be much better to pay a larger commission as an inducement for agents to book passengers.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Mr. Richard, at that time did Mr. Straus have any relations with this alleged conference? A. Only as agent of the Scandinavian American Line, not as Russian and East Asiatic agent.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. What further suggestions did he have to add to this matter? A. Well, he wanted me to take proceedings against the conference.

Q. On what ground did he ask you to take the proceedings?

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to as incompetent.

A. On the ground that some of the rules were illegal, some of the rules of the conference.

2399 Q. In what way were they illegal, a violation of what law? A. I always considered Rule No. 9—

Mr. Beers: Are you asking his opinion, qualifying him as a legal expert?

Mr. Dorr: No, asking him what Mr. Straus said. In violation of what?

A. Violation of the Sherman Anti-trust law.

Q. At that time Mr. Straus thought it was in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Law, is that the idea?

Mr. Beers: I object to it, object to the form of the question. It is leading and asking the opinion of Mr. Straus in respect to a matter of 2400 legal interpretation.

Mr. Spooner: The Supreme Court has decided it was misconstrued by the Supreme Court for a great many years.

Q. Did Mr. Straus express any opinion at that time in regard to what law it was in violation of?

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to as immaterial.

Mr. Burlingham: Calling for the views of the witness as to laws.

2401

Mr. Dorr: This is testimony showing that prior to the time he entered into the alleged conspiracy he believed it to be illegal.

Mr. Bullowa: What of it?

Mr. Dorr: It certainly throws considerable light on the testimony which he has given on the stand today.

Mr. Guiler: Go ahead, Mr. Richard.

A. We had conversations on the question of some of the conference rules and I consulted my lawyers; my lawyer told me that he thought—

2402

Mr. Spooner: Never mind about your lawyers.

Q. No; just Straus' opinion? A. Mr. Straus' opinion was that I ought to proceed against the conference by reporting the matter to the District Attorney, which I refused to do.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Straus in regard to Mr. Bullowa presenting this matter to the District Attorney's office?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading and incompetent and entirely immaterial.

2403

A. I don't recollect that. I only recollect that Mr. Bullowa called on me once and I don't know on what subject.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Did you see Mr. Bullowa? Did he call on you? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Guiler: Now, Mr. Richard, how did you come to represent the North West Transport Company as agent?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as immaterial and irrelevant.

2404 Oscar L. Richard

A. At the time we represented the North West Transport Line, we represented the Prince Line and the Lloyd Italiano which were both members of the conference and there was a certain pressure brought to bear by the conference lines, the Prince Line and the Lloyd Italiano, and they asked us to get out.

Mr. Spooner: I move to strike out the answer as incompetent and not responsive, etc.

Q. Who asked you to get out? A. Both the Prince Line and Lloyd Italiano.

2405 Q. Did they give you any reasons for asking you to get out? A. They said it was disagreeable.

Q. Who said that? A. The Prince Line and the Lloyd Italiano.

Q. What member of that line spoke to you; who was it said this to you? A. Wrote it to us.

Mr. Spooner: I now move to strike out this testimony. The letters are the best evidence.

Q. Have you got those letters now? A. I haven't got them here.

Q. You have them in the office? A. I believe so.

Q. Will you produce those, Mr. Richard? A. Yes.

2406 Q. Now, Mr. Richard how soon did this competition with the Russian Volunteer Fleet to Libau start out after you began to represent the Volunteer Fleet? A. You mean in rates?

Q. Yes, rates or sailings of vessels by the conference lines? A. As soon as it became public that the Russian Volunteer Fleet was to start a service from Libau to New York, the Russian East Asiatic Company quickly put on two steamers.

Q. Do you remember what steamers those were? A. The Allemania and Albingia.

Q. Of what line were those steamers? A. Two Hamburg steamers.

2407

Q. Hamburg-American Line? A. Hamburg-American Line; the line was called the Russian East Asiatic Line and Emil Boas was manager.

Q. And he was at that same time the director of the Hamburg-American Line? A. Director at New York, yes; later on there were one or two more steamers added I believe by the Russian East Asiatic Company.

Mr. Burlingham: Ran to Libau?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. Was that the New Hamburg Line? A. No, called the Russian East Asiatic Company.

By Mr. Guiler:

2408

Q. What was it caused you to give up the agency of the North West Transport Company?

Mr. Burlingham: Objected to as entirely immaterial and irrelevant.

A. I just told that.

Q. Were there any other reasons than you have already given? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you heard Mr. Straus testify this morning, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard him state, as I remember it, that you retained the money for prepaid tickets and returned it when the passengers were carried to the other side, on the ground that you thought these various lines were shaky; that is practically what he said, is that so?

2409

Mr. Spooner: That is not what he said.

Mr. Burlingham: We object on the ground it does not state the fact.

Q. Because the lines were not financially responsible? A. Our agreement called for payment prepaid within forty-eight hours after receiving the list of passengers forwarded.

Q. You retained it under your agreement and not for the reasons stated?

2410

Mr. Beers: That is objected to; he has not testified to that.

Q. I will put it this way: What were the reasons? A. There was no question about the financial responsibility of the line.

Mr. Beers: I move to strike that answer out as not responsive.

Q. Now, did you tell Mr. Straus that it was on account of the lack of financial responsibility that you did this? A. Absolutely not.

2411 Q. So that what he said this morning was untrue? A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. How long have you represented the Italian Line? A. Six years, the Lloyd Italiano.

Q. During that time from what territory has the Lloyd Italiano drawn its steerage business, its westbound steerage business? A. Italy.

Q. Exclusively? A. Yes, sir. Sometimes get a few passengers from Syria and Greece, a few of them.

Q. Has it at any time booked passengers from continental points? A. At one time.

2412 Q. When was that? A. Not from, to continental points.

Q. Does it book them to continental points at the present time? A. Not at the present time.

Q. When was it that it did book eastbound traffic to continental points? A. I think it must have been two or three years ago.

Q. Prior to 1909? A. I don't recollect it; I would have to refresh my memory from the records.

Q. Do you recall whether or not at the time when you did so book eastbound traffic to continental points, you published inland traffic rates to continental points? A. Yes, sir.

2413

Q. Have you got any of those rate lists still in your possession? A. I may have; I don't know.

Q. Will you make search for them? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall the circumstances under which you ceased to book eastbound passengers inland to continental points? A. I think there was a war on rates to Italian ports at the time by the German lines and the northern continental lines made by the northern continental lines, North German Lloyd and Hamburg Line.

Q. How was that war terminated? A. We received instruction from the home office to cease quoting rates to continental ports.

2414

Q. Have you any information as to whether there was any agreement entered into between the Mediterranean lines and the North Atlantic lines by which the Mediterranean lines agreed not to book eastbound traffic to continental points? A. I understood there was such an agreement made.

Mr. Beers: I move to strike out the answer as incompetent.

Q. And thereafter you discontinued that booking? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any difficulty while you were with the Russian Volunteer Fleet with regard to the passage of passengers of your line through the control stations in Germany?

2415

Mr. Beers: I object upon the ground that the witness is not shown to have had any knowledge on the subject. He has testified he was agent in New York and was not in Europe.

A. Yes, sir; considerable.

Q. What was the nature of that difficulty?

2416

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

A. Passengers, individuals and sometimes whole families would arrive at the frontier station, holding tickets for a Russian Volunteer Fleet steamer and be either detained there until they could communicate with their relatives on this side asking for remittances to be forwarded on some other steamer of a conference line, or else they were returned to the place from whence they came.

Mr. Beers: I now move to strike out this testimony upon the same grounds and as hearsay.

Q. What became of your tickets that you had sold them under those circumstances? A. Tickets were returned and cancelled and money refunded.

Q. You refunded the money to passengers? A. Yes.

Mr. Burlingham: I would like to produce a few more documents in response to the call of the District Attorney.

I produce the minutes of meetings of the Mediterranean conference, held in New York in 1907, 1908 and 1909.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 225.

I also produce in response to the same call from the office of the conference, arrangements with trunk lines similar to arrangements with Central Passenger Association, between January 1st, 1908, to and including May 1st, 1912, east and westbound. I also produce notice to agents, consisting of letters from the special committee of conference lines dated January 21st and January 26th, 1909, February 5th and 8th, 1909, March 4th and 24th, 1909, August 31st, 1909, and circular letter from the conference lines to their agents dated September 1st.

1909, with reference to commercial allowances from New York to Buffalo and points west. Letter from special westbound railroad committee to the lines, dated August 26th, 1910, and letter from the lines to the agents dated September 15th, 1910, with reference to commercial allowances from New York to Pittsburg and points west, and further letters from the westbound railroad committee to the lines themselves, dated March 8th and March 9th, 1911, and report from the special committee, dated January 31st, 1912, stating the result of negotiations with the Trunk Line Railroad for westbound emigrant forwarding, these arrangements to be effective February 1st, 1912, and a notice from the lines to the agents, dated February 1st, 1912, announcing withdrawal of commission on westbound first and mixed class inland forwarding in connection with westbound steamship business. 2419 2420

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 226 for identification.

In answer to the request of the District Attorney for the production of rate lists compiled by Mr. Sandford, I have to state that the present secretary of the conference had searched the office files and finds no such tabulation as is requested but has produced at my request a voluminous body of documents showing changes in rates between June 11th, 1907, and December 28th, 1911. 2421

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 227.

If the District Attorney prefers the secretary of the conference should make a table of these, I will do my best and have him prepare such a table, showing the changes in rates say from the port of New York to some designated ports, during the periods of years, if that will be of any value. You look those over and let me know whether you want to put them in or whether you prefer the others.

Recess taken until 2 o'clock P. M.

Afternoon session.

EXAMINED by Mr. Spooner:

Q. Something was said to you in regard to your 2423 line from Russia, coming from Russia, the passengers being turned back at the German frontier? A. Yes.

Q. Did you expect to be understood as imputing that to your competitors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think of no other reason than that? A. No, sir.

Q. Did they have passports, those people? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not the German government permits a steamship to do business in its territory without concessions—requires as a condition precedent to transacting steamship business, emigrant business within its territory, that it shall have a 2424 concession from the government itself to do so? A. Yes, for any tickets sold within the German territory.

Q. How? A. In case tickets are to be sold in the German territory, the agent must have a concession from the German government.

Q. Can you land passengers in a German port without a concession from the German government? A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know whether the German government has got any agreement with the United States to not admit passengers—emigrants from Russia, to be transported through Germany, unless they were subjected to a medical examination at any time? A. I only know that emigrants have to be subjected to an examination by a doctor at the port before sailing.

Q. You did not mean to testify in answer to my question, that it was not a requirement of the German government? A. You said the American government.

Q. No, no. The German government? A. Oh, yes; the German government require an examination at the frontier.

Q. Yes. Now, were your people examined, the people who held your tickets? A. Perfectly willing to be examined.

Q. Were they examined? A. They were rejected by the steamship company's agent. 2426

Q. On what account? A. They would not forward them.

Q. Who maintains the control stations where these examinations are made? A. I believe the Hamburg Line and the North German Lloyd and the Holland-American and the Red Star participate in the expense.

Q. Did your company participate in that expense? A. Perfectly willing to.

Q. Did it offer to? A. I don't know.

Q. Did you ever apply for permission to? A. I can't say.

Q. Then, you seem to imply that in your opinion these people who came from Russia into Germany on 2427 your tickets from the United States, were examined there entirely at the expense of the old companies? A. No, sir; our company would have been very willing to pay a share in the expense, and yet I don't know whether they did. I don't know what they did.

Q. Then all you know about it is that the people were stopped? A. Yes.

Q. And you think that was caused solely by the hostility of your competitors? A. Yes; and the poor innocent emigrants had to suffer.

Q. Yes, the emigrants suffer a good deal anyhow. They suffer a good deal from some of the steamship companies? A. In what way?

Q. Well, I would think if I were a poor, ignorant emigrant, and came to this country, and worked like a dog to raise money to send to my wife and children and get a ticket on your line, buying it at New Britain —and the ticket turned out to be not good, and the money was refunded to me, to think I should have to pay the commission of your agents in selling that ticket. That is the testimony here. I may be wrong about it. I am putting myself for a moment in the 2429 position— A. We are talking about the emigrants suffering. That is not the emigrants; that is the purchaser of the ticket.

Q. Well, he is the emigrant? A. I understood you to say the emigrant had to suffer on the steamer.

Q. No, no. You have been in the business forty years? A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr: I object to Senator Spooner's remarks, on the ground that they do not accurately state the evidence, in that he states that the purchasers of tickets at New Britain, Connecticut, were not returned the purchase price, 2430 and that the tickets proved to be invalid, whereas all the testimony is that the tickets were good.

Mr. Spooner: Well, they were not accepted —I mean by that.

Witness: Whenever tickets are cancelled, no matter what line, the agents always deduct their commissions.

Q. One of the witnesses testified that he was notified that the ticket had been sent back, after seeing a letter from his wife, asking him for more money, and he went to the agent, and the agent got him back the money less five dollars commission? A. You will find that printed on the back of every prepaid ticket of every steamship line, in case of the ticket being cancelled the money will be refunded less the agent's commission of ten per cent.

2431

Q. I think that would be all right— A. So, it is not exceptional with one line.

Q. I think that would be all right if the tickets were cancelled because it is something—the purchaser of the ticket wanted it cancelled or because the person was not aided to come, or something of that kind. But here the ticket was cancelled because he could not use it. A. Then you must blame those lines.

2432

Q. I understood that it happened because of lack of certification? A. No.

Q. Suppose that had happened?

Mr. Dorr: I object to that.

A. No matter what the reason is—you can mention a dozen reasons that the money will be refunded—we refund to the agents; the steamship companies refund to the sub-agents the net amount which he sends to us less ten per cent.

Q. You have seen a great many lines come and go since you have got into this business? A. Some of them, yes; not a great many.

Q. Well, how many lines were there in operation between New York and London and Hamburg when you began this business?

Mr. Dorr: Is that confined to passenger lines?

Mr. Spooner: Yes; passenger lines.

A. I can recall at the time I went into the business there were two lines to Hamburg.

Q. What were they? A. Or some years after, when we first went into the business—the Hamburg-American Line and the other the Edward Carle's Line called the direct Hamburg Line. That line was later purchased by the Hamburg-American Company. That line went from Hamburg to New York.

2434 Oscar L. Richard

Q. How many were there between New York and Liverpool? A. The White Star Line, the Inman Lines, National Line, Williams & Guion Line, the Giuon Line—that is all I can give from memory.

Q. You have seen a great many rate wars since that time? A. There was another line from Hamburg, later called the Union Line, and a line from Hamburg to Montreal called the Hanover Line.

2435 Q. Have you seen lines driven out of business by competition here? A. Yes.

Q. More than one, during these years? A. I am only trying to give the history; I am thinking of two lines that were represented—

Q. Yes? A. The New York and Continental Line and the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Q. Well, back of that? A. I know some lines went out of existence; I don't know the reason. The Williams & Guion Line and the National Line.

Q. Was there great competition in those days? A. The Carle Line which I spoke of, which the Hamburg Line bought up—the competition was too strong. The competition was very strong, so they bought that up;

2436 bought up the steamers and took over the directors. Mr. Ballin at that time was running the line. He charged the space in the steamers provisioned them—paid Mr. Carroll for so much space, so many cubic feet. He attended to anything—Mr. Ballin—and that was the beginning of his career, and he made such a success of it that the Hamburg Line finally made an arrangement with Mr. Ballin to take over the steamers, they had to take over Mr. Ballin at the same time, and he was a subcontractor at the same time, and he worked himself up to the head of the line.

Q. That is creditable to anybody, is it not? A. Very creditable.

Q. You don't give this history simply to reflect—
A. No, I think it very creditable for a person to work themselves up the way he did.

Q. Is there an understanding between the steamship companies sailing between the same ports, employed in the same class of business in respect to passengers in the rates when there was any competition. What would be the effect on some of the lines? A. If there was any competition?

Q. Yes? A. It would drive some of the lines out of business and curtail it, between the United States and foreign countries.

2438

Q. The stronger would remain and the weaker would go? A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Then you have no hesitation in saying that there is some arrangement between lines on such matters, and it is usual and necessary? A. I don't think they can exist without some arrangement.

Mr. Dorr: I object to it on the ground that it does not relate to anything on direct-examination, is not cross-examination, and the witness is not qualified as an expert.

Mr. Spooner: If the direct-examination had been a direct-examination instead of a cross-examination—

2439

Mr. Dorr: I think you might confine yourself to matters which were taken up on the so-called cross-examination.

Q. Because of your long experience in this business and practical knowledge of it, I ask you the question whether in your opinion the rates in the prevailing—the so called lines, for the transportation of steerage passengers are or are not unreasonable?

Mr. Dorr: Objected to on the ground that no foundation has been laid. The witness has not been qualified as an expert on the cost of steerage transportation and has not shown that he has any knowledge of the existing rates and the conditions of the North Atlantic Steerage business.

A. They are very reasonable.

Mr. Bullowa: You saw Mr. Schwab of the North German Lloyd? A. Yes.

Q. And the only thing you made complaint about at the conference was rule nine? A. Yes.

Q. And you offered when you saw him to agree upon rates? A. I offered to maintain rates and com-2441 missions.

Q. Do you think it is desirable to maintain rates and commissions? A. Absolutely necessary.

Q. It is essential for all the lines? A. Yes.

Q. Now in connection with when you were operating the Northwest Transport and the Volunteer Fleet the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, Ltd., was also fighting the conference at one time? A. Yes.

Q. And you co-operated with Mr. Straus and the Russian and the East Asiatic Company in fighting the conference? A. Yes.

Q. And you did all you could to seduce the agents of the conference? A. Yes.

2442 Q. And you succeeded in some cases? A. Some instances.

Q. You retaliated as far as you could in securing the business from the conference agents? A. Yes.

Q. Do you think there would be anything unreasonable for a railroad ticket office to refuse to sell the tickets of another line, another railroad—

Mr. Dorr: I object to that as incompetent and irrelevant and immaterial.

Q. (Continuing). Of a competing railroad? A. Unreasonable?

Q. Yes? A. No.

Q. Now, you know that these conference lines have had great expense to build up throughout the country regular ticket agencies, have they not? A. Well, my firm started in business long before anyone else did to build up these agencies and we were probably entitled to have that—

Q. I know, but part of the time you have been in the conference. You have represented conference lines, and you are today representing conference lines? A. Yes.

Q. You applied on behalf of the Northwest Transportation Line to become a member of the conference? A. No, sir.

2444

Q. On behalf of the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. I believe the companies in Europe applied to the Russian Volunteer Fleet; not here.

Q. As matter of fact, these agencies have been building up throughout the country at great expense, have they not? A. Yes.

Q. And you thought it was perfectly fair that some other company that simply came in the business should go to these agents and expect them to sell your tickets? A. The Russian Volunteer Fleet competed only with the Holland-American Line, because the Russian Volunteer Fleet Steamers touched at Rotterdam on the way to Libau. There was not any other line to Libau and I have had no objections whatever for the Holland-American Line to give up the agency. I don't think it was right for them, even the lines that go up to Montreal to take the agency away from agents that we had appointed.

Q. You thought it perfectly fair—you thought it was reasonable for the regular agent of these different lines to sell tickets for your line although they were competing with their own previous clients—regular clients? A. As far as that is concerned they are all competing lines.

2446 Oscar L. Richard

Q. They are all competing lines? A. They are all competing lines? Why should they just choose the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

Q. You remember paying your agents higher commissions? A. We offered inducements. I offered to maintain the same rates and commissions.

Q. You started to pay them higher commissions and then expected these lines to sit idly by while you were taking the business for the Volunteer Fleet? A. Is that a question.

Q. Did you? A. I expected—

2447 Q. For the lines to sit idly by?

Mr. Dorr: I object to that on the ground that it does not properly state the evidence as already indicated, which has not shown that the commissions were immediately increased. As I understand the testimony the Russian Volunteer Fleet was perfectly willing to maintain regular commissions.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the only difference between these tickets of the line and the railroad ticket agents throughout the country, is that the railroad ticket agent is paid a salary and these agents of the steamship lines are paid on a commission basis? A. I 2448 presume there are plenty of railroad ticket agents that sell tickets for various lines, not only for one single line.

Q. I know; but they are usually paid on a salary basis? A. If they are agents for one line alone, then they are on a salary basis.

Q. And then the rates are fixed by law? A. Yes.

Q. And published? A. Yes.

Q. The New York and Continental Line—did you have anything to do with its inception? A. No, sir.

Q. Who were the people back of it? A. William Peterson & Company were the managers.

Q. Well, did you contribute any capital to it? A. No, sir.

Q. Who were the people back of the Northwest Transport Line? A. No—William Peterson & Company and Robertson, Shanklin Company were the backers of the Continental Line.

Q. Who? A. Robertson, Shanklin & Company.

Q. London House? A. I think it was a London House.

Q. Who were the people back of the Northwest Transport Company? A. William Peterson & Company were managers.

2450

Q. Did the Continental Line pay all its indebtedness after it went out of business? A. I think so.

Q. Did the Northwest Transport Line? A. I don't know.

Q. Now, the Prince Line and the Lloyd Italiano asked you to give up the agency— A. I will have to correct that testimony, I was somewhat mistaken there. The letter that I referred to written in 1906 in which I said that I would report the matter to the authorities, and the letter which we received in the spring of 1909, I have not been able to lay my hands on—was from the Lloyd Italiano. The Prince Line had gone out of business in the meanwhile. They had withdrawn their steamers from the Mediterranean trade because there was a new law passed by the Italian Government requiring all emigrants to be forwarded on Prince Line steamers.

Q. The Prince Line was not driven out of business by the conference? A. No.

Mr. Dorr: It was a member of the conference, wasn't it, the Prince Line?

The Witness: It was a member of the conference off and on.

Q. When you withdrew from the agency of the Northwest Transport Line, Vesely & Company became the agents, didn't they? A. Yes.

2452 Q. Had they any connection with you at all? A. No.

Q. Had Vesely been in your employ? A. Yes, long before.

Q. You had no interest in the— A. Well, Mr. Bullowa, has this anything to do with steamship talk—

Q. You had no interest in Vesely & Company?

Mr. Dorr: I object to it as immaterial.

A. Mr. Straus has been very curious on that for several years, and I have always refused to satisfy his 2453 curiosity.

Q. All right, I will withdraw the question. Well, Mr. Richard, the vessels of the Russian Volunteer were expensive vessels to run? A. Yes.

Q. They were not especially fitted for the emigrant trade of the North Atlantic, were they? A. Yes, they were. One, in fact, was the old Prince Bismark of the Hamburg Line.

Q. She had always been a very expensive vessel to run? A. One of the fast steamers. A twenty-one knot steamer.

Q. Then she wasn't especially fitted or equipped for a mechanical running in the North Atlantic? A. Not 2454 under modern conditions.

Q. And the other vessels were of the same class? A. Yes.

Q. That is a vessel that is equipped for economical running can compete very successfully with that class of steamers? A. Of the same tonnage.

Q. Who was the president of the Volunteer Fleet? A. Admiral Nidermuller.

Q. Was Admiral Radloff at one time? A. He is at present; after the line withdrew from the New York service.

Q. Have you ever received letters from him? A. Admiral Radloff?

2455

Q. Yes. A. Personal letters.

Q. You can identify his signature of course? A. Yes.

Q. Of course, he would be better qualified to state why the lines withdrew from the business than you would be, would he not? A. I can only tell you what the president told me at the time the line was run.

Q. Wouldn't he, Admiral Radloff, be better qualified to state why the Volunteer Fleet withdrew from the business than you would be?

Mr. Dorr: Objected to.

(No answer.)

2456

Q. Can you look at that and tell me whether that is Admiral Radloff's signature (handing letter)? A. It looks like it.

Q. You have no question about it, have you? A. No, I have no question about it.

Mr. Bullowa: Then I will offer it in evidence.

Mr. Dorr: I object to this letter as incompetent. It purports to be a letter from a person named A. Radloff to the editor of a newspaper, and I object to it as the declaration of a man not submitted to cross-examination.

2457

The letter was received in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 3.

It reads as follows:

2458 Oscar L. Richard

Russian Volunteer Fleet
19, Morskaia,
St. Petersburg,
12/25 January 1911
No. 165.

The Editor of the "SHIPPING ILLUSTRATED," 22, Thames Street, New York.

Dear Sir:

In your issue of the 7th inst., we find, in an article
2459 headed: "ACTION AGAINST THE TRANS-ATLANTIC POOL," mention made of the Russian Volunteer Fleet as "having been driven out of business" as a result of the practices adopted by the Pool.

We beg to say that the above statement, as far as it concerns the Volunteer Fleet, is not correct, as the Committee of the Russian Volunteer Fleet had decided to suspend their Libau-New York line for reasons of their own that had nothing in common with the attitude taken by the Pool.

Believe us, Dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) A. RADLOFF,
2460 President.

Q. The steamers of the New York and Continental, Avoca, Jelunga, Volturno were not specially equipped or fitted for economical carriage of steerage passengers, were they? A. I know the Volturno was specially built for the traffic.

Q. For the Northwest Transport Line? A. No, for an Italian firm.

Q. She wasn't built for the North Atlantic traffic? A. We were not financially strong enough to take the steamer off the builder's hand, and she was lying in Genoa for quite a while before she was taken over by the New York and Continental Line.

2461

Q. How about the Avoca? A. The Avoca and Jelunga were renamed, so I don't know what their former names were.

Q. They were rather old steamers that were not economically run? A. It may be, I could not say. I was here at the time I could not say that.

Q. Don't you know? A. I was abroad at the time.

Q. Do you think the rate of $20 from New York to Europe is a reasonable rate? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think it is an unreasonable rate?

Mr. Dorr: I object to it, on the ground that the witness has not been qualified, no foundation has been laid for this testimony, and it is not cross-examination on any examination on the direct.

A. Yes.

Q. For steerage passengers? A. Yes.

Q. You think that if a rate of $20 was made by the lines that the lines would be forced to suspend numbers of their sailings? A. Yes.

2463

Mr. Dorr: I object to that on the same ground and also as leading.

Q. And that some lines would be driven out?

Mr. Dorr: Same objection.

A. Yes.

Q. And that the public would not have the advantage of regular sailings almost daily?

Mr. Dorr: I object to it as leading and as entirely speculative, and no foundation being laid, and not cross-examination.

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Richard, have you had any suspicion that the Canadian Northern was back of the Northwest Transport Line?

Mr. Dorr: I object to it on the ground that it is not cross-examination and it is not competent evidence.

Q. Have you had any reason to believe that? A. I have always heard that people identified with the Canadian Northern Railroad were identified with the 2465 New York & Continental Line and Northwest Transport Line and with the Uranium Line.

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike that out as immaterial and irrelevant.

Q. Who were those people as far as you know? A. McKenzie, Mann & Company.

Q. Of Toronto? A. Yes.

Q. Anybody else? A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of Mr. Hanna? A. I have heard of him, yes.

Q. Is he connected with the Canadian Northern? A. I believe he is second or third vice president.

Q. Of the Canadian Northern? A. Yes.

2466 Q. What relation have McKenzie & Mann to the Canadian Northern?

Mr. Dorr: Same objection.

A. I think they built the railroad.

Q. What connection do you understand they have with the New York & Continental, the Northwest Transport, and the Uranium Line? A. It was always my impression that they were backing William Peterson.

Q. Is there any reason you can state why they were first the New York & Continental, then the Northwest Transport and then the Uranium Line? A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know any reason for this succession of companies? A. I don't know.

Mr. Dorr: Objected to.

A. (Continuing.) Except that I was informed that the New York & Continental Line had not enough money and they had to give up the line.

Q. Have you any reason to believe there has been a controversy between the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific? A. No, sir.

2468

By Mr. Beers:

Q. Mr. Richard, I understood you to testify as to certain statements made by conference agents with reference to ships which you represented. Did you personally hear any such statements made? A. No, sir; heard them through our traveling man.

Q. But you yourself never heard any such statement? A. No, sir—I was told it was in the Hebrew papers of the East Side.

Q. You were told that? A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the paper? A. Mr. Fourman at the time—when he was connected with it—

Q. Did you see the paper? A. I could not read it 2469 anyway.

By Mr. Burlingham:

Q. This letter, Mr. Richard, Exhibit 13, dated February 28, 1907, seems to refer to first cabin tickets, it says, "We have a letter from an agent today who after having sold his first cabin ticket says that the purchaser who is a reverend gentleman of responsibility was approached by two well known conference agents who gave him no end of worry by telling him that the line was not fit to send his dog by." Does the whole letter refer to first cabin or steerage accomodation? A. That is only one instance.

Q. And even that instance was not brought to your knowledge, I suppose, was not a matter of knowledge by you? A. This one?

Q. Yes. A. Well, it must have been an agent who brought this information.

Q. The agent had received a letter to that effect, about a reverend gentleman, do you think? A. At the time this was written I was in St. Moritz, Switzerland.

2471 Q. You didn't write it yourself then? A. I didn't write it myself.

Q. At that time, in February, 1907, wasn't there a rate war on? A. Where to?

Q. North Atlantic? A. February, 1907?

Q. Yes. A. I don't think so.

Q. Do you know the date of the conference agreement so often referred to in this suit is February 5th, 1908. Didn't that agreement follow a prolonged rate war of several years? A. From our records of the Russian Volunteer Fleet we charged in February, 1907, the same as we charged in July, 1906, the same rate, $37 to Libau and $30 to Rotterdam. There was no change to the following June.

2472 Q. Well, that is not enough to base a statement as to whether there was or was not a rate war on? A. I can't tell. I can only go by our figures.

Q. Well, but your recollection must enable you to say that the conference agreement of February, 1908, to which some of your lines, I believe were a party— A. Oh, you are talking of the Italian Lines?

Q. No. A. I don't know anything about the agreement of the Continental Line. We were not a party.

Q. You have no knowledge of the North Atlantic Conference? A. No.

Q. The lines that you represented were not in that conference at any time? A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not happen to remember what the conditions of steerage traffic were in the North Atlantic in the year 1907? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever visited the control stations in Germany? A. No, sir; passing through Eydtkuhnen several times.

Q. Is that on the border, next to Russia? A. Yes.

Q. It is a German town on the frontier? A. Yes.

Q. You passed through it and did not visit the control station? A. Yes.

2474

Q. And never have visited it? A. No, sir.

Q. All the testimony which you gave this morning to what happened at the frontier cities or at the frontiers of Germany and Russia is pure hearsay, is it not? A. Hearsay and letters.

Q. I understood you to say that you had some conferences with Mr. Straus about the conference. Did that relate to agents, exclusively? A. No, it related to rates also.

Q. And the rates were too low or too high. What was it? A. He thought the rates were too high.

Q. And you thought not, I suppose? A. I thought not. I thought I would give more commission and reduce rates.

2475

Q. And he wanted you to proceed against the lines? A. Yes.

Q. Did you do so? A. No, sir; threaten him—

Q. Did he want you to proceed or threaten to proceed? A. Wanted to proceed.

Q. You were satisfied to threaten and not proceed? A. Yes.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. When you fixed the rates of the Russian Volunteer Fleet were the rates fixed in New York or by cable from abroad? A. By us.

2476 Q. Do you think they were reasonable?

Mr. Dorr: I object.

A. Originally, yes.

Q. When they were very much lower you thought they were unreasonably low, when they got down to $20? A. We had to follow with the others or else get no business.

Q. You thought there was no harm for you in the Russian East Asiatic Line to get into a small conference together and against the other conference? A. Get into a conference?

2477 Q. Your combining with Mr. Straus? A. The only thing we objected to—we didn't care whether the other lines appointed our agents. We had no objection to the other line appointing agents so long as they didn't take our business away. We had no conference.

Q. Didn't you have an agreement regarding rates? A. No.

Q. Were not the East Asiatic Company's and your rates the same? A. The what?

Q. Were not the rates of the East Asiatic and of the Volunteer Fleet always the same? A. I don't know. I can tell you what my rates were. We con-

2478 sulted at different times.

Q. If they were the same it was on some coincidence, wasn't it? A. I suppose so. It depended upon what steamer ran against it. Sometimes a steamer would run against a competing steamer and he would have to put the rates down to what the competing steamer charged.

Q. The Volunteer Fleet went out with full cabin and full steerage? A. Not full steerage. I think we got a fair share, I think we had better than any other conference line.

Q. And notwithstanding that you thought the conference ought to give you their agents too? A. Yes.

Q. You thought that would be fair and reasonable? A. Yes, because it was the intention of the Volunteer Fleet to have a weekly service instead of a semi-monthly service. We wanted to get more steamers.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Did you regard the methods used by the conference lines as fair competition against your line?

Mr. Beers: That is objected to, the witness's views on the subject are not evidence.

2480

A. No, sir.

Q. In what respect did you regard it as unfair competition? A. In preventing conference agents from representing the Volunteer Fleet? That was my sole objection to it.

Q. Did you regard it as unfair for the conference lines to agree to designating one particular ship of some line and to put it on a sailing basis with your ships?

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

A. Yes, my sole objection was regarding Rule 9. In case they revoked that Rule 9, I agreed to raise rates and maintain commissions and follow the rules of the conference.

2481

Q. You were willing to do anything in those lines so long as you would have an equal opportunity with them to have your tickets sold by the agency system which you had built up? A. Yes.

Q. And you did build it up, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. At your expense? A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Bullowa has spoken about this agency system being built up at considerable expense. Wasn't that the expense of the agents and not the steamship line? A. The steamship line had to pay for the travelers to go around the different towns and appoint agents and look after them.

Q. That was the only expense you were put to in the matter? A. That is the chief expense; the others were merely postage and letter writing.

Q. Now, what is your test of a reasonable rate, Mr. Richard, for steerage traffic? A. Well, I should say according to the speed and tonnage of the steamer and the distances they travel, I should call it from $30 to $45.

2483 Q. You misunderstand my question; I ask to have it stricken out. You have used the phrase "reasonable rate;" what is your test of what is a reasonable rate, and what is an unreasonable rate? A. My test is according to the dividends the different companies pay. Last year and the year before when the rates were about $35 to $40, they paid five per cent or six per cent dividends.

Q. Did you take into consideration the money earned on freight business? A. Yes, sir, total business for the year.

Q. How do you determine whether or not the freight rates are unreasonably low and the steerage rates are unreasonably high? A. Judging by the 2484 rates charged by the Lloyd Italiano which I represent, both for passage and for cargo, they have been higher than in a long while and all they paid last year was five per cent to the stockholders.

Q. Is that dividend paid out of the freight earnings or out of the passenger earnings? A. Out of both combined, the result of the years workings.

Q. How much of that dividend is paid by freight and how much by passenger, do you know? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, how can you determine then whether or not the passenger rate is reasonable and the freight rate unreasonable? A. If they carried no freight the rates would have to be very much higher.

Q. I know, but how do you know that the freight rates are not unreasonably low? A. Because I know they are not low.

Q. You regard the freight rates as high? A. Well, they are reasonable at the present time.

Q. How much of the earnings of the company should come from the passenger business and how much should come from freight business; what is the test? A. That is entirely relative.

Q. What? A. Sometimes the steamer will carry one hundred passengers and sometimes it will carry twelve hundred or more. 2486

Q. Well, how much of the earnings of the company— A. You have to take the whole year together.

Q. How much of the earnings which were devoted to dividends and from which dividends were arrived at in your opinion, should come from passengers and how much from freight? A. I can't answer that; have to take the whole year's workings.

Q. Is there any test; what is the test to your mind then of reasonableness of the steerage rate; returns of the company are made up from first cabin, second cabin, steerage and freight, are they not? A. Yes, sir. 2487

Q. Now, how do you determine what proportion of the earnings freight should contribute and what proportion the third class business should contribute and what proportion first class business should contribute? A. That has to be determined by the average of the year previous.

Q. In other words, you merely look to the rates in the previous year and to the results reached by them? A. The what?

Q. The results reached by them and then if there is not more than a certain dividend, you say the rates are unreasonably low, and if there is more than a certain dividend, they are unreasonably high? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what dividends the White Star Line paid? A. No.

Q. Do you know what rates, it charges for North Atlantic business? A. No, sir.

Q. You don't mean to say then that for the White Star Line for instance that these steerage rates are reasonable rates, do you Mr. Richard? A. I don't know anything about their rates.

2489 Q. You have no information as to the cost of their doing business? A. No, I have not.

Q. Have you any information as to the profits which are made from the steerage business? A. No.

Q. You have no information from which you can judge whether or not the steerage rates charged by the White Star Line are or are not reasonable? A. The only thing when they have excessive dividends, everybody knows it.

Q. Do you know what the cost of doing the steerage business of the Holland-Amerika Line is? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what proportion of their earnings comes from their steerage business? A. No, sir.

2490 Q. Have you any basis on which you can determine whether or not the rates charged by the Holland-Amerika Line are or are not reasonable? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what the expense of doing the steerage business is for the Hamburg-American Line at the present time? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what their profits are? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any basis then for determining whether or not the steerage rates charged by the Hamburg-American Line are or are not reasonable? A.

2491

I am under the impression that I read their dividend was eight per cent.

Q. But that dividend is derived from the first cabin business, from the freight business, the second cabin business, is it not all combined? A. All combined.

Q. It may be that the first cabin rates or the second cabin rates are reasonably low for the service and the third class rates are unreasonably low and the company may be paying that dividend almost entirely out of steerage business so far as you know, isn't that true? A. No; I know they could not pay it out of steerage business alone.

Q. In other words, the steerage business is not a sufficiently important part of the business, or sufficiently large part of the business? A. It is a very important part of the business.

Q. It is a very important part, is it not, a very profitable part? A. Under the rates.

Q. At the present rates? A. Freight rates at present.

Q. Very profitable? A. I don't know very profitable, no, not very profitable—profitable.

Q. Do you know the cost of doing the steerage business at the present time for the Hamburg-American Line? A. I have nothing to do with the Hamburg-American.

Q. Do you know their income from the steerage business? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what their actual capital invested in that business is? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you able to state whether or not the returns from the steerage rate are or are not more or less than a fair profit for the capital used in that part of their business; you have not any information on that, have you, Mr. Richard? A. I have no information on it, no, sir.

Q. Take the Cunard Line; I will ask you the general questions, have you any information as to the cost of doing the North Atlantic steerage business? A. None but the Lloyd Italiano.

Q. That is not engaged in the North Atlantic Steerage business? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any information as to whether or not the actual capital of the various companies engaged in the North Atlantic steerage traffic is or is not equal to their stock issues on which dividends are paid? A. I have no information, no, sir.

2495 Q. The Hamburg-American Line and the North German Lloyd and the Cunard and the White Star, are all members of the same Conference that your line, the line you represent, are members of, are they not?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent and immaterial and not within the issues.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are all parties to an agreement, are they not, as to the division of the Mediterranean traffic?

Mr. Beers: Same objection.

A. I don't know.

2496 Q. What is your information on that point? A. I saw the agreement of 1899, but I have not seen it since and I don't think the White Star Line was in that agreement.

Q. Was the International Mercantile Marine Company in it?

Mr. Beers: Are you enquiring about "AA" now?

Mr. Dorr: I am enquiring whether the parties to "AA" or certain of them were also parties to an agreement as to the Mediterranean traffic.

Mr. Beers: Then I renew my objection.

2497

The Witness: I don't think so.

Q. Do you recollect whether or not they became parties to it thereafter? A. I couldn't say, I don't think they did, because they were a northern line, don't go to Italy.

Q. Have no Italian ships? A. No, have no ships to Italy.

Q. Did they at any time run ships in the Italian service? A. International Mercantile Marine? Nothing but the White Star Line, the White Star Line ran to Italy.

Q. It is running now? A. Yes, always did.

Q. Are you sure they are not parties to the agreement at the present time? A. I do not know whether they are or not. The agreement was made on the other side and I took very little interest in it.

Q. I understood you to testify in answer to a question by Mr. Bullowa, or rather Mr. Bullowa asked you the question as I recall it—is not the commission paid by the railroads, but their rates fixed by law, and I understood you to assent to that proposition. Do you know of any such law that fixes the commission paid to railroad agents? A. I understood him to say rates.

Q. I think the record will show that it was a commission.

Mr. Bullowa: No, the rates were fixed.

Q. You know of no law that fixed the rates paid to the— A. Oh, yes, the Interstate Commerce Commission fixes the rates.

Q. Fixes the rate of commission? A. No.

Q. The railroad rate? A. Yes.

Q. There is no law so far as you know, which in any way regulates the commission which is paid by the railroads to their agents? A. No, sir.

Q. Did I understand you to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission fixed the rates of railroads? A. So I always understood, yes.

2500 Q. So that the rates which are made by the railroads to the company, according to your information, are fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission? A. They have to be so; I understood always that they were fixed.

Mr. Burlingham: Ultimately they are, aren't they? They are unfixed if they are wrong.

Mr. Dorr: I am trying to acertain what the witness really knows about this matter.

The Witness: What I meant was they are regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the rates 2501 are filed with them.

Q. All that you mean is the railroads file with the Interstate Commerce Commission public rates? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Richard, whether or not you called it to the attention of the Conference Lines the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission that the traffic agreements between the railroads while not within the pooling section of the Interstate Commerce Act was in restraint of competition?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent and immaterial.

2502 A. The only thing I remember is the report of the Conference lawyers in which they said that the Interstate was—

Mr. Spooner: That is not proper.

Q. What I am asking is whether you—don't you recall writing a letter to that effect, Mr. Richard? A. My recollection is that the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that the agreement of the Western Passenger Association with the steamship lines was undoubtedly in restraint of competition.

Mr. Spooner: When was that statement made.

The Witness: I don't know the date, but I believe at the time that the railroads submitted all of the agreements to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Dorr: That is the agreement by which the traffic was to be divided among the railroad companies by which the steamship companies were to insure the division of the traffic among the railroads, that is the matter to which you refer, is it not?

The Witness: I don't think so; it is not my impression.

Q. Do you know what the actual capital invested by the Lloyd Italiano is? A. Yes, sir.

2504

Q. Do you know the actual physical value of the ships of that line at the present time? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with the returns from the freight of that line? A. No, sir.

Q. With the expense of handling the freight of that line? A. At this port?

Q. Yes? A. Yes.

Q. On the other side? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what is paid for coal for that line? A. Yes, sir, on this side, yes, sir.

Q. What do you pay for coal? A. $3.25 a ton, and we take coal for the round trip.

Q. Is that a higher rate than has prevailed up to recently? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been paying that for the last six years? A. That is the price of the Irwin & White coal, the best class of coal.

It is agreed that the taking of testimony by the Government shall not extend beyond Wednesday, the 3rd inst., at this time, but that counsel for the defense will produce, so far as they are able, documents called for by the Government at the Government's convenience, within the next week or two, the Government reserving the right to produce such further witnesses as they may deem advisable and proper at the September hearing, and the counsel for the defence agrees to grant the Government such extension of time in the taking of proofs as the Government may request.

Mr. Dorr: Then we will resume on or about September 1st, and after tomorrow adjourn until the 9th of July at 2 o'clock P. M.

By Mr. Burlingham:

2507 Q. Your experience of forty years in the steamship business has not been confined exclusively to the passenger business, has it? A. No, to cargo business as well.

Q. You represented some lines as general agent and you have represented some lines as passenger agent, have you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you undertook to say that the rates charged by the Conference Lines were reasonable, were you basing that statement at all upon your experience as a steamship man? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And while it is quite true that you know nothing about the internal arrangements of the cost of operating the Hamburg-American Line, you do know some-2508 thing about the cost of operating your own lines, don't you? A. I know the cost of operating them from this side.

Q. Do you know the capitalization of the lines you have represented? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the dividends that they have paid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have not paid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know the cost of equipping, victualling and supplying a vessel, don't you? A. Approximately.

Q. Is there any material difference between the operation of a steamer by way of Gibralter to the Mediterranean, than to Continental ports in the North Atlantic? A. Because the coal is higher in Italy than it is in the North Atlantic.

Q. It is customary for you apparently to coal your vessels here for the round trip? A. Generally.

Q. The voyage is somewhat longer by the Mediterranean? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The cost of feeding steerage passengers, the cost of feeding members of the crew, wages, and so forth, is easy enough to calculate from one to the other, isn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Making such differences as the different character of food, &c., called for, is that right? A. Yes. sir. 2510

Q. In ascertaining the cost of carrying third class passengers, steerage passengers, is it proper to exclude all consideration of the cost of coaling, manning, officering, supplying the ship and confining one's consideration to the steward's department? A. No, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I object to that on the ground that it is not material to anything on re-direct.

Mr. Burlingham: That is what Mr. Thomas stated.

Mr. Dorr: I object to that also.

Q. I suppose the most reliable thing for a steamer 2511 is to carry a good number of first cabin and third cabin passengers and a full cargo? A. Where they have the proper accommodation for first cabin, some steamers carry only emigrants and cargo.

Q. Now, with the very marked difference in the number of passengers carried at different sailings at different times of the year, it is impossible to determine the cost per capita for carrying steerage passengers by any one passage, I suppose? A. Yes, impossible.

Mr. Dorr: I object to that; it may be impossible for this witness.

2512

Q. It has to be done by averages? A. At the end of the year.

Q. And running over a considerable period of time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the same way, I suppose, in order to calculate with any degree of fairness the cost of carrying passengers, one would have to ascertain what the average quantity of cargo carried was, and what the average number of first cabin passengers were, if any were carried? A. And second cabin.

Q. And second, too, that is true, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

2513

Q. I understood you to say in answer to Mr. Bullowa to carry steerage passengers across the Atlantic at $20 was not a fair reasonable charge? A. According to my experience, yes.

Q. You base that on your experience, don't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understood you to say in answer to Mr. Dorr that to carry such passengers that a reasonable rate for such passengers would be from $30 to $45, dependent on the character of the steamer? A. Yes, sir, and the length of the voyage.

Q. By character of steamer I mean the speed and the accommodations, is that it? A. And the tonnage.

2514

Q. Is it on these considerations that you base your statement that the charges for the transportation of steerage passengers by the Conference Lines are reasonable? A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. How much do you allow for service of stewards in your estimate of $30 as a reasonable fee? A. I don't know what pay they get.

Q. You don't know what pay they get? A. No, sir; paid on the other side.

Q. How much have you allowed for pay in the engine room? A. I don't know; engaged on the other side.

Q. How much have you allowed for provisions in the payment on the other side? A. I don't know what they pay on the other side.

Q. How much of your $30 rate did you allow for profit? A. How much did I do what?

Q. How much have you allowed for profits in your $30 and $45 rate? A. When I say $30 to $45 I am judging by previous rates, that were lower when the companies were unable to pay dividends.

Q. The only test that you have then is whether or not the company did in fact pay dividends at a time when a certain passenger rate was in force, is it? A. That is right.

Q. It is not true that the reason that the company did not pay dividends at that time might have been due to the fact that they did not have a good passenger business, or that they did not have a good freight business, or freight rates were unduly low, isn't that the true reason? A. We have steamers that have only twelve cabin passengers.

Q. Answer my question; the reason why dividends were not paid at that time may have been due to the fact that the freight business was poor, that freight rates had been cut, or that the first cabin business was poor in the case of those steamers where first cabin passengers were carried? A. Only partly true; some passenger steamers ought to carry two or three hundred tons of freight, or it really doesn't count very much.

Q. Well, now, have you the figures for the cost of steerage passengers for the various ships of your line? A. The various ships?

Q. Yes? A. I have the eastbound, yes.

Q. And the cost of carriage of those passengers? A. I have the eastbound, yes.

Q. And the cost of carriage of those passengers? A. It is easy to make up the westbound, too, because the price is fixed, the limit price is fixed by the Italian Royal Immigration Commissioner; they fix a minimum price; that is about $40.

Q. That merely gives you the gross returns? A. That is the gross returns.

Q. Have you got the cost of your ships on its various voyages of the steerage business? A. I haven't got it here, no.

Q. Have you got it at your office? A. No, sir.

2519 Q. You have no records here which show the extent of the steerage business and the profits made therefrom? A. I have got a record of the passenger business for the year 1911.

Q. What is the total gross receipts? A. Of the business done in America?

Q. Yes, the total gross receipts? A. No, gross, less expenses.

Q. Have you those expense items? A. Just a copy of the report that we made.

Q. For what year is that? A. 1911 was the last.

Q. You have a statement showing the gross receipt from the— A. Eastbound business and prepaid business.

2520 Q. The expenses? A. And the proportion of the expenses.

Q. What do you mean by the proportion of the expenses? A. Well, the proportion according to the amount that was taken in, so much was taken in for business done in America and so much on the other side, and the expenses were proportioned according to what was taken in in America.

Mr. Dorr: Suppose you produce them tomorrow.

Mr. Bullowa: I have a question.

2521

Mr. Dorr: I have not completed my examination.

Mr. Bullowa: I thought you had.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Mr. Richard, you don't mean to say that the Volunteer Fleet built up any agencies, do you, you meant C. B. Richard?

Mr. Dorr: If we are going into another matter I would rather have it go over until tomorrow.

2425

C. C. McCAIN, sworn on behalf of the petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Crim:

Q. Mr. McCain, what is your business? A. Chairman of the Trunk Line Association.

Q. Where are you located? A. 143 Liberty Street, New York.

Q. What is the Trunk Line Association?

2426

Mr. Beers: In order to save time and not to encumber the record by repeating objections, I wish now to renew my general objection made when Mr. Sandford was on the stand. I object to any evidence with reference to inland transportation, to any railroad passenger association or any understanding or agreement between any railroad, railroads or railroad association and any steamship line or lines, or with reference to commercial allowances, upon the ground that any such evidence is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and not within the issues. May it be understood that this objection will not be repeated?

Mr. Crim: Certainly, that is understood.

2427

A. It is an association of various railroads operating out of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, known as the Trunk Line Traffic Association.

Q. How long have you been in the railroad business, Mr. McCain? A. In one form and another since 1877.

Q. Are you familiar with what is known as the commercial allowance on immigrant traffic? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state what it is and how it arose and its history? A. Well, I don't know that I am competent to very accurately state its history.

Mr. Spooner: Don't what?

The Witness: Competent to very accurately state its history. I have been generally informed that back in the earlier days, say 1882 or 1883, or possibly earlier, the plan of paying commissions on immigrant passengers was in vogue; that the amount of those commissions fluctuated from time to time, based on the competitive conditions, until more recent years it has become staple, so to speak, and uniform.

Q. In this period that you speak of, 1882, have you any idea what were the amounts of those commissions as they fluctuated? A. I don't know accurately; I only know from general knowledge that it has been stated that in those days the commissions would fluctuate from ten, fifteen, twenty and thirty per cent.

Q. The earnings of the railroads? A. Yes, I assume that was the earnings of the railroads.

Mr. Bullowa: He doesn't mean earnings of the railroads.

The Witness: I understand what you mean, the fare.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. You didn't mean the earnings of the railroads? A. That is, this competition was probably between western lines, among themselves, and to some extent between eastern lines. The commissions were paid from various sources by railroads. I don't infer that that percentage stated was the percentage necessarily to what the trunk line might have been paying, but it might have been paid by their connections or western roads or some way. I only know in a general way that in the early days it was understood to be fluctuations in the commission.

2530 C. C. McCain

By Mr. Crim:

2531 Q. I understand you to say that commissions were not only paid to steamship companies on this traffic, but the commissions were also paid to connecting railroads? A. No, I mean to say that the commissions stated might have been paid by the trunk lines, in whole or in part to the steamship companies or the western roads, west of the trunk lines, might have paid something in addition to the trunk lines and in that way the total commission might have gotten to those higher amounts, in strenuous competitive times.

Q. Well, subsequent to this time in the 80's, what happened with respect to these commissions? You intimate that they have not fluctuated so? A. Well, the standard commission paid, so far as I know, by 2532 the trunk lines a great many years has been a fixed percentage of the inland fare, ten per cent, but I think that began in 1886; I am not sure.

Q. How was that brought about? A. Well, it was brought about by the desire on the part of the railroads to have their fares in more orderly shape.

Q. More staple rates? A. And bring it down to what I assume at that time was determined to be a reasonable compensation for that service. It had formerly been, I think, at some period, five per cent, in the old days. I am not sure, and in these fluctuating—

Q. Was this result brought about by the various railroad associations, western passenger, central passenger associations and trunk lines? A. Well, I am not clear as to the participation of the western association in this arrangement when the uniform basis of ten per cent was adopted. I don't know as to that. I do know that the Trunk Line Association—I think it was about 1886 this ten per cent arrangement became common. What the Western Passenger Association or the Central Association did at that time I am not informed.

Q. Well, in any event, various agreements were entered into between the railroads and the steamship companies with respect to this allowance? A. Well, I don't know as to the earlier days, in 1886. 2534

Q. Well, later days? A. Whether there was actually an agreement, but the commission was at least prescribed by the railroads and the probabilities are that it was arranged from conferences with the steamship people. I am not sure as to that.

Q. Now, Mr. McCain, on what traffic do the trunk lines pay commission today? Does the trunk line pay commissions on immigrant traffic today? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of immigrant traffic? A. There is only one kind of immigrant traffic; immigrants as such.

Q. And does it pay a commercial allowance? A. It is so termed. 2535

Q. On all immigrants that pass through what is known as the trunk line territory? A. All immigrants coming to this country, the commercial allowance is uniformly paid to all destinations on the immigrant fares.

Q. Now, Mr. McCain, isn't it a fact that the trunk lines do not pay any commercial allowance within the zones known as the $2.50 territory for westbound traffic?

Mr. Spooner: Object to that question; object to the form of the question as leading.

A. I think your point is that we do not pay a commission to points where the inland fare is less than $2.50; that is correct.

Q. Do you pay commissions on the traffic originating in trunk line territory, going eastward? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you pay any commissions on first class passenger traffic? A. No, sir.

Q. From steamships? A. No, sir.

2537 Q. Neither eastbound or westbound? A. No, sir.

Q. The immigrant purchases transportation from a point in Europe to an interior point in the United States, beyond trunk line territory, produces at the railroad station at Ellis Island an order for the rail transportation, does he not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is that order directed to the agent of a steamship company at Ellis Island? A. It is drawn on the Ellis Island agency.

Q. For the steamship line? A. Yes, in accordance with the provisions in our tariff.

Q. Then it is viséd by him and presented to the railroad agent? Presented to our joint ticket office at Ellis Island.

Q. How long has that been the practice? A. I really don't know the exact time. I don't know whether it began in 1886 or not, when the original arrangement was made. I am inclined to think about that time this general plan was inaugurated; I don't recall the exact date. It has been in existence ever since Ellis Island has been an immigrant place, I think, is it not?

Q. Has there been any change in the handling of this traffic at Ellis Island during the past five or six years in so far as the ticket or orders are concerned? A. I think not.

Q. Now, if the immigrant has a ticket upon his arrival at Ellis Island, for an interior point and decided not to go to that point, do the railroads pay the commission to the steamship companies or a commercial allowance on that ticket? A. I think not; they should not.

Q. As a matter of fact the steamship companies deduct the commission from the immigrant, do they not? A. I don't know; you mean if the immigrant would wish his money refunded, that is, not having taken the inland journey?

Q. Yes? A. I don't know what they would do in that case.

2540

Q. What is your information with regard to that? A. I have heard of one or two instances where they have deducted the commission and claimed they were only entitled to return to the immigrant the inland fare, less the commission.

Q. So if the immigrant held a railroad fare to Chicago, the steamship companies would deduct $1.50? A. They might; I don't know whether they do.

Q. Refund the immigrant's $13.50; do the railroad companies apportion the eastbound traffic on immigrants? A. The trunk lines do on certain arrangements at Chicago, I understand; I don't understand that the apportionment is in the hands of the railroad.

Q. In whose hands is it? A. I believe there is some understanding as between the steamship people and the roads leading east from Chicago, under which the representatives of the steamships undertake to apportion the business as between the railroads.

Q. Equitably? A. Equitably; I don't know the details of the arrangement.

Q. Upon arrival at Ellis Island on the westbound traffic, how are the immigrants apportioned among the railroads? A. The basis for the apportionment is an equal division as between the eight roads which are members of the joint agency at the island.

2542 C. C. McCain

Q. And on whom is the expense to bring those immigrants to the railway station? A. After they have passed the examination at Ellis Island, they will come into the custody of the railroads and our agent and his representatives arrange for their routing and they and their baggage are then taken to the respective roads in charge of the agency employee.

Q. Each immigrant having in his possession an order over one or over any one of those routes? A. No, the order is on the Ellis Island agency.

2543

Mr. Beers: Agency of the railroads?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Commissioner: Joint association?

The Witness: No; all of the railroads of the trunk Line Association are not parties to this arrangement. I will give you our exact expression if I can find it (referring to a paper).

Q. Does the immigrant, as a matter of practice, use or have any discretion in the route that he travels over? A. It is a very small proportion; I wouldn't know what percentage; but what it is I wouldn't say one per cent of the immigrants whose tickets are presented at the agency have any information or idea as to what route they wanted to go by; they do not make a selection.

Mr. Beers: You mean very few do have an idea?

The Witness: Practically none; I said one per cent. in order to not overlook all, make any selection of the route; you might put that not over one per cent.

Q. Is it the invariable custom to route this traffic in accordance with the wishes of the immigrant? A. When they are made known to the agency, yes, sir.

Q. But as a matter of practice only a negligible per centage ever make their wishes known? A. Correct.

Q. And as a matter of fact they are not asked, are they, Mr. McCain?

2545

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that as leading.

A. I don't know.

Q. I understood you to say a few moments ago they didn't know where they were going? A. Well, you asked me if that is true. My understanding is that practically all of the immigrants are not informed as to what railroad will take them to their destination; that therefore they make no inquiry or have any—apparently have any interest in how they shall be routed.

Q. You take it that it is not a part of the practice of the steamship lines and the railroads to place before 2546 the immigrants the various routes over which they may travel?

Mr. Bullowa: The same objection; that is certainly not one of our witnesses.

Mr. Crim: No, he is my witness.

Mr. Bullowa: Then why do you lead him?

Q. Well, Mr. McCain, state to us what the practice is with regard to giving these people their routing? A. I couldn't speak as to the practice of the steamship company.

Q. Any conversations, if any, that were had with them? A. I don't know; I really don't know to give 2547 the current handling of the passengers if there is any conversation with them at Ellis Island, with respect to their routes. Our tariffs show very plainly, well, not in all cases the routes, but indicate the routes, I think. I don't know what the practices are of the steamship companies in enlightening the immigrant, and I don't believe the representatives of the railroad ask each immigrant if they would like to select their own routes; if they did, Ellis Island would be congested every afternoon for three weeks.

Q. Now, in the payment of this commercial allowance, the railroads have organized clearing houses adjusting the apportionment of those payments? A. We have a clearing house in connection with this agency, which is part of the Trunk Line Association.

Q. And do the western roads have a clearing house? A. I understand they do; it is part of their passenger association, I believe.

Q. And the Central Passenger Association? A. I assume so, yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Will you kindly repeat that? (Answer read.)

2549 Q. Have you at any time made any recommendations to the railroads, told any of the representatives of railroads what your position was with respect to those payments?

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that as immaterial. I cannot see what his recommendations would have upon the question.

A. I presume I have expressed myself from time to time, yes, sir.

Q. And what has been the nature of those expressions?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as plainly immaterial.

2550 Mr. Crim: He is one of the officers that has to do with this and it is shown here that he is an expert.

Mr. Spooner: Well, what of it; what has it to do with this case, the issues made by the pleadings?

Mr. Crim: Answer the question.

A. Well, such expressions that I have made have been to the effect that in my own opinion the commercial allowances might well be discontinued.

Q. Mr. McCain, have you had occasion to discuss the commercial allowance with the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. Spooner: Well, now, that is objected to.

Mr. Crim: You maintain that the commission has given its permission, express permission for the payment of these commissions.

Mr. Beers: Commercial allowance?

Mr. Crim: Yes.

Mr. Beers: Commercial allowance.

Mr. Crim: Yes.

Mr. Burlingham: We have not made any such claim. 2552

Mr. Spooner: Offered no evidence to that effect, and if the commissioner has taken any action about it, any official opinion about it, this is not the way to prove it.

Mr. Dorr: That was the precise objection the Government raised yesterday to Mr. Straus' testimony.

Mr. Spooner: Mr. Straus was being cross-examined.

Mr. Beers: That was on a different subject.

The Witness: Repeat the question, please.

(Question repeated by the stenographer.) 2553

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as immaterial; you have to answer yes or no, if you please.

Mr. Dorr: He can answer it any way he pleases.

Mr. Spooner: No, he can't.

Mr. Crim: Answer it yes or no, then explain your answer.

A. Yes.

Q. What were you informed by the commissioner as to whether it was lawful or unlawful?

All counsel for defendants object.

Mr. Spooner: As incompetent and immaterial.

Mr. Burlingham: Irrelevant, calling for a hearsay opinion, on a point of law.

Mr. Crim: Point of administration, not law; the Interstate Commerce Commission is an administrative body.

Mr. Spooner: They pass on questions of law.

Mr. Dorr: I understood your contention in your answer was that the Interstate Commerce

2555 Commission passed on questions of law.

Mr. Burlingham: We have noted our objections; let us hear the answer now.

Mr. Spooner: Conversations in the first place with the Interstate Commerce Commission as a commission is one thing; conversations with the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission is entirely different.

Mr. Dorr: Even then it is far better than Mr. Straus' rumor.

Mr. Burlingham: Even in a conversation, a judge is not always illuminating as to the law, is he?

2556 Mr. Dorr: When it is official he always is. Do you consent that all testimony as to any action or alleged action of the Interstate Commerce Commission be stricken out?

Mr. Spooner: No, sir; we do not.

Mr. Bullowa: Will you consent that all hearsay information be stricken out?

Mr. Dorr: We desire the Court to be enlightened by some person; he is a defendant.

Mr. Crim: Answer the question.

A. You asked if I had had any discussion with the Interstate Commerce Commission on the question of commercial allowance, as I understood you; I said I had. Well, I think that should be qualified to the exact facts.

2557

Q. You may give the exact facts? A. Which are—

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

A. (Continuing.) Which are that our arrangements as existing at Ellis Island were placed before the commission, the present arrangements and such expression as was made by the commission with respect to commercial allowance was to the effect that that was a matter that was in the hands of the Department of Justice.

Q. Was in the hands of the Department of Justice? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bullowa: How long ago was that?

Mr. Spooner: I move to strike that out as incompetent.

Q. Was any intimation given you as to what the Commission thought of the practice?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading and incompetent and irrelevant and immaterial.

A. Nothing other than was contained in the communication which covered the same statement.

Q. Weren't you told by a member of the Commission that a continuous paying of the commercial allowance to the steamship companies would be at your peril?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading, incompetent and immaterial.

A. That was not quite the expression, that the Commission would not express itself on the matter of the commercial allowance and what we did we did on our 2560 own responsibility; that was in the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Spooner: I move to strike that out as incompetent, not responsive, immaterial and irrelevant.

Q. Mr. McCain, you have spoken with respect to the routing of the westbound immigrants from Ellis Island. Do you know of any agreement between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the railroads with respect to this routing? A. I do not.

2561 Q. As a matter of fact there is no such agreement in existence?

Mr. Beers: I object to it as leading.

Mr. Spooner: If he does not know, he does not know, that is all.

A. I don't think any such agreement exists; I don't know what you refer to, I am sure, but I know of no agreement between the railroads and the Interstate Commerce Commission respecting the routing of immigrants.

Q. If there was such an agreement it would be a part of your duty to know it? A. I think it would.

Q. That traffic is apportioned among the railroads, 2562 is it not, the immigrant westbound traffic? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So far as you know there is no agreement with the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to that traffic? A. No, sir; no agreement.

Mr. Bullowa: How could there be an agreement?

Mr. Dorr: You will have to ask your own client. Mr. Straus testified the Interstate Commission had agreed to it; look at page 566 of the testimony and you will find out.

Mr. Dorr: Your witness.

2563

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Spooner:

Q. What is the name of your clearing house, that is, its technical designation? A. Well, the Ellis Island Immigrant Agency is a part of the Trunk Line Association.

Q. Yes; well, is that called a clearing house? A. The agency is not, no, sir; we have another department through which the accounts as between the steamships and the railroads are handled and that has been designated for a great many years as the Immigrant Clearing House.

Q. Does that include accounts between the railroad companies themselves, parties to the arrangement? A. No, if I understand you correctly, not; it is a clearing house to collect from the steamships the moneys which they have collected for inland railroad fares and turn it over to the railroads and also collect from the railroads on their respective tickets the amount of the commissions due the steamship companies and turn that amount over to the steamship companies; that is the function of the clearing house.

Q. Now, the business of this agency and clearing house is confined entirely to the immigrant business, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did this system originate, did you say? A. Well, I said before I am not positive, but about 1886 I think the original arrangements began for the agency.

Q. I understood you to testify—I am not attempting to give your language—that it had its origin in competitive struggle by the railroad companies for immigrant business? A. That is my understanding.

Q. It originated before the passage of the Interstate Commerce Law? A. If I am correct in 1886, yes, sir; I am not sure that I am correct; in the eighties.

2566 Q. What are its functions so far as the immigrants themselves are concerned, the agency? A. Referring to the agency?

Q. Well, no, any part of your machinery that has to do with the immigrants themselves? A. The agency at Ellis Island is the only part of the organization that has anything to do with the immigrants.

Q. Now, what have they to do with the immigrants? A. The railroad agency has nothing to do with the immigrants until after the immigrants have received the customary examination and as I believe they are discharged or made available to the railroad floor or 2567 facilities, for the purpose of getting their tickets and having their baggage checked; it is at that point the railroad service begins.

Q. Of course, they are not immigrants strictly until they are admitted? A. No, that is right; then they are taken after being assigned to the respective railroads and their baggage arranged for and checked, they are taken by the transfer company under our employ from that time to the respective railroad stations.

Q. And generally looked after with reference to their safety and comfort? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And suppose if among the immigrants brought 2568 over to Ellis Island to be admitted to the United States there were one or more who had in mind a particular route inland which they desired to take, their wish would be observed? A. Any of them or any party who expressed a preference to any road, that their wish will be met and tickets will be furnished for that road.

Q. Now, are you able to, from your experience with railways, in the railway transportation business, to say what the condition was in respect to distribution, the handling, put it that way, of immigrants in New York was prior to the establishment of your agency? A. I think it is a matter of common knowledge that prior to this co-operative arrangement with the railroads and the steamship companies, that the immigrant was at the mercy of a great many people in the City of New York.

Q. Was despoiled? A. So I understood.

Q. Utilized? A. Yes, in the old days; I don't know as much about it as some of the steamship people do. In the old days there were so-called boarding house runners and others who sought these people as I have understood, undertaking to befriend them and kept them in their boarding houses for various days and if they got out of New York with any more than their railroad ticket, they were lucky.

Q. Then the establishment of this Trunk Line Agency was altogether in the interest of the immigrants, was it not? A. The whole arrangement is highly beneficial and that has been recognized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as will be found in their reports when they made an investigation of this matter, that this arrangement was probably the very best thing that could be—

Mr. Dorr: I object to contents of the Interstate Commerce Commission's report.

Mr. Burlingham: Contents of the mind of the commissioner, but not the contents of the report.

2571

Mr. Bullowa: One can be verified, the other cannot.

Mr. Dorr: No objection to the original report.

Mr. Spooner: You could not object to that.

Mr. Dorr: I certainly could object to it; the Court would pass upon it.

Mr. Spooner: No you could not, because of the law, act of Congress makes it open to be read in the Court and provides it shall be taken.

Mr. Beers: Did you finish your answer.

Mr. Spooner: Will you read the answer?
(Answer read by the stenographer.)

The Witness (continuing): Devised for the welfare of the immigrant.

Q. One thing among others which gave it a great value was the elimination of New York middlemen, wasn't it, taking them out of the hands of runners? A. Oh, yes.

Q. And tavern keepers and solicitors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Safeguards them, gives them proper protection
2573 from Ellis Island to the train they are to take? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I was going to ask you whether you knew or not that the immigration agency of the Government co-operated in the formation of this association agency.

Mr. Crim: That is objected to.

A. I don't know; that is, as to the original arrangements.

Q. Has not been one of the effects of the creation of this agency I call it, to abolish excessive commissions which the railroad companies were formerly required to pay, prior to its inauguration, obliged to pay for immigrant business? A. The placing of the whole ar-2574 rangement on an orderly basis and eliminating the competition in commission has been accomplished. I don't know that that is due to the agency proposition or the fact that the agency exists.

Q. It existed once, competition in commissions, didn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does not now? A. No.

Q. That operated to increase the revenues of the railroad companies, didn't it, to some extent? A. Well, I presume it did, not very appreciably.

Q. I will ask you to repeat the basis of the apportionment among the railroads now served by this clearing house? A. An equal division as far as that may be accomplished.

Q. How many companies are members or sharers? A. Eight.

Q. How long has that basis been in effect?

Mr. Crim: This is objected to as not cross-examination.

Mr. Spooner: It is just exactly what it is. You asked him what the arrangement was.

Mr. Crim: He told you.

Mr. Spooner: I am cross-examining him on his answer.

2576

A. I don't know exactly when it began.

Q. Didn't it begin last February? A. In a modified way; yes, sir.

Q. Well, it must have begun before that, in order to have been modified in February. When did it begin, relatively, I don't mean exactly? A. The percentages you refer to have been in effect a great many years; I don't know when it began, could not give you that.

Q. Well, from the beginning up to the time this fixed percentage basis was arrived at, what was the basis of apportionment among the various members of this Trunk Line Association? A. The arrangement 2577 with several roads, they were assigned a certain proportion of the first and second class passenger traffic.

Q. That was westbound? A. Yes.

And the immigrant traffic was divided equally and the adjustment was made by the distribution of the immigrants as between the lines.

Q. What was the basis by which they arrived at the distribution? A. It was an assigned percentage to each road.

Q. How? A. It was a percentage to each road.

Q. Wasn't that fixed percentage—did not that relate to first class business and not to immigrant business? A. I stated that.

Mr. Burlingham: He said first and second.

Q. Did I understand you to say that there was any difference in the first and second class and in the third class? A. There was an allotment made to the various railroads, indicating their share of the first and second class passenger traffic. There was also an allotment made as between the companies of the immigrants, passengers, an equal division. The adjustment securing to the roads the proportion was 2579 made by routing the immigrants to the respective roads as was found necessary.

Q. That is, if a given road was short of its proportion of first and second class traffic, it would be made up on the immigrant, is that right? A. An equivalent portion of immigrants was given to it to equalize that deficit.

Q. Have you a tariff there? A. Not complete. I only took the first few pages because it happened to contain the rules. It was so bulky I did not bring it all.

Q. May I look at it? A. Yes, sir (handing book to Mr. Spooner).

2580 Q. On this tariff; on page 13 there are certain rules and regulations, of which Rule No. 9 reads as follows: "Routing of orders and cash sales. Orders issued under this tariff must not be routed. Where passengers held orders or pay cash for immigrant tickets, the selection of routes from the ports of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, New Bedford, or Providence to destination shown herein shall be a matter for determination exclusively between the immigrant agent mentioned in Rule 11 and the passengers themselves and only at the time the passengers present their orders to pay cash to the immigrant agent named for the tickets." That is the rule, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The rule today? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that or is it not a beneficial rule to the immigrant?

Mr. Dorr: I object to the witness's characterization of it.

A. A beneficial rule to the immigrants? I don't know how to explain that. We considered that it is simply a provision by which they can buy their tickets through for cash if they want to. That is the method.

2582

Q. I am speaking of the routing, whether or not it is beneficial for the immigrant? A. That rule, as I understand it, refers to the routing only in instances where the immigrant pays—buys the cash ticket.

Q. Then, that is disjunctive? A. Where he buys the cash ticket and does not present a routing order.

Q. These are published rules, are they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were these rules submitted to and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission? A. I don't know whether they were approved, they were not disapproved.

Q. How long have they been in operation? Is this a new rule? A. I don't recall whether it is or not; I don't think it is.

Q. How long has that Rule No. 9 been in operation, can you tell? A. No, sir; unless I compared it with the previous tariff. I do not know whether it is new, or modified to any extent, by this recent tariff which was issued. The previous tariff was very old, about five years old.

Q. Well, this rule has been in effect, has it not, for many years? A. I think so, I am not sure. I don't know whether there has been any change in that rule, but I think not; I think it was in the old tariff. This tariff is new. The previous tariff was changed five years ago, I think.

Q. What other Immigration Associations are there in connection with the transportation of immigrants from New York to the interior points? A. No other association. There are some independent railroads which have their agencies, like the Canadian Pacific, and the Old Dominion Steamship Company.

Q. There is a Western Association, is there not? A. Yes; there is a Western Passenger Association.

Q. Does that include immigrants? A. They have not any agency over there, not that I know of. If 2585 there is one, I do not know it. I do not know anything about their business.

Q. How is the routing done of immigrant passengers west of Chicago—if you know? A. For the moment, I do not know, unless the tariff provides for it. Whether it is at Ellis Island, I really do not know for the moment. There is some provision in the tariff, I think.

Q. Who is there connected with your establishment who would know about the details of that? A. Well, I ought to know, but I do not; I have forgotten it for the moment. If you want it, I can get it and let you know, or I think the tariff provides for it.

2586 Q. Would Mr. Hunter know about it? A. Yes, sir; he would know the details of that; yes, sir.

Q. Well, would it be entirely convenient for you to furnish the information? A. Oh, yes; I can get it for you.

Q. Out of what is the commercial allowance paid? A. Why it is paid from the treasuries of the several railroads.

Q. I don't mean that; ultimately out of what does it come? It comes out of the fare does it not? A Why, I assume it does, yes, sir.

Q. Don't you know that it does? A. It is a percentage on the fares, and the accounting as to that is done by the different railroads.

Q. But ultimately it comes out of the fare? A. I should say that is correct, yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: That is all.

By Mr. Beers:

Q. After they have arrived here, and immigrants have been furnished with tickets, and they have expressed a preference for any particular road, then the residue of the immigrants, who arrive here by ship, 2588 for points in the West are apportioned off to different lines, is not that so? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that apportionment done by the lines themselves? A. By our agent at the Island.

Q. Who is appointed by the different lines? A. Yes, a representative of the lines.

Q. And in respect to those immigrants so apportioned among these lines, there is no competition as between the lines, that apportionment is made by agreement? A. Yes, sir; that is right.

Q. The steamship lines have nothing to do with that apportionment? A. No, sir.

Q. The apportionment is made, is it not, after the 2589 arriving immigrants have passed out of the charge of the Bureau of Immigration, and are officially landed? A. At the time the orders are presented for the tickets, the assignment is made to the roads.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. To what extent is the administration of the immigrant business here by your association reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission, or comes under their supervision? A. There is no reporting required of us currently, to the Commission.

2590 Q. What officer of the Government here is affected by the administration of the business by your association, and is advised of it? A. We are not called to keep any officer advised.

Q. Do not any of the Government officers keep advised as to this business of transportation?

Mr. Dorr: I object to that as he is asking for the speculation of the witness purely, unless he can show that some Government officer or official gave him information on the matter.

2591 Q. Well, you could not get a change in the tariff without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission could you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You can? A. We can make the changes; yes, sir, and take the chances of the Commission disapproving of them. We can take those chances under their order of suspension. So far as Commissioner Williams is concerned, he knows what is going on, but it is not incumbent upon us to keep him advised.

Q. Well, he is kept advised? A. I don't know as he is kept advised.

Q. Well, he would not know if he were not in some way advised? A. Well, we have conferred with him a good many times as to matters and he knows what 2592 is going on. We rent our quarters from him at the Island, and have more or less business together.

By Mr. Beers:

Q. The agency, which you have just testified to, is a tenant of the United States Government? A. Yes.

By Mr. Burlingham:

Q. Who is your agent at Ellis Island? A. Joseph Senter.

Q. How long has he been the agent? A. Forever, I guess—I don't know how long, but a great many years; I don't know exactly how long.

Q. He has a staff of Clerks there? A. Yes, sir; a very large staff.

Q. And is he the person who determines just what particular trunk line the immigrant shall travel on? A. Well, not entirely. He is under the direction of the main office here. We keep the accounts of the movement of the passengers, and give him his instructions as to routing.

Q. In order that we may understand it clearly, will you tell us what would happen if a ship arrived with twenty-five hundred immigrants, what would be the modus operandi of routing these people? A. Mr. Senter would have received his daily advices as to how 2594 the passengers were to go, and in what proportion; and he would be notified about them. Twenty-five hundred passengers if their destination was such that it would not interfere with their convenient traveling, they would be assigned to one road or the other. We cannot invariably follow the division, nor does it happen that every road always gets its equal share. There is always an excess or a deficit from one cause or another. There may be an overplus of passengers destined to such a point that the routing would be by one road and for the consideration of convenience, the immigrant might be sent by that road although that road might be at the time in excess of its share. 2595

Q. Would Mr. Senter determine that or would somebody else, some other body? A. He is under Mr. Hunter's direction. Mr. Hunter gives Mr. Senter his current advices as to the direction and allotment of passengers. In the absence of any special direction he would advise him as nearly equally as he could, keeping in mind the destinations, etc.

Q. When does the clearing house work come in—what you call the clearing house, as I understand it? A. When these orders are presented by the steamship 2596 company, at our agency at the Island, and the tickets are issued, those orders come into our possession, and those accounts are made up monthly or semi-monthly against the respective steamship companies for the money that is due to the clearing house, which they have previously collected for the railroad fare. And then they are in turn rendered a statement of the tickets, on which there is to be an allowance of a commission, and the money is passed.

Q. If at the end of any such period, of a month or a year, six months or a year, as the case may be, it is found that one road has carried less than its quota, is 2597 this made good to the road, in any way? A. No.

Q. Is this righted in the future? A. Why, as to the balances as between the roads, certain roads today may be in excess of their share, and certain of them will have a deficit, but we undertake to equalize enough to make up this deficit; but primarily it is based on an equal division, but owing to the destination which the immigrants desire, their going by any particular road, it is impossible to always have an equal division, so that there is always a little deficit or a little excess, but as a matter of fact the division is practically equal.

Q. And if there is a deficit, or an excess, it is made 2598 up in future transactions? A. By future routing of the immigrants, yes, sir.

Q. And this is the system that was investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission? A. Well, I want to say that this particular feature of our business was investigated and the commission, as you will see by their reports, published by them, went into the whole question of the Immigrant Traffic.

Q. Including the routing of passengers? A. I am not sure whether that was investigated or not.

Q. Well, the system was an open book to the Commission? A. Oh, yes.

Mr. Dorr: I object to the form of that question.

Q. You had nothing to conceal, and did conceal nothing at that time?

Mr. Dorr: I object to the form of that question.

A. No.

Q. You have stated in answer to the district attorney that you knew of no agreement with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Did you mean that you knew of no agreement in writing, or what did you mean? A. I know of no agreement in any form. 2600

Q. It was not necessary to have any agreement? A. I don't know much about what is comprehended by an agreement between the carriers, and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Q. Well, I did not ask you the question, the district attorney asked you whether there was any such agreement, whether you knew there was any such agreement? A. I don't know of any.

Q. The Interstate Commerce Commission has never expressed any approval of the system that is now in vogue now with the Trunk Lines, and has been for many years? 2601

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as too general.

A. Not to my knowledge. The only expression I know of is contained in their public report.

Q. And the only question apparently that has been raised between your association and the Interstate Commerce Commission has been the question of commercial allowances? A. I cannot say that any question has arisen as between the Interstate Commerce Commission and our association.

Q. You mean it was merely a conversation you had with one of the members? A. It was merely a disclosure to the commission of what the arrangement was.

Q. That is, in behalf of the association you or some member of the association or an officer of the association stated the facts frankly to this member of the Interstate Commerce Commission is that the fact? A. Yes, sir.

2603 Q. And asked his opinion about it? A. No, we did not ask his opinion, simply informed the commission as to what these arrangements were.

Q. When was that? A. Oh, March or April, I have forgotten exactly.

Q. March or April of this year? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What member of the Commission was it? A. The chairman.

Q. And his answer was that it was a matter for the Department of Justice to attend to, is that what I understood you to say? A. That is my recollection, that was the form of the communication, in so far as it related to the commercial allowances.

2604 Q. What was it that led the association to make this provision for routing on a basis of absolute equality between the eight roads? A. Because it was considered an equitable apportionment of the business.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. When you have spoken about the allowance or disallowance of the commercial allowance you only meant to say that the practice was that of the railroads forming the Trunk Line Association. You do not mean by that that it was railroads controlling traffic originating east or west of Chicago, do you? A.

2605

Well, I don't know to what part of my statement you refer. I don't know what part of my statement is included in your inquiry. Did you inquire as to the early days?

Q. At the present time? A. I don't know anything about the present methods.

Q. On their allowance, the commercial allowance? A. At the present time?

Q. Yes, on business originating either east or west of Chicago? A. No, I don't know.

Q. Now, of course, all the railroads or steamship lines carrying immigrants, conducting immigrant traffic from New York westward are not members of this trunk line association, are they? A. No.

2606

Q. Now, then, what is the method of equalizing the immigration with those who are not members of this association, and the members of the Trunk Line Association, is there any arrangement in connection with that? A. The Ellis Island agency applies wholly to the New York roads, and this provisional arrangement is only as between the New York roads there, and other roads who are not members of the Trunk Line Association do not participate in the immigration traffic.

Q. But there are certain other lines, such as the Clyde and Old Dominion Line? A. We have nothing to do with them.

Q. Have those other lines an agency in Ellis Island? A. The Old Dominion Line has.

Q. Has the Clyde? A. I am not sure; I think so.

Q. Has the Ocean Steamship Line of Savannah? A. I don't know.

Q. Has the Southern Pacific? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How is the immigration apportioned as to those roads? A. They are not parties to the apportionment.

Q. Are the members of the Trunk Line Association in competition with those roads as to means of egress? A. Yes, sir.

2608 Q. Is that one of the reasons for the allowance of the commercial allowance? A. Oh, indirectly; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know any of the members of the Central Traffic Association? A. There are a great many roads.

Q. Where does the Central Traffic Association operate? A. Well, generally speaking at the western termini, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Parkersburg, and westward to the Mississippi and south to the Ohio River.

Q. Do they make commercial allowance on business in their territory? A. Coming eastward?

2609 Q. Yes. A. I understand that they do.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Your employment is entirely for the railroad companies, is it not? A. Mine? Yes, sir.

Q. You think it would be better for the railroad companies, if they would get rid of the commercial allowance, you think they would make more money, don't you? A. That is only my personal view. I am more or less opposed to railroads paying commissions.

Q. That is your individual view? A. Only my individual view.

2610 Q. You mean that you are the only individual who entertains that view? A. Do I have to answer that?

Mr. Spooner: No, you can strike it out.

Mr. Crim: Answer the question. A. No, sir; I am not the only individual, but that is my personal view. It is very evident that the officers of the railroads do not entertain that view.

Mr. Spooner: I move to strike that out.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. What arrangement has the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company with the 2611

Trunk Line Association? A. I don't know whether they have any arrangement or not. They have an agency of some sort at the Island, and get some business, but they have no arrangement through our association, as I understand it. They are not parties to our association.

Q. They do not operate in the same territory? A. No.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. What was the occasion of your transmitting this information to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, last spring, with respect to the traffic arrangements concerning immigrant traffic at Ellis Island? A. Why, about that time we revised our arrangements and methods.

2612

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. What arrangements? A. Covering the handling of the immigrant at the Island, and it was thought desirable that these new arrangements should be made known to the Commission.

By Mr. Crim: And previous to that Mr. McCain, you had heard about an investigation, or were informed as to an investigation by the Government with respect to immigrant traffic? A. Why, yes, we had heard some rumors that the Government was going to look into the matter.

2613

Mr. Spooner: I object to the word "rumors" and move to strike it out.

The Witness: But that, I had nothing to do with.

Q. Information had to come to you that subpoenaes had been issued with respect to an investigation of the immigrant traffic?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as immaterial and irrelevant.

A. No, not quite as far as subpoenaes were concerned.

Q. What effect, if any, did the removal of the immigration station from Manhattan to Ellis Island have upon this traffic? A. Well, I don't know absolutely, but I assume that it had the effect of concentrating the business at the Island and permitting arrangements to be made there for the comfort and welfare of the immigrants.

Q. Many of the disadvantages of which you have spoken today to which the immigrant was subjected in New York, were removed when the immigration 2615 station went from Castle Garden to Ellis Island? A. Yes, sir; that is my understanding.

Q. Do you know of any benefit that the immigrant received from this practice of the paying of a commercial allowance at this time? A. If the present arrangements of agency service as performed by the steamship companies throughout the interior foreign countries was interfered with that might be found to be a disadvantage to the immigrant, and it is assumed if this allowance were not made, there might be some curtailment of that service, and it seems to be an advantage to the immigrant to be able to get his tickets abroad for his entire journey; and if the ar-2616 rangement as at present in effect were disturbed, why some other form of agency would probably have to be established so that the immigrant might get his through ticket; and to that extent, indirectly, it might be considered that the immigrant was benefited by the paying of the allowance for what the carriers term and consider an agency service, and which the steamship companies employ in order to furnish the immigrants with their through tickets and arrangements.

Q. Well, taking two immigrants coming from Russia to interior points in America, one going to Newark,

New Jersey, and one to Chicago. On the immigrant to Newark, New Jersey, the steamship companies receive no commercial allowance? A. No, sir.

Q. And on the immigrant coming to Chicago they do? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, does the Chicago immigrant receive any direct benefit because of that commission over the Newark immigrants? A. No, I think not, they are both handled alike, and are both able to get their inland transportation under the same methods.

Q. The money which the immigrant pays for his westbound transportation, in Europe, is held by the steamship companies for some time before it is paid over to the railroads, is it not? A. Well, I can't say some time.

2618

Mr. Spooner: I object to the form of that question as leading.

A. (Continuing.) I don't think it kept an unusual time. The adjustment of the amounts due are made by the steamship company within a reasonable time.

Q. I understand that there are periodic settlements between the railroads and the steamship lines with respect to this traffic? A. At least once a month.

Q. So that upon the passage of an immigrant from Germany the steamship company has the railroad's capital for some little time? A. It has the money collected from the immigrants for all fares west from New York.

Q. And now, that will be quite a period of time upon a prepaid ticket from the middle west to Europe —that is a ticket that has been purchased in the middle west and sent to Europe to bring an immigrant to this country? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any agreement among the railroads with respect to these immigrant rates? A. You are referring now to the New York rates?

2620 Q. East and westbound? A. Well, there is no so called agreement. There is an adjustment of rates as between the various competing roads, the competing routes, which is arranged for. There is the initial roads and then their connecting roads, and their connections.

Q. As an expert, Mr. McCain, is the steamship company any more than a connecting carrier in this immigration service?

Mr. Beers: Objected to as calling for a conclusion not only of fact but of law.

2621 A. The service as between the steamship company and the railroads is very similar to that performed at a great many terminals and junctions in many parts of the country. In that sense they are connecting carriers; in the sense that if you went from the point of law of the Commission, they are not connecting carriers.

Q. Under the act to regulate commerce? A. To the extent that they would have through joint arrangement and joint tariffs.

Mr. Crim: That is all.

By Mr. Beers:

2622 Q. In reference to this so-called $2.50 zone, as a matter of fact the fare within that zone is so insignificant as to make it inadvisable to do the bookkeeping that would be involved to pay a commission on the ticket, is that not right?

Mr. Dorr: Objected to as leading.

A. I presume that was one of the reasons why it was excluded from the commission arrangement.

2623

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. The rate on immigrant traffic from New York among the members of the Trunk Line Association is all the same, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But on first-class traffic the rate is not the same, and that is because some of the railroads running west from New York have better facilities than the others, better roadbeds? A. Or unless the others are not so good.

Q. But the immigrant whether he is routed over a standard road like the New York Central or the Pennsylvania, or whether he is routed over the Le- 2624 high Valley or the Erie, he pays the same rate? A. The fare is alike, we consider the fare the same.

Q. I know, but the roadbed is different? A. I am not competent to say.

Q. Well, the time is different? A. It might vary a little but they are substantially alike. There is not enough variation in the time to be of consequence to the immigrant.

Q. Who takes the risk of the agent paying the railroad, the financial responsibility of the agent? Does the railroad take the risk in regard to that? A. Which agent?

Q. The agent who sells the ticket? A. Abroad?

Q. Abroad, or a prepaid ticket in this country? A. 2625
We look to the steamship company.

Q. And the commercial allowance is, in a certain way compensation to the steamship company for taking the financial responsibility of the agent paying them the amount due to the steamship company?

Mr. Crim: That is objected to as not cross-examination and as leading.

Q. Is that the fact? A. That is one of the considerations for which the commission is given.

2626 C. C. McCain

Q. Do you know anything about the control stations abroad? A. I have only read about one in the last day or two. I am not conversant with them.

Q. Well, from the information that you have, is not the station at Ellis Island similar? A. I don't think so. I don't know what you want to have me say, but I do not think there is any similarity between Ellis Island and these other ones which I have been reading about. Ellis Island is a station of the Government, established in this country for the orderly handling of immigration.

2627 Q. Well, the control stations are stations of the Government abroad? A. I don't know.

Q. Well, can you so state from the knowledge you obtained in reading about them? A. I don't know.

Q. You said that the matter of time was not a factor in giving the immigrant a route. But is that not a factor with first-class travel? A. Certainly, that is one of the considerations entering into the scheme of differentiation as between the different roads affecting their first-class travel. The matter of time, and their other facilities are factors in those matters.

By Mr. Dorr:

2628 Q. Do you understand that the steamship companies deliver their rail orders to passengers or purchasers on credit, in any case? Don't you understand that the steamship companies always have in their possession, or in that of their agents, the money for the railroad fare before they issue a rail order? A. I don't know anything about it, sir.

Q. Well, then what do you mean by stating that the risk of the steamship companies is taken into consideration as a basis for the commercial allowance? A. I don't know that I said anything of that kind. I understood the inquiry to be taken broadly as to whether the collecting, if you please, the collecting of certain railroad fare for immigrant tickets by the steamship companies or their agents was not—that the accounting for those moneys was not a financial transaction of such a nature which might justify some compensation in the way of an allowance.

Q. Well, the interest on the money is compensation also, to them, is it not? A. That may be true, but, that I think is recognized as one of the factors that a man who is getting his compensation on a few commissions, that he is responsible if he collects money and takes care of it.

Q. Do you recognize that on first-class tickets, they are getting a commercial allowance? A. No, sir, we do not. 2630

Q. Do you consider as to that that the use of the railroad money is quite sufficient compensation to the steamship companies? A. I do not know whether that is the reason why we do not make any allowance on first and second-class tickets. I don't know as to that.

Q. Isn't the reason that they allow the commercial allowance in the case of the third-class traffic and not in the case of the first and second-class traffic, that the steamship companies can control the steerage business going westward, on the railroads and it cannot control the first-class traffic? A. I will answer that question this way: The reasons for the carriers making the 2631 commercial allowances to the railroads, which they think they are fully justified in doing, is that they act in the capacity of agents. The only thing, the financial feature, touched upon as part of the agency service, is the furnishing of our tariffs to the immigrant, and I presume they are translated in certain countries, to some extent, where they are needed, and all of that is regarded by the carrier as an agency service, for which they think they are fully justified in receiving compensation by commission. Now, you asked as to the control of the routing. That is another feature.

Q. You do not, however, furnish any compensation to the steamship companies for first-class business or second-class business? A. No, sir.

Q. Although it covers precisely the same services, the same services rendered by them?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to on the ground that the question assumes something that the witness has not testified to.

A. I do not know how the first or second-class business is conducted.

2633 Q. Is the service of the steamship company, in selling a ticket to a point within the $2.50 zone any less onerous than it would be to sell a ticket to San Francisco? A. No, sir.

Q. And, as a matter of fact, where it sells a ticket to San Francisco it has the use of a much larger sum of money, than where it sells to a point within the $2.50 zone? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for that reason it receives less recompense? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Aside from the fact that it receives any commercial allowance? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a fact that the steamship companies cannot control the first-class business? A. Well, I don't know 2634 whether they can or not. Some of the lines think they can, that is control it through their ships.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. They have always maintained that they could among those trunk lines? A. They have at times considered that they controlled it.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Do you think, as a matter of fact, in your opinion, that the steamship companies, can control the inland transportation of their first cabin passengers, Mr.

2635

McCain? From your experience, is it your opinion that the companies can control the inland transportation of their first cabin passengers in the United States? A. I should say no, as a general proposition, because the first-class passengers usually know where they want to go and how they want to go there.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. They do not control the inland transportation of any of their passengers, in your understanding? A. There are times, when business has been concentrated by steamship lines on certain railroads.

2686

Q. That was because the immigrant had no choice? A. Yes, in a general way.

Q. Has that been within the last four years? A. Well, there has been one or two spasms of that sort, yes, sir.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. As a matter of fact you could divert a great deal of this traffic through Canada, couldn't you? A. That is another feature in connection with the commercial allowance, and one of the reasons why the carriers think such allowance is essential, and reasonable. That is, if it is not allowed, the steamship companies serving New York and the other Atlantic ports would send a large proportion of their business through the Canadian ports. The Canadian railroads pay commission on immigrant traffic, and also on first and second-class traffic, and to all points; and the trunk lines feel justified in making this allowance by reason of all of those conditions and that they consider is in the nature of an agency service. I would like to say again that the expression, that the commissions ought not to be allowed, as I say, I would like to repeat is purely my own expression.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. There is competition between the railroads of Canada and this country for the immigrant traffic and for the first-class traffic? A. Surely, pretty strong.

Q. Strong competition? A. Yes, and it is being increased by the steamship people stopping at those Canadian ports after they come to New York or before, dropping in at Halifax on the way.

Q. The financial responsibility of an agent who sells an immigrant ticket, and the financial responsibility of the agents who sells the first-class ticket is con-2639 siderably different, is it not? A. No, I really don't know as it is. I would say that they were practically the same agent, the same agency, or at least different men operating out of the same agency.

Q. The railroad always takes a certain risk when it places its tickets in the hands of an agent? A. Surely, but we do not consider that we place our tickets in the hands of any agency. We are dealing with the steamship companies.

Q. Suppose you placed these tickets in the hands of agents and did not have any arrangement with the steamship companies, you would then take the risk of the agent coming in and paying the amount due for 2640 the ticket? A. Surely, but we would have to protect ourselves in some way. But, we have not yet found it necessary to bond the steamship people.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. You are familiar with the conditions which existed in the City of New York in recent years, as regards the accounting for tickets when sold? A. No, sir.

Q. The railroads have never suffered any loss through the sale of tickets in this way, have they? A. I don't know of any, there might have been some isolated cases, but I don't know of any.

2641

Q. You say that you do not look to the agents at all? A. No, sir, we are dealing with the steamship company, they handle these orders, present them at our office.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. There is one thing that I wanted to have cleared up in my mind, and that is this: I wanted to find out, to ascertain how much commercial allowance would there be on the ticket of an immigrant who bought his ticket on the other side destined to Newark, New Jersey? A. None.

2642

Q. What would any commercial allowance be, if an allowance were made to Newark, what would be the amount of it? A. If we were to apply ten per cent of the fare to Newark, it would be ten per cent of whatever the fare is, which I do not happen to recall. However, it would be a very small amount, as you can see. I think the fare is about 17 cents by the tube route uptown or 15 cents.

Q. And to arrive at a computation of that allowance would not warrant the bookkeeping that would be necessary? A. Oh, no, sir. Those are handled like all other matters which the railroad has, there is a minimum, below which they do not go.

Q. And in that case it is $2.50? A. Yes, sir, that is $2.50 as I understand it.

On a great many of those tickets within the $2.50 zone there is no competition, they would have to go on one railroad anyway.

Mr. Dorr: That is all with this witness.

Adjourned to 2 o'clock P. M.

After recess.

MAX STRAUS, recalled:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Straus, are the steamers which are running on your line now more or less economical of operation than the steamers you formerly ran? A. I am not an operating man and what answer I give is only supposition.

Q. Does that same answer apply to the testimony which you have previously given in regard to rates?
2645 A. No, that is by experience.

Q. Can you state whether or not a rate is profitable or not without knowing the cost of operating a ship? A. We can only say approximate or about and it is not exact; we are not operating people.

Q. Do you make the rates? A. No, sir; our rates are made by my company.

Q. Where? A. At Libau.

Q. I show you a certain letter and ask you whether or not that was received by your company? A. This letter was received by me, yes, sir, from my company at Copenhagen.

Q. What company? A. The East Asiatic Com-2646 pany.

Q. The East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that letter in evidence unless you gentlemen desire to have the whole of it in evidence, I suggest that I will read in evidence the part which I desire.

Mr. Burlingham: Just this paragraph is all you want?

Mr. Dorr: Yes.

The Witness: May I see that letter, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. Dorr: Not at present, Mr. Witness.

2647

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 227.

Mr. Dorr: Letter from Copenhagen, 15th of September, 1908, on the letterhead of the East Asiatic Steamship Company, addressed to Messrs. A. E. Johnson & Co., New York, Dear Sirs:

Mr. Spooner: Are you going to read it?

Mr. Dorr: I am simply going to read the part I desire, unless you wish the entire letter offered. (Reading.) "We beg to acknowledge receipt of your favors, one of the 2nd, three of the 3rd and one of the 4th inst., and copy of your letters of the 4th inst. to Messrs. Ruys & Company, Rotterdam, * * * Prepays: We note you have fixed a rate prepaid from Libau to New York of $35, including head tax and all lines agreed thereto. We further notice you are going to advance second cabin rates from Libau to New York about $2.50 per head * * * Yours faithfully—"

Q. What is that signature? A. That signature is Capt. Schmiegelow.

Q. Is Captain Schmiegelow an officer of that line? A. An officer of the East Asiatic Steamship Company, I believe.

2649

Mr. Spooner: What is the point of it, that he fixed the rate here?

Mr. Dorr: I will have to leave that until after you have read the record. The point of it is quite apparent.

Mr. Beers: Of course, this is subject to objection.

Mr. Dorr: I show you what purports to be a letter under date of the 25th of August, 1908, addressed to your line from the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer this letter in evidence.
Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 228.

Q. Did you send this copy (handing document to witness) to the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: Purports to be a copy of a cablegram to the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company, from A. E. Johnson & Company, New York, under date of the 25th of August, 2651 1908. I offer that in evidence.
Petitioner's Exhibit 229.

Q. This copy of a cablegram, Government's Exhibit 229, which has just been offered in evidence, was received by you with an enclosure in the letter, Government's Exhibit 228? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I show you what purports to be a letter and a copy of a telegram, letter under date of the 1st of September, 1908, copy of telegram purporting to be under the date of the 2nd of September, 1908, and ask you whether that is a letter received by A. E. Johnson & Company? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer the letter in evidence?
2652 Petitioner's Exhibit 230.

Q. As to this what purports to be a copy of a cablegram, was this a cablegram sent by you to the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. I think so.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Petitioner's Exhibit 231.

Mr. Dorr: I show you a letter under date of the second of September, 1908, and ask you whether that is a letter received by you from the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company?

2653

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Petitioner's Exhibit 232.

The Witness: These are the letters I furnished you with under subpoena.

Mr. Dorr: Yes. Mr. Straus, I show you a letter under date of the 5th of September, 1908, and ask whether that letter is one received by you from the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Petitioner's Exhibit 233.

Mr. Dorr: I show you what purports to be cablegram under date of the 2nd of September, 1908, and ask whether that is a copy of a cablegram received by you?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Petitioner's Exhibit 234.

Mr. Dorr: I show you what purports to be a cablegram and ask whether that is a cablegram received by you from your line?

2655

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I ask whether the pencil memorandum above the first word of that cablegram is a translation of the typewritten code word?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I offer that in evidence.
Petitioner's Exhibit 235?

Q. Mr. Straus, do you keep a press letter book? A. We have not kept a press letter book in some time; we don't keep one now, just slips.

2656

Q. When did you discontinue keeping a letter press copy book? A. I think in 1907 we changed the form and had simply slips, carbon copies.

Q. What is the last letter press copy book you have in your possession? A. I was trying to find it; I haven't got any; we have been moving and haven't been able to find it.

Q. You have not been able to find your last letter press book containing copies made in that way? A. No, sir, I hope to.

Q. What is the method which you use to preserve copies of letters sent by you? A. We file them in 2657 alphabetical order.

Q. File them in a regular filing case? A. Regular filing case.

Q. You preserve all copies of letters sent out by you? A. Yes, sir, and then at the end of the year we pack them up and put them away.

Q. Have you made a search through all of the copies of letters which you have sent to your line, in obedience to the subpoena which has been served upon you? A. I have made a search but I have not been able to complete it yet.

Q. And these papers that you have produced do not represent complete answer to the subpoena? A. They 2658 represent all that I could find for the time being.

Q. You received the subpoena some two weeks ago did you not? A. Yes, sir, but I tried to explain to you—

Q. When did you begin the search of the letter press copies of your correspondence? A. About immediately afterwards.

Q. And have you examined the letter press copies for the year 1908 yet? A. I don't think I have got any press copies for 1908.

Q. I don't mean book, but haven't you any copies of the letters which you sent to your line during that year? A. I ought to have them.

Q. Have you not found them yet? A. I haven't found them, but I hope to find them.

Q. What have you done to find them? A. I had two or three clerks go down and look through and I think some boxes down there, they are going to open them up, boxes that have been put aside, railroad vises and things of that kind.

Q. What are the names of those clerks? A. One is Mr. Nahmschik.

Q. What are the names of the others? A. The others, one is Mr.—I forget his name—David Israel, a stenographer.

2660

Q. What is Mr. Nahmschik's first name? A. I forget his first name. Mr. Israel claimed he gave all of the letters that he had in his possession to Mr. Bullowa, because he has only been stenographer there about a year.

Q Claims that he gave them to Mr. Bullowa? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When? A. To deliver here.

Q. To deliver here? A. Yes, those amongst the papers that you got.

Q. Mr. Israel says that he has given to Mr. Bullowa all of the letters which he has been able to find? A. In his file, because he has only been with us about a year.

Q. Have you had him make a search through the files of 1908? A. No; he doesn't know anything about those files.

Q. Have you had him make a search for them? A. No.

Q. He is not one of the men you have had make a search through the earlier files? A. No, he is not.

Q. Has anyone besides Mr. Nahmschik made a search through the earlier files? A. I don't know; I suppose some of the other clerks.

Q. Well, who? A. I don't know whether Mr. Jurgensen or not has made a search.

Q. Did you direct him to? A. I don't exactly remember; I think I did; I am not sure.

Q. What is his first name? A. I don't remember his first name.

Q. Although you directed this search to be made through the copies of the outgoing letters of your line for the year 1908 some two weeks ago, you have been unable to find any? A. I found everything that pertained to what I understood the subpoena was, except some carbon copies of letters I wanted to bring you.

Q. You have not produced any outgoing letters, have you? A. I think there must be some in the files.

2663 Q. I will show you the rest which Mr. Bullowa has produced? A. We just picked the file right out, Mr. Dorr, and gave it to Mr. Bullowa to deliver here.

Q. The file of what? A. The file of all letters addressed by us to our company at Libau.

Q. For what years? A. He was only with us about a year, the stenographer.

Q. He has only been with you for a year? A. Yes.

Q. Well, then the letters that you gave to Mr. Bullowa did not cover the period called for by the subpoena at all; what have you done to obey the subpoena? A. We went through the different letters 2664 that we thought that you were interested in, everything pertaining to conference, rates, agreements, telegrams, congratulations of the company and so forth; that is all we thought that you wanted from us; I didn't know you wanted our entire files.

Q. Have you been through the letters which you wrote to your home office? A. On these subjects?

Q. Yes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then you now say that you have examined the copies of letters which you wrote to your home company during the years 1908, 1909 and 1910? A. Not 1908, 1909 and 1910.

2665

Q. Those were the years called for by the subpoena, were they not? A. I believe so.

Q. Why didn't you make an examination for those? A. I am not finished yet, Mr. Dorr.

Q. You made no statement, nor Mr. Bullowa made no statement that this was a partial production? A. Evidently I misunderstood the subpoena.

Mr. Bullowa: Mr. Dorr, we have tried to produce all of the letters we could lay our hands on.

The Witness: I did not think you wanted the entire office correspondence. 2666

Q. Mr. Straus, did you not understand the subpoena called for the correspondence in regard to these matters, in the years 1908, 1909 and 1910; didn't you understand that? A. I understand it better now than I did before, and I have no intention on our part to keep any letters back, because we gave you the most important letters we have in our possession.

Q. You do not consider the letters which you wrote to the home office on these matters as important? A. Not as important as these; no, sir.

Q. Well, it may be that the Court or the Government will take a different view from that, Mr. Straus. Then as a matter of fact you have taken no steps to 2667 search for those letters during that period, to search for the outgoing letters to your home office? A. I didn't so understand it exactly; I didn't know you exactly wanted all of my outgoing correspondence to the home office.

Q. You have not produced any and have not searched for any, have you?

Mr. Bullowa: As I understood Mr. Straus to say he has tried to find that file of letters and has not been able to do it.

2668

The Witness: We have moved at one time and these letters were in a separate box. I will find them for you, whatever you want. I feel quite certain. We don't want to hide anything.

Q. Have you, up to date, made any search for them? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bullowa: Do I understand that you made the search personally or through your clerks.

The Witness: Through the clerks.

Q. You have directed your clerks to make a search for carbon copies of letters written by you or your company, from here in New York to your home office 2669 in regard to fighting ships, entrance into the conference and the other matters covered by the subpoena? A. I have directed them to pick out every letter that pertains to the conference, to the fighting ship and every kind from the company, but I did not speak about certain letters that I have written because I misunderstood that. I gave that subpoena to Mr. Bullowa and evidently we misunderstood the way it should have been, but I am sure I will get you everything you want.

Q. You testified, Mr. Straus, that you had at certain times, while in the railroad business, paid commissions as high as $17?

2670

Mr. Beers: I renew my objection to this line of evidence—the same objection I made when Mr. Sandford and Mr. McCain were on the stand.

Mr. Dorr: I understand your objection continues and need not be repeated.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On a San Francisco ticket? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Commission? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that on a steerage ticket? A. There was no difference between first-class, second-class, or steerage or third-class; I think at the time these commissions were paid, when everything was demoralized.

Q. Do you mean to say that the first-class rates to San Francisco were the same as the steerage rates? A. No, sir; you asked me about commissions, first-class commissions, I think, I feel quite certain were the same.

Q. Were the first-class rates the same as the steerage rates at that time? A. There are no steerage rates in the railroads; it is called immigrant rates.

Q. Were the first-class rates on the railroads the same as the immigrant rates at that time? A. Not to 2672
San Francisco.

Q. Do you mean to be understood as saying that the railroads paid a $17 commission on immigrant business at that time? A. The railroads paid more. The outside agencies paid $17 commission and I paid as high as $17 commission.

Q. On immigrant business to San Francisco? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that and what was the railroad? A. There were a number of railroads.

Q. Well, give one? A. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe.

Q. You were directly concerned with that and had personally, knowledge of this fact? A. I had personal 2673 knowledge that that commission was paid by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe.

Q. When was this? A. It is a very difficult thing for me to give you the exact year, but it is history in railroading.

Q. Well, what is the date in this history of railroading? A. I could not give you the exact date.

Q. Well, approximate it?

2674

Mr. Bullowa: About 1894.

Mr. Dorr: I think I will take the witness's recollection, without suggestion from the counsel.

Mr. Bullowa: It is a question of history.

Mr. Dorr: I am examining this witness's knowledge of history on this.

A. It might have been 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894 and 1895, I couldn't say which and possible 1896.

Q. That is back in the 1890's? A. Yes, that one time, and it was renewed again, I think in 1900.

2675 Q. And you say that you paid as high as $17 for commission on immigrant traffic, on immigrant passengers for San Francisco as late as 1900? A. I believe so; of course, I couldn't give exactly the date.

Q. What was the rate at that time, San Francisco rate? A. I think the rate was—

Q. Immigrant rate? A. I think the rate was $63.25.

Q. $63.25? A. I think so.

Q. Have you any records relating to that time? A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. You have no way of verifying your statement then? A. You can verify it through Chairman McCain of the Trunk Line Association.

2676 Q. You have no way of verifying the rate at that time? A. I think possibly by discussion and talking with others that were in the business, we could get down to the time.

Q. But you have no records in your possession that would tell you anything about it? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any place where I could obtain them as to your transactions? A. My personal transactions, no, sir.

Q. Now, to return Mr. Straus to my questions to the new ships which your line put on, put in service, did you take off the old ships when the new ships were put on? A. Yes, sir.

2677

Q. You withdrew the Estonia? A. Yes, sir; the company withdrew the Estonia.

Q. What was the rate which the Estonia charged for transportation from New York to Rotterdam? A. The regular rate?

Q. Yes? A. I believe $33.

Q. What is the rate which your ships at present charge? A. $33 to Rotterdam.

Q. Was the Estonia the same sized ship as the present ships? A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. Smaller ship? A. Smaller boat.

Q. Have you got any record of the expenses of the Estonia? A. No, sir, I do not keep any records of the expenses of the steamers. 2678

Q. You have no records which show the actual cost of the steerage business as carried on by the Estonia? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any records which show the actual cost of steerage business carried on by the Kursk? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any records as to the profits on the steerage business made by the Estonia? A. No, sir.

Q. Or the Kursk? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you at any time made a detailed examination of the expense account of either of those ships? A. I have no ways or means of making such an examination. 2679

Q. Your business is to sell the tickets? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are not concerned with the financial management of the line? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been concerned with the financial management of any line? A. I am interested in the financial but concerned—

Q. Has it been part of your duties to take part of the financial management of any line? A. No, sir.

2680 Q. On your ships when you are unable to secure a full complement of steerage passengers, do you utilize the steerage space for freight? A. That matter is handled by Messrs. Benham and Boyeson.

Q. You know nothing about it? A. I know something about it, they are the ones that work the ships.

Q. Are your ships so constructed in the steerage compartment, that you can shift from steerage to freight and freight to steerage? A. I shouldn't wonder.

Q. I don't want your wonders Mr. Straus, I want any information that you have; I don't want specula-2681 tion? A. Yes, sir, we can.

Q. Now, such knowledge as you have of steamers of your line and other lines, is that the ordinary methods of constructing the steerage quarters? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that at periods when the steerage business is light it is practicable to make use of that space in the carriage of freight if freight can be obtained? A. If freight is offered.

Q. You stated that in your opinion your rates ought to be higher than other lines because you have to furnish kosher meat? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the relative price per pound of kosher 2682 meat and other meat? A. I understood it was from one to three cents per pound higher.

Q. And how many pounds do you serve to a passenger in the course of a voyage? A. I don't know, but it costs more; that is all I know.

Q. You don't mean to say you furnish them more than a pound a day, a passenger? A. Some eat much more.

Q. It might make 36 cents difference on a voyage? A. It is a lot of money when we have a lot of passengers. We have often had an infant, Mr. Dorr, who paid us only $2.50 and cost us $500.

2683

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Straus, confine yourself to answers to my questions and any information you desire to give, give it to your counsel and if he desires to bring it out he will do so.

The Witness: All right, sir.

Q. The ships of your line since you joined the conference have from time to time been employed as the so-called defending ships? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When so employed, you have sailed them at reduced rates, have you not? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bullowa: I object to that as leading.

2684

Q. Have you reduced rates as low as $22 to Rotterdam?

Mr. Bullowa: Same objection.

Q. (Continuing): On those ships? A. I believe so.

Q. Has your line received for those voyages, compensation or remuneration for so reducing its rate, from other lines? A. They never told me so; I shouldn't wonder if they did; I don't know it.

Q. You have no information one way or the other? A. Not from the company to me.

Q. When was this rate of $1 from New York to Chicago? A. I believe that rate started in 1885 or so and lasted over a year, possible two years.

Q. Have there been any such rates since the Interstate Commerce Commission has been in existence? A. I believe the rates were cut from New York to Chicago ten dollars during the time of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Q. The lowest has been ten dollars? A. I believe so.

Q. And how long ago was that? A. Several years ago; I could not give you the exact time.

2686 Q. When was this rate of $7 from Hamburg to Chicago, was that at the time you mentioned? A. Just about the same time that the Pennsylvania Railroad in their dispute with the other railroads, reduced their rate to Chicago to $1 and the West Shore Railroad followed suit and then went in the hands of a receiver.

Q. That was prior to the Interstate Commerce Commission? A. Yes, sir; and was bought up by the Vanderbilt Lines.

Q. What was the lowest rate from Hamburg to New York within the last 15 years? A. Well, of course, if I answer that—2687 Q. (Interrupting): Of course, it is approximate, Mr. Straus; I appreciate that? A. I shouldn't wonder one time it was $35, but that is only giving you my idea. I may be wrong.

Q. And the rate from New York is more than that, I suppose? A. It has been as low, outside of the defending steamers I think it has been as low as $27 or $28.

Q. And what has been the rate to Rotterdam? A. They don't vary very much, about the same, except that the railroad's fare in the interior cost from $2 to $2.50 more than it costs from Hamburg.

Q. And the Rotterdam rates have ordinarily been 2688 lower than the Hamburg rates? A. Oh, about the same, about the same.

Q. And there has been no substantial variations from those rates? A. Not that I know of.

Mr. Dorr: That is all.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Bullowa:

Q. You testified the other day that one of your vessels went out, the Pennsylvania of the Hamburg Line went out with 15 passengers; do you want to correct that? A. Yes, sir.

2689

Q. What are the facts? A. It was the Pretoria that went out on the 15th inst. instead of the Pennsylvania, and she went out with only ten steeragers instead of 15.

Mr. Dorr: You are sure it was ten and not a hundred.

The Witness: No, sir, I verified it by telephone and asked the Hamburg Line whether I was correct in my statement.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Mr. Straus, the question put whether the commission which you paid on the ticket to San Francisco of $17.50 was unusual and whether you could verify that information, I understood your testimony to be that you had no way in which you could verify that statement, but was a similar commission paid to other people in your position at the same time? A. They all paid it. 2690

Q. Other people received it? A. Every steamship company received it.

Q. There wasn't anything unusual about it at that time? A. Oh, no; the Southern Pacific paid it in Europe through their agent.

Q. You were asked whether you fixed the rates or whether the company in Europe fixed the rates; and I understood your testimony to be that you fixed the rates; the company fixed the rates? A. Yes, sir. 2691

Q. And certain exhibits were shown you, which I think run from 227 to 235, inclusive? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you explain your testimony in connection with those exhibits? A. The managing office when the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company was first in existence, under the General Passenger agentship of New York—Copenhagen was the managing directors; they received all information from our company's general agent at Libau which was the working end of it and when you might see a letter saying we see you have arranged your rates and so and so and so, that was instructions to us from Libau and we in writing a letter and answering it sent a copy of every letter that we sent to Libau, to the managing directors at Copenhagen up to the time we were told not to send any more of these letters, but confine all of our letters to Libau. At that time we had a general agency, I believe prior to that, in Libau, by the name of Niefau & Company, who not alone represented our line, but represented the Russian Volunteer and he was afterwards dismissed for reasons best known to the company, and 2693 the company then assumed the old management at Libau and that is the reason why it might look conflicting to my testimony here when these letters say "We see you have made such and such rates"; not me, my company through the company at Libau.

Q. Or through Niefau? A. I don't know whether it was Niefau, but also my instructions was in all cases when we were not in the conference to follow the Volunteer.

Q. Whatever rates the Volunteer fleet made to follow them? A. That was my instructions.

By Mr. Dorr:

2694 Q. The Volunteer Fleet was not in existence at the time of these letters? A. I said prior, when we were out of the agreement.

Q. Did you in fact fix the rates? A. I have no authority to fix rates; everything done by us in this country is subject to the company's approval.

Q. As I understand, your most recent information is that your company is not a member of the conference? A. That is my information, that they are not a member of the conference.

By Mr. Beers:

Q. Mr. Straus, did I understand you to say that the lowest steerage rate from Hamburg to New York within the last 15 years was in the neighborhood of $35? A. I said from $30 to $35.

Q. In designating that as the lowest rate, did you include rates which had been charged at time of wars? A. No, sir; I did not. I meant when everything is regular, and no fighting of any kind, legitimate rates.

By Mr. Dorr:

2696

Q. That is at time when there has been an agreement as to the rates, that is what you mean, is it not? A. No, sir, I mean regularly, when there is harmony in the steamship business, as well as in the railroad business.

Q. When there is no competition among the various lines? A. When there is no illegitimate competition. It is not legitimate when you have a $22 rate against a $33 rate.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. You have been in the steamship business, we will say for the last 25 years, have you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there have been in the steamship business years of extreme leanness? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I object to any further testimony as to the financial outlook of this witness, on the ground that the witness has already disqualified himself from any testimony on that point, by showing an absolute lack of familiarity with it.

Q. Years of extreme depression?

Mr. Dorr: I make the same objection.

2698 Max Straus

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, I mean if you are familiar with these economic situations in the steamship trade for the last ten years, are you not?

Mr. Dorr: I object on the ground that the witness has already stated he is not familiar.

A. We are not operators of steamship companies, we are simply general passenger agents.

By Mr. Dorr:

2699 Q. Do you mean to be understood as testifying that you in your office did not advance the outward rate on the ships of your line to $28 as stated in this letter Exhibit No. 228? A. No, sir.

Q. Did your office fix that rate? A. The rate was fixed by our Libau office. They evidently would cable us and ask us what the rates were by other lines, or write us, and we would cable back, and then they would give us instructions.

Q. Your Libau office then was your home office? A. Our home office was Libau. The managing director's office was in Copenhagen.

Q. Have you produced any correspondence from your Libau office—you have not, have you? A. I 2700 don't know whether I have or not.

Q. Suppose you look through the correspondence you have produced and see whether there is any correspondence from your home office? A. I do not see any, but I will find those letters for you, I think.

Q. Will you find any correspondence that shows that the rates that are described in these letters as having been written by the New York office were really written by the Libau office, and will you also produce all correspondence had by your line in 1907 when you became an agent,—from 1907 down till the time when you joined the conference, with reference to the methods used by the conference lines in opposition to your line, and as to any methods or measures which your line considered to meet that opposition, whether those measures were by bringing a legal proceeding or by endeavoring to secure admission to the conference? A. I will try to find those letters if they are in existence.

Mr. Dorr: I mean not merely letters which were received by you from your home office in Libau or Copenhagen, but also press copies, or other copies of letters which you wrote.

Q. This Hamburg rate that you spoke of before, is not the lowest rate which has been made between Hamburg & New York, is it? A. No, sir. 2702

Q. In the last 15 years, what other rates, which you regard as illegitimate rates, have existed between Hamburg and New York? A. There was a difference between the lines some years ago whereby I think the Hamburg rate was reduced quite materially.

Q. Well, to what point? A. I don't know, I think it went down as low as $15 or $20.

Q. When was that? A. When there was a fight between—

Q. What was the date? A. I couldn't give you the date.

Q. At a time when there was a temporary suspension, or when there was no combination between the lines? A. I think there was a fight between the Cunard Line and the different lines on some matter or other which I forget, I cannot give you the exact circumstances now. 2703

Mr. Dorr: That is all with this witness.

2704

OSCAR L. RICHARD, re-called:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Have you been able to find the tariff of the Mediterranean Lines to Continental ports? A. I have not found the printed tariff, but I got an extract of the rates from our copy book. We quoted rates of Continental ports from April 25, 1908, to December 1908, some time in December, 1908, and the rates vary.

Q. Where were these rates from? A. New York.

Q. Is that a New York rate? A. New York by 2705 way of Italy, by way of Genoa.

Q. To the inland Continental port points? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your rate at that time to Genoa, your ocean rate? A. $15, $17, there was a war in the rates at that time.

Q. $15 and $17? A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. What line was that? A. The Lloyd Italiano.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. And this is a compilation of the rates that ap-

2706 plied between April 25th, 1908, and December, 1908? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr: I will offer this in evidence.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Is that by way of Genoa? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the rate to Genoa? A. $15, $17 and even higher later on, as the rates increased.

Q. How much of this rate charged here was the steamship and how much railroad? A. I cannot tell you without referring to our records.

2707

Q. I thought that was a paper showing the railroad rate? A. It shows the through rates, including the rail rates.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. You testified, didn't you that the ocean rate was $15 and $17? A. Yes, sir, and somtimes higher later on as the other rates advanced, the ocean rates advanced also.

Q. $15 and $17, and some times higher? A. Yes, sir, later on.

2708

SAMUEL NAHMSCHIK, sworn on behalf of the petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. What is your business? A. Bookkeeper with A. E. Johnson & Company.

Q. What are your duties? A. Keeping books and the accounts in the office.

Q. Among the accounts that you keep are there any accounts for expenses of steerage transportation, steerage passengers? A. No, sir.

Q. You keep no records of that? A. No, sir. 2709

Q. No records of the expenditures made for steerage transportation on steamers of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you made a search for any papers of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What search have you made? A. I looked in the files.

Q. What files? A. In the office where we filed all the letters received from the company

Q. What letters? A. Letters received from the company.

2710 Q. And did you discover any letters? A. No, I could not find any.

Q. Did you make any other search? A. I searched only about two or three hours, and I could not find any so I stopped searching.

Q. And that is the only search you have made? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you report the result to anyone? A. I reported it to Mr. Straus.

Q. Did you receive any directions from Mr. Straus? A. I received a direction to search again but I did not have any time to look for it, so I did not.

2711 Q. What did he tell you to search for? A. To search for the letters which concerned anything in connection with the pool agreements and etc.

Q. Letters received from the company? A. Yes, sir, received from the company.

Q. Did he ask you to make any other search? A. No, sir.

Mr. Dorr: That is all with this witness.

2712 JACOB JURGENSEN, called as a witness on behalf of the petitioner, was first duly sworn and testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Have you made a search for papers of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company? A. Not so far as I know of.

Q. Have you been instructed to make a search for them? A. No, sir, I was not.

Mr. Dorr: That is all with this witness.

Mr. Richard was then recalled to the stand and at the request of Mr. Dorr his examination was adjourned until July 9th, 1912. 2713

The witness Richard was directed by the examiner to appear in the court on July 9th, 1912, at two P. M. for further examination.

Hearing adjourned to July 9th, 1912, at two o'clock P. M.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK. 2714

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Petitioner,
against

HAMBURG-AMERIKANSCHE PACKETFAHRT - ACTIEN - GESELLSCHAFT and others,

Before Charles E. Pickett, Esq., Examiner. 2715

New York, July 9th, 1912.

Hearing resumed pursuant to adjournment.

Appearances:

Henry A. Wise, Esq., Goldthwaite H. Dorr, Esq., Henry A. Guiler, Esq., John S. Bradley, Esq., J. W. H. Crim, Esq., for the petitioner.

2716 Messrs. Burlingham, Montgomery & Beecher by Charles C. Burlingham, Esq., and Norman B. Beecher, Esq., for The Anchor Line, Ltd., et al.

Messrs. Choate & Larocque, by Nelson Shipman, Esq., for Norddeutscher Lloyd, et al.

Messrs. Spooner & Cotton, by L. C. Spooner, Esq., for the Allan Line, et al.

Messrs. Lord, Day & Lord, by Lucius H. Beers, Esq., and Allan B. A. Bradley, Esq., for The Cunard Line, et al.

Ralph J. M. Bullowa, Esq., and Walter Rogers Deuel, Esq., for the Russian East Asiatic Company, et al.

2717 Mr. Bullowa: There are in my office about between fifteen and twenty letter books and copy books and it is impossible to discriminate what letters the government wants and which they do not. I spent one day going through part of the letter books and for that reason I make the suggestion that the Government examine the books and choose the letters they want themselves. Some of the letter books are in bad condition, they have been through water, that is, as far as the letters to agents are concerned it is impossible to pick them out for a period covering fourteen years, that they are 2718 all mixed up with general correspondence, and it will require some one of considerable intelligence to go through the company's files and find out which letters the Government wants, and I am willing to have the Government go through those files and letter books.

Mr. Dorr: The subpoena calls for the production in court of certain papers and at the last session Mr. Straus stated that he will produce those papers which he had previously failed to produce. The testimony was that there were not letter books subsequent to 1906; I understand you now to state that there are letter books covering 1907, 1908, 1909 and 1910. 2719

Mr. Bullowa: No, there are letters covering 1907 and part of 1908.

Mr. Dorr: Nothing later than that?

Mr. Bullowa: Later than that they are the office files or letter files and those are mixed up with general correspondence. There is no book separating letters regarding conferences from other letters.

Mr. Dorr: The Government does not care to have the custody of these particular exhibits, but desires them to be produced in court so that it may offer such of them in evidence as it desires and remain in the custody of the examiner. 2720

Mr. Bullowa: I am not authorized to offer the letters to any one. They are in my office now, if the Government insists upon having the letters picked out it will have to give me considerable time to do it.

Mr. Dorr: The Government has called for the production under different subpoenas of certain books and certain letters.

Mr. Bullowa: And it is a physical impossibility to pick those letters out from what the Government has given. 2721

Mr. Dorr: It is not a physical impossibility to produce the books which contain them.

Mr. Bullowa: The Government did not call for the books; it only called for certain letters.

Mr. Dorr: It is about three weeks since the service of the subpoena calling for those letters and it appeared at the last session that no effort had been made to obey that subpoena so far as the outgoing letters of your line were 2722 concerned. I don't want to take the time of the district judge with contempt proceedings but that will be absolutely necessary unless these subpoenas are obeyed.

Mr. Bullowa: If you want to send down for the books you can do so.

Mr. Dorr: Certainly, as I informed you, the Government will do the necessary physical labor. You will produce them this afternoon?

Mr. Bullowa: Not this afternoon, but you can send down for them tomorrow morning when I am in the office. I will have to get permission to let them out of my possession.

2723 Mr. Dorr: Senator Spooner, as to the search which you have been making for the documents in obedience to the subpoena?

Mr. Spooner: Mr. Lederer has gone through the books, all of which are in German, and has transcribed in German literally the text of every letter relating to the matters called for in the subpoena, and I shall immediately have that translated by the regular man who attends to that business and will preserve the German text so that you can compare them, if you choose. It will take some little time.

Mr. Dorr: Will you leave directions with Mr. Lederer to have them turned over to the 2724 examiner or to us?

Mr. Spooner: Yes. Which do you prefer?

Mr. Dorr: It is handier to have them turned over to us, if it suits you.

Mr. Bullowa: I understand our books are to be turned over to the examiner?

Mr. Dorr: Certainly, if you prefer.

Mr. Bullowa: I would as it has other correspondence.

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Beers?

Mr. Beers: I received information this morning that the papers called for by the Government are on the Lusitania to be here on Friday the 12th, so that I expect I will receive them by Saturday, and produce them the first of the week. I understand they are papers of every description for the period called for. 2725

Mr. Dorr: Do they also cover that correspondence which Mr. Sandford mentioned in his testimony, that is, it will cover those informal agreements?

Mr. Beers: Mr. Sandford testified as I recall that there were certain traffic agreements existing prior to the agreement "AA" and I asked the Government how far back they wanted those produced and I think you said you preferred them to go as far back as 1892, so I asked them to produce every agreement of every description relating to traffic rates from 1892 to 1908. 2726

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Burlingham?

Mr. Burlingham: I have in my office now, they were sent up this morning, letters from the International Mercantile Marine to Europe and the replies. I have not had time to go through them, but I will produce them tomorrow morning, if you wish. They run from 1908, to the present time; I find what is called for in your subpoena is only to the 12th of June, 1908, but I understand now that you want to go back further; how far back do you want to go? 2727

Mr. Dorr: I think the letters in the early part of 1910, would be entirely unintelligible and it would be necessary to go back for six months, the period covered by the negotiations leading up to Exhibit "AA."

Mr. Burlingham: From the first of August, 1907?

Mr. Dorr: Yes.

Mr. Burlingham: I will call with them in the morning.

2728 Mr. Dorr: And will you make note of that also, Senator?

Mr. Spooner: We have not been able to find any correspondence relating to the negotiations which preceded or accompanied the formation of the "AA" agreement.

Mr. Burlingham: Is there any change in the wish of the Government as to the subject which they want to cover in this correspondence? The subpoena of June 12th, 1912, says: "The letters and letterpress or other copies of letters exchanged between you and your officers and agents and employees in Europe and in the United States at divers times in the years 1908,
2729 1909, 1910, referring and relating to the formation, the terms, and execution and the maintenance of a certain written agreement entitled "AA" of February 5, 1908, between the Allan Line, the Cunard Line, The Anchor Line and various other lines therein mentioned, agreements entered into by said corporations at London, England, on or about March 25, 1908, relating to the operation by said lines of ships in competition with the ships of lines not parties to said agreement 'AA' and to the operation of 'fighting,' 'opposition,' 'competitive,' or 'defending' steamers by said corporations, par-
2730 ties to said agreement 'AA' from time to time, in the years 1908, 1909, 1910 and the fixing and payment of compensation therefor." That seems to be all there is about correspondence and the rest is in regard to the agreement. That is, it relates to "AA." Under the terms of the subpoena do you wish to make it any broader or have I misunderstood it?

Mr. Dorr: I think that semi-colon there is misleading.

Mr. Burlingham: After the word mentioned is a semi-colon. Do you mean also correspondence relating to agreements entered into by 2731 said corporations at London, England, on or about March 25th, or do you mean May 25th?

Mr. Dorr: Yes.

Mr. Burlingham: May 25th, 1908, relating to the operation by said lines of ships in competition with ships of lines not parties to said agreement "AA" and to the operation of fighting, opposition, competitive or defending steamers by said corporations, and fixing the payment of compensation therefor, and the rules made by said lines as to the employment of their agents, together with correspondence with reference to all of those subjects from 2732
August 1st, 1907, until when?

Mr. Dorr: To 1910.

Mr. Burlingham: I will produce them.

Mr. Dorr: Now about the custody of them?

Mr. Burlingham: I should think the natural place would be with the examiner. What I propose to do with your permission is to bring those up and then have particular letters which relate to it, which I am to determine, whether they relate to it or not, copied. I do not intend to let you go through my letter books and find anything else. You will have to take my word for it. I do not see that it is a writ of search you want. You have asked us to pro- 2733 duce letters in regard to it and you have to trust somebody and I think I am the one you have to trust. You have not asked me to produce the letter books and you have asked me to produce letters.

Mr. Dorr: The Government hasn't any disposition in this case to use this case as a means of prying into matters which are not relevant to the issues there. On the other hand, the Government does propose to assure itself that those documents and letters which do relate 2734 to the issues here are in fact produced, and we have secondary evidence, but have every disposition to rely on the good faith of counsel in the matter and I see no reason why we should not rely on your good faith.

Mr. Burlingham: I will produce them anyway here and I would rather have them with the examiner and we will look through them and have them copied, what related to the business, and take them away again.

Mr. Bullowa: I will do the same thing.

Mr. Dorr: Of course, if there is any reason in the case of one of the witnesses to question the good faith of statements that have been 2735 made the Government will have to make a further examination of the witness, but going on the assumption that a search would be made in good faith by the defendants.

Mr. Bullowa: I will either allow the examiner, or the district attorney to examine my letter books in my office, or I will produce my books, put them in the custody of the special examiner, and go through them up here and pick out the letters which I consider relate to the subject of the subpoena.

Mr. Dorr: The only question is one of time. Of course these things, were, as I understood, 2736 to be in such shape that we could dispose of it at this session. Now, apparently Mr. Burlingham is not in such shape and Senator Spooner has stated that while his documents are not in such shape he has no objection to trusting them to the tender mercies of the district attorney, and that is Mr. Shipman's position; he has already permitted the district attorney to make an examination of the letters which relate to the subject-matter.

Mr. Shipman: We have made a very exhaustive search in our correspondence in both directions, New York and Germany, and part of 2737

the translations have not been completed as yet and they are not in such shape that we can readily submit them, but I will have them very shortly.

Mr. Dorr: I haven't any objection to that so long as I understand you are entirely willing that we shall have opportunity to examine them. Then I assume, apparently Mr. Burlingham will produce his letters and Mr. Bullowa his letter books?

Mr. Burlingham: Now, Mr. Dorr, are there any other documents that you want me to produce? I have gone over this very carefully 2738 with you and your associates once or twice trying to check them with the subpoena. If there are any others we have offered to produce them and I would like to know it.

Mr. Dorr: I think you said, did you not, that you had been unable to locate that copy of the minutes No. 122 referred to in the cablegram to Mr. Sandford?

Mr. Burlingham: Don't you mean something about a different number, 22?

Mr. Dorr: Possibly it is 22 instead of 122.

Mr. Burlingham: I asked my client who was subpoenaed if they had minutes of meetings by the representatives of various conferences 2739 or the conference committees held on March 25th, 1908, appointing a committee of three and they informed me that they hadn't. I asked them for them under date of March 25th or May 25th, 1908, and they replied they had no minutes of meetings of representatives held at either of those dates.

Mr. Dorr: I do not think we served any subpoena to produce them; we made an informal request for the minutes of the London conference.

2740 Mr. Burlingham: I have not produced any minutes of the conference in London because we haven't any. I think we have produced the minutes of the conference in either Germany or France.

Mr. Dorr: Beschlusse No. 1 or Beschlusse No. 2?

Mr. Burlingham: Yes. You called for the minutes of meetings held at Paris, January 29th, 1909; we didn't have them. I have written to Mr. Morse in accordance with your suggestion asking if he can make a tabulation or chart showing the changes in rates for a series of a good many years, ten years or more, at your 2741 suggestion, and I have not heard from him yet. I have here the changes in rates from June, 1907, to December, 1911, but they are, as I said, the other day, very voluminous and they are not—

Mr. Dorr: Do those include the changes in rates for the so-called fighting steamers?

Mr. Burlingham: Yes, they do, because I see here on January 12th, 1910, I see the Graf Waldersee, reduced from $35 to $24, so I fancy they do.

Mr. Dorr: There is no reason why the defendants should prepare any such tabulation.

2742 Mr. Burlingham: I asked him to do it, but they have not answered yet. I think it was perhaps a misunderstanding on your part of Mr. Sandford's testimony. You had a notion apparently that Mr. Sandford kept in his office a table of the changes in rates, and apparently from Mr. Morse's statement they merely note the changes made at certain dates chronologically, and he says that he knows of no such summary statement as you wish.

Mr. Dorr: I simply assumed it was a summary statement from the general testimony.

I think undoubtedly this is what he refers to in his testimony.

Mr. Burlingham: I have it here now, if you want it.

Mr. Dorr: We should like that and we would like to go back of 1907, on that.

Mr. Burlingham: How far back do you want to go?

Mr. Dorr: Say 1903.

Mr. Burlingham: What date, January?

Mr. Dorr: Yes, January 1st, 1903.

Masses of slips showing changes in rates of third-class passengers marked Petitioner's Exhibit 237 for identification. 2744

OSCAR L. RICHARD, recalled:

Examination continued by Mr. Dorr:

Mr. Richard: Mr. Dorr, since the last examination, I searched for and found the published rates that you asked for.

Q. Have you any tariff showing the inland rates as distinguished from the through rate or can we obtain that by deducting the local rate from the through rates quoted here? A. In most cases you can deduct the rate to the port; the difference is the rail rate. 2745

Q. And the port from which the inland rate is recorded is— A. Genoa.

Mr. Dorr: I ask that these be marked for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 238 for identification.

Q. I think I asked you to produce, Mr. Richard, a statement which I think you said you had of the gross income of the Lloyd Italiano Line; have you such a statement? A. I had such a statement for 1910.

Q. Did you make that up? A. No, sir, it was made up in Italy at the head office of the Lloyd Italiano.

Q. Have you it there? A. (Witness produces paper).

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 239 for identification.

2747 Q. That is for the year ending December 31st, 1910? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did the Mediterranean agreement go into effect, Mr. Richard, the existing Mediterranean agreement; do you recall? A. I believe it was in the winter of 1909.

Q. Have you any statement which shows the returns from the steerage business? A. I only have statements showing the returns of the whole business of the company.

Mr. Spooner: You mean that this is this statement?

Mr. Richard: No, sir.

2748 Q. Do you know what proportion of the Italian business is allotted to the Lloyd Italiano by the agreement of 1909, the Mediterranean agreement of 1909? A. No, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Do you mean by agreement or under the agreement?

Q. Under the agreement? A. No, sir.

Mr. Spooner: That is objected to as incompetent.

2749

Q. Have you any statement for the gross income for 1911? A. That is the statement for the business in 1911.

Q. Is that an official report of the company? A. Yes. I also have them for 1910, 1909 and 1908.

Report for 1911 marked Petitioner's Exhibit 240 for identification.

Q. Have you produced copies of two returns of the Lloyd Italiano corporation tax law for 1910 and 1911 respectively? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you produced the return made by your company to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the corporation tax law for 1910? A. Yes, sir (producing paper).

2750

Mr. Dorr: I ask that it be marked for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 241 for identification.

Q. And for the year 1911? A. Yes, sir, (producing paper).

Mr. Dorr: I ask that that be marked for identification.

Marked Petitioner's Exhibit 242 for identification.

2751

Mr. Spooner: Personally you know nothing about the character of this report; you did not make it up, did you?

The Witness: I did not make it up.

Mr. Spooner: You do not undertake to testify whether it is correct or not, do you?

The Witness: No, sir.

Q. Did you testify, Mr. Richard, in your opinion you thought that the operation or existence of the pool agreement or conference agreement was necessary for the protection of the weak? A. I testified to that effect. In fact I think if the court should hold the present working agreement illegal—

Q. The question merely calls for whether or not that was not your opinion; whether you stated that opinion —now, Mr. Richard, do you regard the effect of the combined action under such an agreement as a protection to the lines which are outside of that agreement? A. If certain conference rules were changed it would make no difference to outside lines.

Q. Did you find that the effect of the conference agreement as it existed while you were trying to run 2753 the Russian Volunteer Fleet to be a protection to the weak?

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading.

A. Yes, in the form that it existed.

Q. Was it a protection to the weak who were members of the agreement or protection to the weak who were not members of the agreement? A. I believe I misunderstood your first question. Will you please repeat it?

Q. (Question read.) "Did you find that the effect of the conference agreement as it existed while you were trying to run the Russian Volunteer Fleet to be 2754 a protection to the weak"? A. No, sir.

Q. It would be a protection to the weak if they were members to the parties to the conference agreement? A. Yes.

Q. But not if they were not parties to it? A. No, sir.

Q. The effect of the combination action of the lines while it would protect any weak line that was a party to that agrement, would have a tendency to put out of business a line that was not a party to it, would it not? A. Yes.

2755

Mr. Spooner: Objected to as leading and further, as argumentative.

Q. And it would have the effect of making it more difficult for a new line to establish itself in the Continental business?

Mr. Spooner: Same objection.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But for weak lines which were in the conference you say that you think it would be for their protection? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They would be assured of a certain proportion of the business by the operation of the traffic agreement which apportions them a certain amount which they might not otherwise be able to obtain? A. You are talking about the agreement in Europe or the conference in the United States?

Q. I am speaking now of the agreement under which the traffic was apportioned between different lines and the agreement under which the conference lines agreed that their agents should not represent any outside line. Now, if you want to separate those two aspects of the situation— A. I am not familiar with the agreements that are made in Europe, I know about the conference rules here.

Q. You have had information that the traffic was apportioned, the steerage traffic was apportioned, have you not? A. Yes.

Mr. Spooner: I make the same objection.

Q. And the effect of that apportionment would be to insure the weaker line the proportion of the traffic which it might not otherwise be able to obtain in competition with the strong? A. Yes.

Q. And so protect that weaker line? A. Yes.

2758

Q. And further the fact that the weaker line was capable of operation on the same terms as the others by the conference would also be an advantage to it?

Mr. Spooner: I make the same objection.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think you said that you regarded a rate of $30 to Rotterdam as a reasonable rate for certain ships, $35 for other ships, $40 for other ships; now, what is the particular ship that you have in mind for which a $30 rate is reasonable? A. There are some ships burning 65 tons a day can be run cheaper than those 2759 that burn 150 or 250 tons a day.

Q. What is the tonnage of a ship that you have in mind and its speed and its freight capacity, and its steerage capacity, and its cabin capacity, the ship that you would charge $30? A. Take a ship of 5,000 tons.

Mr. Bradley: What kind of tonnage do you refer to when you say 5,000 tons?

The Witness: 5,000 gross tons, a speed of about fourteen knots; steerage capacity about twelve hundred.

Q. Cabin capacity? A. That is not so very important.

Q. What cabin capacity have you in mind for this 2760 ship? A. Twenty-five in the cabin.

Q. And how about the freight capacity? A. Freight capacity about 2,000 tons.

Q. What would be the cost of such a ship which you have in mind? A. To purchase?

Q. Yes? A. That is more than I can say. I never purchased any.

Q. What should you say would be the value of such a ship? A. About $700,000.

Q. What should you say would be the coal of such a ship, the cost of the coal of such a ship? A. The consumption of such a ship?

Q. Yes, on a trip to Rotterdam? A. About seven hundred and fifty tons.

Q. That is for the trip? A. Yes, approximately.

Q. What would the insurance be of such a ship for such a voyage? A. The insurance would be eight or nine per cent.

Q. For the voyage or the year? A. For the year.

Mr. Bullowa: Wouldn't that depend upon the age of the ship?

Q. What would be the cost per capita of feeding the steerage passengers for a day? A. About thirty cents a day. 2762

Q. What should you say would be the steward expense for a ship? A. I don't know.

Q. What should you say would be the officers and crew of such a ship? A. I don't know, their expenses are generally paid abroad.

Q. What other items have you in mind which go to the cost of operating such a ship? A. Depreciation of the ship.

Q. What would you charge for depreciation on such a ship? A. Five per cent.

Q. Five per cent a year? A. Yes.

Q. What else; what other items? A. Wharfage.

Q. What would that amount to on a voyage? A. 2763
Oh, about $1200.

Q. $1,000 or $1,200 for the wharfage? A. Yes.

Q. Per voyage? A. Yes.

Q. Stevedoring? A. Yes.

Q. What should you say the stevedoring charges would be? A. Everything included would be about $4,000.

Q. You mean the port expense for each voyage or what? A. No, port expenses would be about eight or nine hundred dollars.

2764 Q. What are you including in the $4,000? A. Cooperage, clerk hire, watching and discharging, night service, if any, Custom House inspectors.

Q. What would the earnings of freight be of such a ship per voyage?

Mr. Spooner: It depends on how much she carries, don't it?

The Witness: Yes; she may carry only two hundred tons.

Q. Assuming that she has a cargo? A. Oh, about $7,500 or $9,000.

Mr. Spooner: An average?

2765 The Witness: No, for the full ship.

Q. How much of that $30 do you regard as net profit? A. For the profit?

Q. For the net profit, yes? A. I don't know. I replied at the last hearing you would have to take the whole year's working of all the steamers of the line to arrive at a net profit.

Q. Well, how much would you— A. You cannot take it steamer by steamer. One steamer may show a loss and one a profit.

Q. Taking this steamer and assuming that it sailed with two-thirds of its capacity of passengers, how much of the $30 would you regard as profit? A. I 2766 am unable to say. I have never computed it. I have nothing to do with it. That is done at the home office abroad.

Q. How much of that $30 would you regard as actual expense for the voyage per passenger? A. I don't know, I have just submitted a list of corporation taxes showing there was a loss of the business done in America, so according to that there must have been a loss.

Mr. Dorr: I move to strike out the witness's statement as to what the written document shows.

Q. The corporation tax return that you have produced does not show, does it Mr. Richard, anything about the eastbound business? A. All the business done in America and the proportionate expenses of that business.

Q. They do not show the freight money earned on the other side? A. On the other side, it does not show any westbound business.

Q. It does not show the passenger tickets purchased on the other side, do they? A. I submitted a list of all the business done by the company both westbound and eastbound.

Q. Just answer my question, if you will, Mr. Richard; do they include the passage money paid on the other side? A. Not the corporation tax.

Q. It does not contain any analysis of the freight business and steerage business, does it? A. I will have to look (after examining paper).

Mr. Beers: Doesn't the document speak for itself?

The Witness: No, sir, it does not.

Mr. Spooner: You have the document before you, haven't you?

The Witness: A copy of it, yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Has it been marked for identification?

2769

Mr. Bradley: It has been marked for identification, but it is not in evidence.

Q. Have you, yourself, made any calculations as to the expense of running such a ship? A. No, sir, never.

Q. What is your connection with the shipping business, Mr. Richard? A. We are the general agents: we engage their passengers and sell prepaid tickets for which we charge a percentage commission.

Q. Do you fix the rates? A. We do not.

2770

Q. That is fixed on the other side? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you fix the freight rates? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you concerned with the financial management of the company, authorized to collect the freight charges, the passage money such as is paid in this country and to transfer any surplus to the other side? A. That is all we do.

Q. Are you the purchasing agent for the supplies for the steerage? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you purchase the coal? A. We have made the contract, yes, sir.

Q. You make contracts for the stevedoring? A.

2771 Yes.

Q. Do you fix or pay the wages of the seamen and stewards? A. No, sir.

Q. Officers? A. No, sir.

Q. Engineer force? A. None of the crew.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact, then your duties as general agent are to arrange for such tickets and collecting freight money— A. The engaging of cargo.

Q. You stated that $700,000 would be the cost of a ship of 5,000 tons such as you have described?

Mr. Burlingham: When?

Q. At the present time? A. About that.

2772 Q. Do you think you could secure such a ship for $750,000; you think you would have no difficulty in securing $750,000 insurance on such a ship? A. I am hard of hearing.

Q. Do you know of any such ship being insured for $750,000, a fourteen knot ship, $750,000, fourteen knot ship, freight capacity 3,000, gross tonnage 5,000, steerage capacity twelve hundred, cabin twenty-five? A. No, I don't know of any.

Q. I think you stated that for a certain other kind of ship you would regard $35 as a reasonable rate to Rotterdam; what ship did you have in mind; what is the gross tonnage? A. I should say the different steamers of the Holland-Amerika Line would be entitled to a $35 to $40 rate.

Q. Give me the gross tonnage of such a ship as you have in mind? A. I have in mind the Rotterdam of about 24,000 tons, which ought to be entitled to a $40 rate.

Q. Twenty-four thousand gross tons? A. Gross.

Q. What is the cost of such a ship? A. I don't know.

Q. What is the ship that you have in mind, not any particular ship; not the Rotterdam in particular? A. That is the only line that runs to Rotterdam outside of the Mediterranean line.

2774

Q. There are several you have in mind, a ship of some definite carrying capacity when you say for other ships $35 would be a reasonable rate.

Mr. Bradley: He said $35 or $40.

A. $35 to $40.

Q. That is, you are not distinguishing between a $35 ship and a $40 ship? A. Well, there are some smaller steamers for which $35 would be a reasonable rate; smaller than the Rotterdam, I mean.

Q. Well, what is such a steamer? A. If I had the list here I could show you.

2775

Q. What would be the tonnage of such a steamer? A. About ten to fifteen thousand tons.

Q. Gross tons? A. Gross tons.

Q. And what would its speed be? A. Fifteen or sixteen knots.

Q. What would its freight capacity be? A. I don't know.

Q. What would its steerage capacity be? A. I don't know.

Q. How can you estimate; you were making your estimate then on what would be a reasonable rate for 2776 it without having in mind any steerage capacity? A. I am judging what the reasonable rate would be on the speed and class of steamers.

Q. Wouldn't the steerage capacity have a direct bearing on what the reasonable rate would be? A. No, sir.

Q. Would it have a bearing on how much money the ship could earn? A. You would have to take the earnings of the whole year; the steamer might have—

Q. The earnings of the ship are made up from different voyages, are they not? A. Yes, but the steamer may have capacity for twenty-five hundred steerage 2777 passengers and still only carry two hundred.

Q. If she had that capacity and had freight averaging two hundred and fifty—that is, if she was to earn a profit on the investment which had been invested in her, is that it, if she only carried an average of two hundred and fifty passengers then she would have to charge a higher rate than if she were carrying her complement of twenty-five hundred passengers, would she not? A. It seems to me the way you want to figure that steamer—if the steamer has twenty-five hundred capacity and the rate is only $35 and she carries ten per cent of that the rate will be one hundred and twenty for each passenger, that would be three 2778 hundred and fifty dollars.

Q. (Question read)? A. She would have to charge a higher rate if she averaged two hundred and fifty all the year around.

Q. And if her capacity were only two hundred and fifty steerage passengers, the same ship if she were to earn a remuneration on the investment would have to charge a higher rate than a ship of larger capacity, would she not? A. Such a steamer would never be put in the service.

Q. The capacity does have a direct bearing on the earning capacity of the ship, does it not? A. It seems to me ridiculous to put such a steamer in the service, it would be no good at all.

Q. Just answer my question, Mr. Richard, the steerage capacity of a steamer has a direct bearing on the earning capacity, has it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in order to determine what the earning capacity of that steamer is you have got to look to the steerage capacity, have you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you determine what rate will in fact earn a return on the investment involved in building such a ship and operating it, you have got to look to the steerage capacity and to the number of passengers which she actually carries, have you not? A. Yes. 2780

Q. Well then, you have stated that this ship it would be reasonable to charge $35, but you have stated that you have no idea of what the steerage capacity of the ship would be; is that your view still? A. Well, I know it would not be under a thousand; it might be under two thousand.

Q. If the steerage capacity of a 5,000 ton ship was twelve hundred, do you mean to say that the steerage capacity of a 15,000 ton ship would not be larger? A. It might be larger if the space is not taken up by second cabin or first cabin accommodations.

Q. What would the first or second cabin accommodations of such a ship be that you have in mind? 2781
A. I don't know.

Q. Have you made any analysis of the cost of operation of this ship that you say could reasonably charge $35 for steerage traffic with the view to ascertain what the earnings of such a ship would be for cabin passengers, what they would be from freight and what they would be from the steerage passengers? A. No, sir, I can only judge by the dividends that the steamship companies declared previous to 1909.

Q. Have you made any analysis of the cost of the steerage business? A. No, sir.

Q. What would you say would be the expenditures or costs of coal of such a voyage? A. The voyage of such a steamer?

Q. Or what would you say would be the consumption of coal of such a steamer? A. Of what?

Q. Of a steamer of 15,000 tons capacity which you have in mind, with a speed of sixteen knots I think you said with a gross tonnage of 15,000 tons? A. I can only tell you approximately; probably 2,000 tons would be the consumption of coal from New York to Rotterdam.

Q. You don't know what the cost of such a steamer would be? A. No, I do not know what the actual consumption would be.

Q. And you don't know what the actual cost of such a steamer would be? A. No, sir.

Q. The Italian line cannot operate as cheaply as the lines running to the North Atlantic, can they, Mr. Richard? A. No, sir; they have a longer distance to travel.

Q. Are they run as ecomonically or haven't you any special familiarity with the figures on that? A. I have no knowledge of it.

Q. You don't know the relative expense of operation? A. No.

2784

Mr. Dorr: I will offer in evidence press copy of letter from the defendant Adrian Gips to the Holland-Amerika Line at Rotterdam under date of May 13th, 1908.

Mr. Beers: Objected to as incompetent and not binding on the other defendants.

Received as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 243.

Q. Have you been able, Mr. Richard, to determine any more definitely the period during which your line booked eastbound passengers to continental points? A. Yes.

Q. Haven't you been able to determine that any more definitely? A. April 17th, 1908, until December, 1908.

Q. That was the only time your line ever booked continental passengers? A. That is the only time the Lloyd Italiano booked continental passengers.

Q. How about the other Mediterranean Lines? A. They were all joined together.

Q. All booking eastbound at that time? A. Yes. Here is the list (producing paper).

Q. Had any of those steamers booked prior to that time? A. No, sir.

2786

Q. When did they cease booking? A. During December.

Q. 1908? A. Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Burlingham:

Q. Mr. Richard, did I understand you to say in answer to Mr. Dorr's question that you thought a combination like that of the North Atlantic Conference was good for the weak lines in it? A. In the conference.

Q. Why; how? A. Because it protected them in every way; put them on a parity of the stronger lines.

Q. And with regard to outside lines you said that it was not a protection or good for them, and why not? A. On account of rule 9 to which I referred at the last hearing.

Q. Do you refer to rule 9 of the agency rules? A. Agency rule 9 which prevented conference agents from representing any outside line.

Q. Is this the rule 9: "Agents are prohibited from booking passengers for any steamer except those of the lines members of the Continental, Mediterranean and the North Atlantic Passenger Conferences unless the conference gives express permission in writing," is that the rule? A. That is the one I refer to.

Q. I show you circular 1, six series of the American Conference dated New York, September 15th, 1905, that contains the rule, doesn't it? A. That is the rule.

Q. And at that time, the time that was issued, circular No. 1 of September 15th, 1905, you represented the Prince Line? A. Yes.

Q. And that was in the Mediterranean Conference? A. Yes.

Q. And you were a party to those rules that were then issued? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no objections to it then, I suppose, when you were inside? A. Yes, I did.

2789 Q. And you have always felt that way about that rule, have you? A. Yes, and I wrote repeatedly to Mr. Sandford about it.

Q. And is that the only reason why you say that the Conference hurts the outside line? A. That is the only reason.

Q. Then, that is the only exception you take to the Conference? A. That is the only exception, yes; otherwise I think it is a good thing.

Q. That rule has been in existence for thirty years or more, hasn't it? A. As long as I can remember.

Q. I show you the digest of rules and regulations of the North Atlantic Steamer Traffic Conference, dated 2790 November, 1879, and call your attention to rule 47, which reads as follows: "No agents of a conference line shall book passengers by any steamship not repsented by a member of this conference or of the Continental Conference." Do you remember the rule as far back as that, do you? A. I remember it as far back as the Continental days, yes.

Q. And that has always been the rule, has it? A. Always been the rule.

Q. Now, with reference to this matter of determining the reasonableness of charges by reference to the capacity of the steamship, in determining the question of reasonableness you have to take into consideration a great many elements, don't you? A. Yes.

Q. Could you determine the matter of reasonableness of steerage rates without considering the first cabin capacity and rates, the second cabin capacity and rates and freight rates? A. Yes.

Q. Wouldn't you have to consider all of those? A. Yes.

Q. And does it follow that because a steamer of 5,000 tons can carry 1200 that a steamer of 15,000 tons gross will carry 3,600 steerage? A. No, sir.

Q. I suppose a steamer like the Mauretania or the 2792
Lusitania cannot carry as many steerage passengers as they are at present equipped, as a steamer of much less tonnage, isn't that so? A. I think they carry six or seven hundred.

Q. And in the same way some steamers which carry a comparatively small number of steerage passengers are very heavy cargo boats, are they not? A. Yes.

Q. And some of the White Star boats like the Baltic and the Celtic are very large cargo boats, aren't they? A. Yes.

Q. And they haven't the same steerage capacity as the somewhat smaller boats, is that right? A. I don't know; I don't know what their capacity is.

Q. I don't ask you to state accurately what the ca- 2793 pacity is, but your familiarity with steamers—you know that steamers differ? A. Yes. Large boats do not carry the same number of steerage in proportion to a smaller boat.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Mr. Richard, when you first went into the business forty years ago what was the steerage rate across the Atlantic? A. Thirty dollars to Hamburg and forty dollars from Hamburg.

Q. Wasn't it higher than that at one time? A. I think that was the rate in gold. It made a higher rate in currency; but those were 2,500 ton boats.

Q. What did that $35 or $40 in gold mean in currency? A. I don't recollect what the premium was at that time; it may have been 20 premium or something like that; that would be about $48.

Q. When you became the agent of the Volunteer Fleet did you fix the rates? A. Yes.

Q. How did you fix those rates? A. I fixed them at what I thought was reasonable rates.

Q. Didn't you fix them under what you knew was 2795 the established rate of the Conference Lines? A. There wasn't any line to Libau.

Q. Well, to Rotterdam? A. Probably.

Q. And there were rates to Libau and places in Russia over the Continental lines, weren't there, and the British lines? A. Yes.

Q. And you fixed your rates to Libau and places in Russia so that they were less than the rates of the lines in existence? A. They were naturally less because the distance was less from the port to the interior point.

Q. Is the railroad rates from Rotterdam to the places in Southern Russia less than from Libau to 2796 places in southern Russia? A. I couldn't tell without looking at the tariff.

Q. Isn't that your impression, that there is a differential in railroad rates from Rotterdam, Antwerp, Bremen and Hamburg and Libau? A. Yes.

Q. And in fixing your rates you took advantage of that, didn't you, so that the rates direct to Libau would be less than the rates of the established line? A. Naturally, the rate to the port would be less than by way of a port by rail to that port.

Q. You fixed a competitive rate, did you not, so that the rate of your line would be less? A. The rate was less than by rail from another port to that port.

Q. And you did that in order to get the business away from the established line? A. In order to get our share of business, yes. You might as well take a steamship going from a continental port down to Galveston; they can't book a ticket through to New Orleans cheaper than you can by way of New York because the rail difference is less.

Q. You got your share of the business, didn't you? A. We got our share, yes.

Q. And the only thing you objected to was that you had established the precedent of lowering the rates and the other lines met it, didn't they? A. No, sir; I have always been in favor of high rates because we are on a percentage commission and we like to see the stockholder get something. 2798

Q. But you got your share of the business by cutting the rates? A. We didn't cut the rates; we followed the others.

Q. Didn't you start in cutting the rates in the first instance? A. No, sir; followed the others.

Q. The others followed your line? A. Perhaps the Rusian East Asiatic did, but we followed the others.

Q. All the steerage business does not go through Ellis Island does it, today? A. All except those citizens.

Q. There is a proportion of those in our ships? 2799
A. Yes.

Q. If they don't go through Ellis Island they are in the hands of the runners of the streets, aren't they? A. Yes.

Q. And the effect of the conference was to do away with those runners, wasn't it? A. That was one of the after effects. The conference has been in existence—the Continental Conference has been in existence since 1870 about.

Q. And the strict enforcement— A. And the strict enforcement is only since about ten or twelve years.

2800 Q. And the strict enforcement of rule 9 has done away with runners? A. I don't know that is so. There is a different rule for them. You look at the Conference rules and you will find different rules about runners.

Q. I have, and the strict enforcement of rule 9 and the strict supervision over the agent would prevent runners? A. That is probable.

Q. Now, wasn't the agreement with the Northwest Transport Line which you had that you were not to pay the money received from prepaids until the passenger was actually landed, an unusual contract? A.
2801 I don't know. I thought it was a good agreement on my part.

Q. You never made that with any other line, have you? A. No, sir.

Q. That was the only line you ever made that agreement with? A. Yes.

Q. You knew about these control stations in Germany, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. You know the regulations of the Government? A. Yes, I also considered it then an outrage, the way they handled passengers that were not forwarded by one of the steamers of the pool lines.

Q. Do you think the action of the German Govern-
2802 ment was an outrage? A. Yes, and I don't think it would be tolerated here for a moment.

Q. And you think that was influenced by the steamship company, the members of the Conference? A. Yes, I think it was done primarily and probably is done still by the steamship company and countenanced by the German Government.

Q. That is, you think the German Government is the tool of the different steamship companies in plain words? A. Not a tool; they countenanced it, that is all.

Q. You think they do it deliberately ? A. I think they know of it. I have no interest in the matter now, but still I think they do not show a bit of humanitarian feeling in sending back these poor immigrants.

Q. Isn't it a protection to the German Government to prevent Russian subjects and alien immigrants having no means of support staying in Germany? A. You refer to immigrants holding prepaid tickets?

Q. Yes. A. They would not be supported by the German Government; they hold tickets right through to the United States.

Q. The same regulation is provided for emigrants coming from the United States to Germany, that there are control stations at Rotterdam and Hamburg? 2804
A. I understand that was instigated recently by the pool lines. Formerly they went right through until the pool lines informed the German Government and they took measures to hold them up at the frontier.

Q. You think the German Government is influenced by the action of the pool lines? A. Yes.

Q. You say that advisedly, do you? A. You asked me if I thought it. Well, I think so.

Q. Your chief objection to the conference is rule 9? A. Yes.

Q. And that agents of the conference could not act for an outside line? A. Yes. 2805

Q. Now, who built up the agents of the conference, the lines? A. Primarily my firm.

Q. That is, just the answer I was expecting. Your firm, and your firm built it up as the agent for what line? A. Of various lines?

Q. Name them? A. Hamburg Line to begin with, in 1847 or 1848.

Q. And you were paid by the Hamburg Line for your efforts? A. Yes.

Q. And did those agents belong to your firm or to the company who paid you for building that up? A.

2806 Oscar L. Richard

The company paid us a percentage of commission for all our services.

Q. How long ago is that? A. 1847?

Q. Yes. A. That is sixty-five years ago.

Q. But the Volunteer Fleet had not built up any system of agents and from which it instituted its line? A. No, we have a net work of agency that we inherited from the time we were agents of the Hamburg Line and agents of the Austro-Americano Line.

Q. You had built up the agency system of the Austro-Americano Line under pay of the Austro-Americano Line? A. Also on a commission basis.

2807 Q. Do you know anything about the freight rates? A. I guess so.

Q. Is that regulated by the supply and demand? A. Yes.

Q. Entirely? A. Entirely.

Q. The freight rate increased materially in the last year or two years from what there had been for the previous six or seven years? A. Yes, especially this spring to the Mediterranean.

Q. Was that the effect of any agreement or the natural law of supply and demand? A. Natural law of supply and demand.

Q. The rates in the previous period of five or six 2808 years, freight rates, had been below a remunerative basis, had they not? A. Yes.

Q. Owners were tying up their ships because they would not pay? A. Partly, yes.

Q. As a matter of fact if the regular line increases the rates the high competition sets in? A. Yes; perhaps tramp steamers are sent over.

Q. And concerns such as the Standard Oil and the Steel Corporation established their own lines? A. Yes.

Q. To meet the abnormal rates which they think the lines are charging? A. Yes.

Q. So that the regulation of rates is governed by economic reasons generally? A. Entirely.

Q. And it depends not only upon the conditions in the United States and in Europe, but the conditions in South America and Australia? A. Yes.

Q. Is it necessary, therefore, to have some supervision over the rates on the sea because under natural conditions there is no stability to them? A. There isn't any so far as the freight rates are concerned. There is stability at the present time as far as the passenger rates are concerned, especially steerage. In fact steerage rates in Italy are fixed by the Italian Royal Commissioner of general emigration, and they are about forty dollars.

Q. You cannot charge below a certain amount in Italy? A. No, sir.

Q. And you cannot charge above? A. It is a fixed rate.

Q. A fixed minimum and a fixed maximum? A. It is fixed every month.

Q. Do you know how it is fixed? A. According to the steamer.

Q. How does the Government arrive at the basis of the rate? A. They will take a steamer that makes the passage a little slower than some other steamer and fix the rate at 185 lires which is about thirty-seven dollars, and they will take another which runs a couple of days faster and make the rate 210 lires, about forty-two dollars.

Q. Do you know whether the Government in Italy also fixes who can sell steerage passenger tickets? A. The general offices have their own agents all over Italy.

Q. Are agencies under any Government supervision too? A. Yes, they are licensed.

Q. They are licensed by the Government of Italy? A. Yes.

2812 Q. And every man can not go and sell tickets like here? A. No, sir. And I was going to say before that if the Court should hold this working agreement illegal the commissioner of general emigration of the United States or some such commissioner as the Interstate Commerce Commission will have to be empowered to fix rates also, otherwise some of the steamers, if not some of the lines, especially the weaker lines, will have to go out of business entirely, with the result that commerce between the United States and Europe will be curtailed.

Q. Do you know the official name of the— A.
2813 The restrictive measures of emigration will have the same effect too.

Q. Do you know the official name of the Northwest Transport Line, the corporate name? A. The Northwest Shipping Company, I believe.

Q. The Northwest Shipping Company, Limited? A. Yes, I think so.

CROSS-EXAMINATION by Mr. Spooner:

Q. I understood you said it is impossible to ascertain the cost of carrying steerage passengers up on the basis of the rate and expenditures of a particular ship 2814 on a particular voyage? A. Yes.

Q. That in order to reach it with any accuracy you have to take the whole year's operations? A. That is right.

Q. Would it in your judgment be any different from an attempt to fix the cost of carrying steerage by rail in this country, by getting at the cost of the particular train; it is about the same principle isn't it? A. I think so.

Q. And the only way they have discovered of ascertaining the cost is by taking the year's business? A. Yes.

Q. And that is the truth as to the ocean carriage by steerage as well as it is to land carriage? A. Yes, I could never understand why the general public had such an exaggerated idea of the profits of steerage business.

Q. Have you testified—I don't think you did, but I am not sure—that any line was driven out of business by the Atlantic Conference? A. If I testified to that? Yes, I think I have; I don't know whether I did.

Q. Was any line driven out? A. The Russian Volunteer Fleet was driven out.

Q. Was that driven out by the Conference? A. By low rates, yes, that were made in competition. 2816

Q. Are you certain of that? A. Yes, that is what I was told by the former president at the time the line was running, and the general manager at Libau told Mr. Fourman, who has been testifying here.

Q. You have seen the letters of the president of that line in which he says that is not true? A. I saw that.

Q. Do you think he does not know? A. He ought to know.

Q. He has better and more accurate knowledge than you, hasn't he? A. Certainly.

Q. Isn't he a truthful man? A. Yes, a man of great honor.

Q. Do you mean then to put your judgment upon 2817 that question against his formal statement? A. I didn't give you my judgment; I am just telling you what the former president told me and what the former manager in Libau told Mr. Fourman when he was over in Libau.

Q. And Fourman told you? A. And Mr. Fourman then told me.

Q. About the control stations, when did they originate, Mr. Richard? A. I don't know.

Q. Well, you have an excellent memory and you have had long experience, I wish you would think 2818 about it a moment and see if you cannot remember about the time that they originated? A. I could not tell within a few years; I should think at least fifteen years ago.

Q. Isn't it a fact that they originated about 1892 or 1893 or along there? A. It may be. Our agency was, I think, in 1892 with the Hamburg Line in New York; we were agents until 1892.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact according to your recollection that some people came in on the steerage in 1892 with cholera and were turned back who were found to come from Russia? A. Yes, they were over 2819 on Fire Island on the steamer Roumania, I believe.

Q. They came from Russia? A. I don't know where they came from.

Q. You don't remember that? A. I remember the circumstance, yes.

Q. Have you ever heard or have you not that the Government of the United States ascertaining the origin of those people requested the German Government to take measures to prevent the further transit of people from that territory through Germany to the United States? A. No, sir.

Q. Afflicted with diseases I mean and inadmissible under the immigrant laws of the United States? A. I 2820 have not heard of that, but it would be perfectly proper.

Q. You do not testify that that is not true? A. I say it would be perfectly proper. No, I don't know anything about it, whether that emanated from the United States Government or not.

Q. You had some objection to people being turned back over there? A. Yes, who were not afflicted with any objectionable disease.

Q. They had not been through the control stations, had they? A. They did not get as far as that, they would get as far as that and then be turned back.

Q. They had not been examined, had they? A. I don't know. All I did know that the passengers holding those tickets were not allowed to pass through, when they got their tickets—when they waited there for their tickets to be sent, then they were allowed to pass.

Q. Well, now, let's see about that. Assuming it to be true that they were examined, you say you don't know whether they were or not— A. No, because I wasn't there.

Q. Very well. If they were examined and found to be unsatisfactory in respect to health it was the right thing to turn them back, wasn't it? A. Certainly.

Q. It would have been cruelty to have allowed them to proceed, to come across, wouldn't it, to Ellis Island and then be sent back? A. There is no question about that at all. The only question is about those being turned back who were entitled to go through.

Q. You don't know that anybody turned back were entitled to go through at the time? A. I have received any number of letters.

Q. You get all sorts of letters, but do you know of a case yourself where an immigrant was turned back who was entitled to come through? A. I did at the time.

Q. If you did at the time, do you now? A. This is a matter of over four years ago.

2823

Q. That is not very long in these days? A. I cannot keep the names of these immigrants in my head, but you can put it down as a fact that that is true, that people that were entitled—who had Russian Volunteer Fleet tickets who were not allowed to pass by the frontier until they had tickets of one of the conference lines.

Q. Why should that be so; is there any reason compatible with the dignity and honor of Germany that would leave that be so? A. That is what I say, it is a disgrace.

Q. Do you think it is a disgrace? A. Yes, I think they ought to hang their heads in shame.

Q. I think they ought. I have never been accustomed to think the German Government did things of that sort; I may be wrong about it and you may be better informed. A. I wouldn't say the Government, but I say the paid officials there.

Q. You know, do you not, that long ago Germany enacted a law which precludes foreign steamship companies or corporations from doing business in Germany in the immigrant business without a license from the Government? A. I testified to that before.

Q. Did the Russian Volunteer Fleet have that license from the Government? A. They did not do business in Germany.

Q. Why didn't they forward their passengers from Libau? A. Because some of them preferred to travel by way of another port in order to be on the ocean so many days less.

Q. But they could have forwarded them to Libau and they would have gone along, wouldn't they? A. Yes, but they would have been on the steamer three days longer.

Q. But they knew that when they took them on board the steamer, didn't they? A. They were not on board when they were returned.

Q. Oh, you mean the people who were sent back? A. Yes.

Q. There was some testimony here that a good many of these people had had their baggage sent on to Rotterdam, hadn't they? A. Yes.

Q. Who were themselves turned back? A. Yes, at the frontier.

Q. And some of them were advised to buy tickets on the Holland-Amerika, weren't they? A. Yes Those who were sent back.

Q. Yes. A. Oh, by the Holland-Amerika, North German Lloyd or the Hamburg American or the Red Star Line. 2827

Q. If a steerage passenger had come to the frontier and you found that they were not entitled to proceed because they had not been examined at the control station and you would be responsible to the Government if you permitted them to proceed and the man had remained—there was a woman who testified here that she—wanted to know which way she would go, you would tell her to go to Rotterdam, wouldn't you, if her baggage was there? A. Yes.

Q. Follow her baggage? A. Yes. 2828

Q. You would think it was a kindness to do it, wouldn't you? A. Yes.

Q. So that it would not be inferable from that fact that the advice was ulterior and intended to promote against the interest of the individual, the interest of the line in the case I put to you?

Mr. Guiler: I think that is rather argumentative.

Mr. Spooner: I will withdraw it if it is argumentative.

A. Senator, there is no use questioning me on that point. I think Mr. Lederer will admit all I have said. 2829

Q. Mr. Lederer will not and I have taken pains myself to study the system over there, and the laws or regulations of Germany. If you sell a ticket to a Russian here to go to Russia would you sell the ticket to a German port? A. If I had the agency of all the lines? I would tell him to take his choice.

Q. No, take the line you represented, take the Russian Volunteer Fleet? A. Well, they generally demand a ticket to a certain port when they are over here; they are not so ignorant; they are more civilized after they have been here a while; they know just where they want to go to and just which way they want to go.

Q. You would not advise them to go through Germany, would you; take a Russian going back to the old country? A. No, I would tell them to take the more direct route.

Q. Why? A. Because it would be so much nearer home.

Q. Not only that, but there would not be obstruction in his passing, would there; there was a way he could go without running into Government regulations? A. If they have a Russian passport they are allowed to go 2831 through Germany I understand at the present time.

Q. Is that literally true? A. I think it is.

Q. Without regard to health and means and all that? A. I don't know what the regulations are now. The time we represented the Russian Volunteer Fleet they could go through.

Q. It has been a good while since they could go through, hasn't it? A. It is four years since we represented that line.

By Mr. Bullowa:

Q. Mr. Richard, if when you sold a prepaid ticket you had instructed the immigrants intending to travel 2832 on that prepaid ticket to come to Rotterdam via Basle, they would not have been turned back at the German frontier, would they? A. We did instruct them later on when we found there was so much difficulty, but, of course, they had to pay so much more for their passage.

Q. You knew of the regulations, did you not, at the German frontier? A. Yes.

Q. Now, these immigrants that were turned back and who testified, did you instruct them that they could come by way of Basle to Rotterdam without any trouble. A. After we found they were being obstructed at the frontier, yes. We notified our agents and took for granted they would notify the immigrants.

Q. Before you went into this immigrant business did you take the trouble of instructing yourself as to the rules and regulations of the foreign government regarding transportation of immigrants? A. No, I was not acquainted with those frontier stations at that time.

Q. If you had been acquainted with those regulations these immigrants would not have been turned back, would they? A. Probably not.

Q. That is, they would have been properly instructed if you had taken the trouble to acquaint yourself with the rules and regulations, is that right?

Mr. Guiler: I object to that.

A. Yes.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION by Mr. Guiler:

Q. Now, Mr. Richard, in the matter of competition between the various lines, did you ever notice that the number of steerage passengers fell off when the rates were lowered by such competition? A. I never noticed it, no.

2835

Q. Isn't it rather that they increased during such time? A. Yes.

Q. That is, when the rates were lowered more steerage passengers travelled? A. A great many more, but then there is a corresponding falling off later on, when the rates are increased, because all of those who intended to go over made up their minds quickly and go over at the lower rate.

Q. Later on when the rates are raised the number of steerage passengers fall off? A. Yes; really a less revenue to the company.

2836 Q. Now, you testified that during several years the freight rates have increased to some extent; I want to ask you whether during that time the various lines that you were thinking of which had those freight rates were conference lines or were not? A. I am thinking of the Mediterranean lines; they are all conference lines.

Q. That is, at that time, the rates were increased, the conference increased them; isn't that so? A. No, the conference did not increase them; it was on account of the large demand for cargo space that the steamship lines decided that they could not carry all 2837 the cargo that was offered any way and they had to get higher prices for it.

Q. But those lines that were carrying that cargo were Conference lines? A. Conference lines, yes.

Q. And so far as you know on all the lines which carried those cargoes the rates were more, were they not, the freight rate was more for all of those vessels of the Conference lines? A. Yes, they were charging more to the Mediterranean.

Q. During that period, during the last five years? A. That I don't know; my recollection goes back only to the beginning of this year.

Q. I thought you had testified to the period of the 2838 last five years, that is the reason I was asking you? A. I said it would depend upon the demand and supply. They have been increased right along in the last few years, especially this year.

Q. How did you acquaint yourself with the regulations of the foreign government regulating the rates to forty dollars; did you get the regulations? A. We received a list every month; all the steamship lines receive a list issued by the Italian Royal Commissioner of General Immigration. It is a printed list, an official list.

Q. Issued by the Government? A. Yes.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Is it not a fact to your knowledge at the present time thousands of steerage passengers on their way to the United States are turned back at the Russian frontier, no matter and without regard to the line, the steamship line, Hamburg or North German Lloyd or whatever line they may be billed or ticketed over to the United States? A. I have no knowledge. If they are afflicted with any contagious disease they are liable to be sent back from the frontier.

By Mr. Bullowa: 2840

Q. Isn't it true that every Russian subject that has not a proper passport is turned back at the Russian frontier? A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the Russian Government? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you don't know that these passengers whom you testified were turned back had a proper passport from the Russian Government? A. I do know that they had all the papers necessary to get through. I only referred to those.

Mr. Beers: The Cunard Line will produce papers on Tuesday, July 16th, 1912, at 11 o'clock A. M.

Mr. Dorr: If the defendants desire an adjournment on the 16th of July to the 25th of August, 1912, at which time the taking of testimony in behalf of the Government will be resumed with an adjournment thereafter to September 9th at Liverpool, at which time if the defendants desire, the witness Ismay may be produced for examination at that time and place instead of in New York. If on the examination of any witness produced by the defendants abroad the question of the obligation of the witness to answer or to produce papers or documents within his control should arise, the Government will insist on the production of that 2853

2854 witness in New York in order that the matter of the question of law may be presented to the Court. If the defendants do not desire to have the adjournments suggested, the Government will ask that the hearings be resumed on August 26, or on August 21, whichever the defendants desire and that the witness may be produced on September 3rd or prior thereto if the defendants should prefer it.

Mr. Burlingham: My recollection is that at one of the hearings held the last week or the preceding week, it was formally agreed and entered in the minutes that on or about the 10th of July an adjournment should be taken until 2855 September 4th or 5th. As to the production of Mr. Ismay as a witness, my understanding is not the same as that of the District Attorney but I will endeavor to arrange by cable for the taking of the deposition as early in September as possible. I offer in evidence the following letters of the White Star Line.

Liverpool to New York, dated January 18, 1908; New York to Liverpool, dated February 17, 1908; New York to Liverpool, dated February 21, 1908; Liverpool to New York, dated February 12, 1908; Liverpool to New York, dated February 15, 1908; Liverpool to New

Mr. Dorr: The Government offers in evidence letters received by A. E. Johnson & Company from the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Company produced by Mr. Bullowa. I shall ask the special examiner during the recess to arrange for the custody of the exhibits in such way as may afford access to counsel of both sides.

Mr. Bullowa: If the District Attorney insists, I will leave the trunk full of letters and other documents in the care of the examiner for examination by the District Attorney. 2857

2885 Mr. Guiler: I understand from Mr. Savage, representing Senator Spooner, that Mr. Dorr agreed with Senator Spooner to give the firm of Spooner & Cotton further reasonable time to produce such letters and translations of letters of the Hamburg American Line as agreed upon.

Mr. Burlingham states that he has arranged for the production of Mr. Ismay as a witness at Liverpool on September 2nd next.

Mr. Guiler: I would like to have placed on the record that the hearing of this case is adjourned until September 2nd at Liverpool for 2886 the purpose mentioned by Mr. Burlingham.

Mr. Burlingham: Of course, as stated before, we may wish to examine in England one or more witnesses with regard to foreign laws.

Mr. Guiler: Also that the examination of Mr. Ismay will undoubtedly entail a calling for various papers and documents at the same time as the examination is going on. 2887

Mr. Beers: I would like to enquire on the record as to the date of the next hearing which is to be had in New York after the testimony of Mr. Ismay has been taken in Liverpool.

Hearing adjourned to September 2nd, 1912, at Liverpool, England.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

In the Second Circuit.

3002

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, against HAMBURG - AMERIKANISCHE-PACKETFAHRT - ACTIEN - GESELLSCHAFT, and others, Defendants.	In Equity.

Before Charles Elliott Pickett, Esq., Special Examiner, Liverpool, England.

September 2nd, 1912. 3003

Appearances:

Henry A. Wise, Esq.; Henry A. Guiler, Esq.; John W. H. Crim, Esq., for Petitioner.

Burlingham, Montgomery & Beecher, by Norman B. Beecher, for the Anchor Line, Ltd., William Coverley, Nederlandsch-Amerikanesche Stoomvart Maatschappij, Adrian Gips, International Mercantile Marine Co., International Navigation Co., Ltd.; British & North Atlantic Steam Navigation Co., Ltd.; Societe Anonyme De Navigation Belge Americaine; Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., Philip A. S. Franklin.

3004

JOSEPH BRUCE ISMAY, sworn on behalf of the Petitioner, testified as follows:

Direct-examination by Mr. Guiler:

Q. What is your full name, Mr. Ismay? A. Joseph Bruce Ismay.

Mr. Beecher: Now, Mr. Guiler, as you know, the subpoena was about to be served upon Mr. Ismay when in New York, and we agreed with the District Attorney's Office, to produce him for examination at some subsequent period, and pursuant to that Mr. Ismay is now attending for examination. Had he appeared at New York pursuant to the subpoena, he would, of course, have been entitled to immunity under the Act regulating these matters. It is my understanding that the Government intends to extend to Mr. Ismay the same immunity as if he were testifying in New York, pursuant to subpoena.

Mr. Guiler: That is the understanding of the Government.

Mr. Beecher: And Mr. Ismay will give his testimony—

Mr. Guiler: Mr. Ismay will give his testimony as if subpoenaed under the powers of the United States Courts.

3006

Mr. Beecher: Exactly, and upon the understanding that the Government have pledged that the same immunity will be extended to him.

Mr. Guiler: That is agreed.

Mr. Guiler:

Q. Where is your residence, Mr. Ismay? A. Liverpool.

3007

Q. And what is your business? A. Steamship owner.

Q. How long have you been in business? A. Thirty-two years.

Q. For what lines have you been manager, or what lines have you represented during the time you have been in business? A. The White Star Line.

Q. The White Star Line at all times? A. Well, I was not manager for them all the time. I started at the bottom of the tree as office boy and worked my way up.

Q. And you are a thoroughly practical steamship man? A. I think I know something about it. 3008

Q. And have you had experience of steamship matters practically all your business career? A. Practically all my business career has been connected with steamships.

Q. Now, in addition to the White Star Line you have been manager for what is called the International Mercantile Marine? A. I am president of the International Mercantile Marine.

Q. And of what is that International Mercantile Marine composed, what lines? A. The Atlantic Transport Line, the White Star Line, American Line, the Pacific Dominion Line, the British North Atlantic, and Atlantic Transport Company. That is all, 3009 I think. I think I said the White Star Line.

Q. Now, the International Mercantile Marine is a member of various conferences of steamship owners, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. Now, will you mention the name of the steamship conferences of which the International Mercantile Marine is a member?

Mr. Guiler: It is understood that, under the stipulation made earlier in this case, an objection is reserved to each of the defendants, to 3010 any evidence of any agreement or conference, other than the agreement AA, as not within the issues, and irrelevant and incompetent.

A. I beg your pardon. I am afraid I could not tell you them all. There are a great many of them.

Q. Tell me just as nearly as you can? A. I do not know how to explain, what is the best way to put it. There is a Mediterranean Conference, the AA Agreement.

Q. Perhaps I could help you out by asking you about the various conferences.

3011 Mr. Beecher: May I suggest, we are going to get before you all the agreements which make us members of any conferences, and you have simply got these agreements and that gives you the answer.

Mr. Guiler: I wanted to get on the record for the purposes of the Court the various conferences.

Mr. Beecher: I take it, there is no objection to Mr. Cauty prompting Mr. Ismay?

Mr. Guiler: If it is understood that Mr. Ismay is testifying.

Mr. Ismay: I have no doubt about the policy but I do not know the details. Mr. Cauty has got the details at his fingers ends.

Q. (Mr. Crim.) Briefly, it is a member of the Continental Mediterranean, North Atlantic.

Q. (Mr. Guiler.) And the Chicago Complaint Committee? A. I never heard of that.

Q. Briefly, they are members of what Mr. Crim has mentioned? A. Certainly.

Q. What are they called? A. Could we not put it shortly by saying North Atlantic Conference, and Mediterranean Conferences.

3013

Q. I understand, Mr. Ismay, that the Atlantic Conference covers all steamship lines which run between the United States, Canada, and Great Britain? A. And also the Continent.

Q. And also the Continent? A. They are members of that Conference.

Q. They are members of the Continental Conference? A. And the North Atlantic Conference.

Q. And the Mediterranean Conference? A. Yes.

Q. That covers it pretty well? A. I think so.

Q. The various conferences which I have mentioned are split up, are they not, into smaller groups? A. Yes.

Q. What lines can you mention which compose the smaller groups? Are they British Lines in a smaller conference, British Lines themselves? A. No, I think not. There is a Scandinavian Conference.

Q. I understand that the British Lines in theory, had a conference, or rather the International Mercantile Marine, for instance, are given a certain percentage of the business of the various conferences, and they divide amongst various lines in the International Mercantile Marine the percentages which are given to it? A. That is so. A percentage is given to the International Mercantile Marine, and that is divided up amongst what you may call the subsidiary companies.

Q. The general theory of a conference is, is it not, to cover a certain territory, the business of a certain territory? A. Yes.

Q. That is the first theory, and to divide up among each of the lines who are members of that conference according to certain percentages, the profits of that business, the steerage business? A. They get a percentage, that percentage, of course, is based on their carryings.

Q. Based on their carryings. In what way do they first get that percentage? A. It is based on their carryings.

3016 Joseph Bruce Ismay

Q. For how many years back do you usually take? A. I think three.

Q. About three years. That is, they find out about how much business each of the lines has been getting in the last three years back, and they are given a percentage proportionate with that? A. Some get more and others get rather less.

Q. Unless they are able to force a larger percentage? A. It is generally a fight as to who can get most.

Q. Some really get more than they ought to? A. Yes.

3017 Q. Now, in carrying out this conference idea, there is a certain check, is there not, on lines doing as they wish in regard to the carrying of the steerage passengers, that is, increasing their carryings more than their percentage? A. Well, they can carry over that percentage if they wish to do so.

Q. And what occurs when they do carry over that percentage? A. They have to pool the excess.

Q. What do you mean by that? A. If they carry over a certain number they have to pay a certain sum of money into the pool for the excess number they carry.

Q. What is the usual amount they have to pay in?

3018 A. I think it is £4.

Q. That is called in a way, compensation money, is it not? A. Compensation to the lines which have under-carried their passengers.

Q. That is supposed, is it not, to compensate the other lines for the excess which that particular line has carried? A. The lines which have not carried their full number of passengers.

Q. Oh, yes. Is there any other purchase of that compensation money? A. Not that I am aware of.

Q. Is not that a check on lines carrying more than they ought to? A. No, I do not think so.

Q. That is, the compensation money is supposed to satisfy— A. The lines which are short carried.

Q. So that the line which is short carried does not lose anything, does it? A. It would lose.

Q. It would lose? A. Yes.

Q. You mean to say the compensation money would not make up for the loss of passengers which they failed to carry? A. No, it would not.

Q. Now, I understand, Mr. Ismay, that the territory covered by the various conferences is Mediterranean territory, the Continental territory, and again, the Italian business via Genoa, and the Scandinavian business? A. I think it is all specified in the agreements.

Q. Is that substantially correct, what I have said, that the business originating in these various territories—we will add to that the British business? A. And the Scandinavian.

Q. That is the business between those places and the United States and Canada, both eastbound and westbound? A. That is right.

Q. Now, I understand that all the territory is covered by conferences of the various steamship lines? A. I think it is, yes.

Q. And is and has been covered by conferences? A. Yes.

3021

Q. For how many years have conferences existed, if you can remember it? A. No, I do not; I could not answer that question.

Q. (Mr. Crim.) The first conference was the so-called N. D. L. V., was it not, Mr. Ismay, among the passenger lines on the Continent? A. Yes, certainly.

Q. That was the first important conference? A. So far as I am aware, it was the most important conference.

Q. It was between the North Deutscher Lloyd, Hamburg-American, Red Star and Holland-American? A. Yes.

3022 Joseph Bruce Ismay

Q. That was the first large and substantial conference that was able to control a substantial part of the business, was it not, from the Continent? A. Certainly, from the Continent.

Q. And following that conference and its operation for two or three years, the White Star Line became a party to a British Conference, is not that so? A. I could not say whether that was subsequent to the N. D. L. V. Was our first conference in 1880? I do not know when the N. D. L. V. started.

Q. (Mr. Guiler.) In 1891? A Well, you see, we 3023 had conferences in England before that among the British Lines.

Q. (Mr. Cra.) It seemed from a casual reading of the N. D. L. V., and the agreement of the British Lines, that the British Lines had been forced into a pool by the N. D. L. V.'s operations? A. Oh, no.

Q. That is not so? A. No, you see the British Lines at one time had a percentage of the Continental traffic from the N. D. L. V. lines.

Q. Fourteen per cent was apportioned to the British Lines? A. It varied. We used to have meetings and we used to get as large a percentage as we could of the Continental traffic. I think it was down to eight at one time—six.

3024 Q. These conferences you speak of, previous to the N. D. L. V. were local in their operations, that is the British Lines? A. I think it applied purely to the British Lines.

Q. And would you say those conferences ante-dated these Continental Conferences? A. I could not answer the question, but it is easily arrived at, easily found out, rather.

Q. (Mr. Guiler.) Now, in regard to the carriage of passengers from Continental ports, there are at the present time, very few Continentals carried through Genoa, are there not? A. Continentals through Genoa?

Q. Through the Italian ports we will say. There are very few carried through? A. Continentals?

Q. Yes? A. What you call the Italian?

Q. Yes? A. There are none, I should say.

Q. There are none carried through the Mediterranean ports? A. Practically none.

Q. And from what ports are they carried? A. Why usually from Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp and Rotterdam.

Q. The matter of carrying them through Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerpt and Rotterdam, is a matter of agreement in regard to Continental passengers? A. 3026
It is where those four lines run their steamers from. Hamburg is the port from which the Hamburg-American Line runs, Bremen is the port of the North German Lloyd, Antwerp of the Red Star Line and Rotterdam, of the Holland-American Line. They are really the four important lines that run to New York.

Q. As I said, is not that the reason why the Continentals are carried through those ports, because of an agreement entered into between the various Continental Lines, to the exclusion of the Italian ports? A. I don't think I quite follow the question.

Q. Perhaps I have not made myself clear? A. Not to me.

Q. I do not like to bother you about all these details? 3027
A. I am glad to answer any question I can.

Q. I understand there is a so-called Continental Conference? A. Certainly.

Q. Which covers Continentals? A. Continental passengers.

Q. And then there is a Mediterranean Conference covering Mediterranean passengers, Italian ports? A. Yes.

Q. Now the various Continentals under those agreements, under this pooling arrangement, are carried through Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp and Rotterdam? That is right? A. Yes.

3028 Q. And carried through there exclusively? A. Well, I am reminded, some go through Fiume and Trieste, by the Cunard Line and the Austro-Amerikana.

Q. Those are principally Hungarians are they not? A. Hungarians and Austrians.

Q. (Mr. Crim.) Is it a matter of agreement, Mr. Ismay, that those particular emigrants are apportioned by the Conference to the Austro Line and the Cunard Line, by Trieste and Fiume? A. No, I think not, I think it is just passengers they get.

Q. Those particular emigrants are allotted to those two lines from those ports? A. They would pool 3029 them, would they not?

Q. To the exclusion of the other steamship lines, those that travel through Trieste and Fiume are apportioned to the Cunard and Austrian Lines?

Q. (Mr. Guiler.) But taking the majority of the Continentals, they travel almost entirely through the four ports we have mentioned, Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp and Rotterdam? A. A very large majority of them.

Q. Now, the distance between some places in the Continental nations such as Austria and other places, and Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp and Rotterdam are greater, are they not, than the distances to the Medi-3030 terranean ports? A. I presume that is so.

Q. And if a Continental therefore is carried from Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp or Rotterdam he is travelling further than he would if he started by Genoa? A. It would depend where he started from.

Q. If he starts from the further points covered by the Continental agreement? A. He would be further away, yes.

Q. Supposing, Mr. Ismay, that every line—supposing there had been no conference and every line had been carrying up to its full capacity, or practically up to its full capacity, of steerage passengers, would there be any reason for bringing into existence the Conference? A. Yes, every reason, I think.

Q. What reason do you give for that? A. For regulating the business and working it on satisfactory lines.

Q. Is not the principal reason for making a conference that all lines are not getting their full capacity of bookings? They are not travelling up to their full capacity—is that not the object of the Conference? A. The object of the Conference?

Q. Yes? A. No, certainly not.

Q. That is not the object? A. No, certainly not. 3032

Q. May I show you a copy of a letter taken from the Holland-Amerika Line, dated January the 9th, 1900, directed to Mr. Ballin, by you, and I will ask you if you wrote that letter to Mr. Ballin at that time? A. (Witness perused the letter.) This is in regard to first-class passengers.

Q. I know that, but I was asking about the Conference in general. You wrote that letter, did you not? A. I presume so. You show me a copy and I presume I wrote it.

Mr. Beecher: I understand, Mr. Guiler, that your questions are, and that this sitting is directed to the agreement relating to the steerage traffic between the United States and Europe. Am I correct? 3033

Mr. Guiler: That is true to a certain extent.

Mr. Beecher: And does not relate to first-class or other passengers.

Mr. Guiler: Under the question of control of the situation by the steamship lines we have proceeded so far on the ground, in order to show that control, that we can take in in addition to the third-class passengers, both first and second-class passengers, and, therefore, the 3034 agreements on that ground are admissible, and anything relating to them is admissible, under the Act.

Mr. Beecher: I understand the position taken up by the defendants throughout, is that the inquiry should be confined to the steerage passengers to which the bill of the Government is addressed, and I suggest that, as, of course, no rulings can be made on the subject of evidence in this examination, if you do go outside the steerage inquiry, that you should make it entirely clear, as otherwise, Mr. Ismay and our-3035 selves will naturally assume that you are relating only to the steerage passengers.

Mr. Guiler: That is fair, yes.

Mr. Crim: That is fair.

Mr. Guiler: Then I offer that letter in evidence, Petitioner's Exhibit No. 704.

Q. (Mr. Crim.) I take it from your answer, Mr. Ismay, that it is immaterial to the members of the several conferences that the White Star Line is party to, whether their ships are carrying their full capacity, or whether they are carrying very much below their full capacity, as to the benefits of the pool? A. Do 3036 you mean to say that it is immaterial to us whether we are carrying our percentage or not?

Q. No, what I mean is this: the reasons for the pool are just as great when your vessels are filled with passengers as when they are not filled? A. Yes.

Q. And the purpose of the pool is to bring about a stability of rates? A. A stability of the whole general business.

Q. That is in effect a stability of rates? A. Yes.

Q. And to get as good a rate as possible? A. Yes, to get a fair rate.

Q. And again the purpose of the Conference is to prevent outside competition, is it not? A. The object of the Conference is to regulate your business. You can have a conference without a pool.

Q. And the regulation is manifested in these two directions is it not, the maintenance of the rates and the prevention of competition from outside lines? A. No, you have competition from outside lines. Although you have a pool and you have a conference you still have competition.

Q. Now, Mr. Ismay, let me refresh your recollection, by calling your attention and showing you what purports to be a report of the Royal Commission on Shipping Rings, page 219, Vol. 4. It is the testimony of Harold A. Sanderson and is as follows: "Q. What is their object and purpose? A. The object, I should say, was to bring about the mutual understanding between those in the trade with a view to maintaining the rates avoiding unnecessary competition, supplying the trade to the best advantage and avoiding clashings in sailings and otherwise working the trade advantageously for all concerned." Does that refresh your recollection in any respect with regard to the purposes of pools? A. That is Mr. Sanderson's view.

Q. Have you found it, in your experience, a correct or an incorrect view? A. I think it is very fairly correct.

3039

Q. (Mr. Guiler.) Take Agreement "A. A.," Mr. Ismay. In carrying out that agreement, what do you do, what do the lines you represent, usually do, to maintain their percentage in the pool. Just tell me, in your own way, what they do? Did they raise or did they lower rates? Did they attempt to maintain their position? A. Certainly we did. We always try to carry our full percentage.

Q. That is to say, you do not wish to run over your percentage any more than you can help? A. No, we wish every line to carry its percentage.

Q. Supposing you were plus in the pool, what would you do to bring yourself down to the proper percentage if you are carrying more than your percentage? A. Well, the other lines might reduce their rates or we might put our rates up.

Q. Well, if you put your rates up, would that not drive passengers away from your line? A. It would have that tendency, certainly.

Q. But if the other lines should raise their rates and you should put them up too, but not quite so high as the other lines, that would still attract passengers to you, would it not? A. If what?

Q. If you are lower than the other lines, say, if there was a general rise of from thirty-five to forty dollars, everybody advanced, and you did not advance quite so much, you would still get a greater number of passengers than the other lines, would you not? A. Yes.

Q. As I understand, Mr. Ismay, the steerage passengers go where they can get the lowest rates? A. Not exactly.

Q. As a general rule? A. Yes, I should think as a general rule.

Q. They are always on the lookout for the lowest rates? A. Not entirely. Take, for instance, the case of a man who is working in America, and making five dollars a day, it pays him to pay a higher rate on a fast ship than a low rate on a slow ship. For instance, supposing a ship is going to take ten days to cross the Atlantic, and another ship is going to take five days, that means that he has five working days in America, and assuming he is earning five dollars a day, it enables him to earn 25 dollars, therefore it pays him better to pay the higher rate for a fast ship and to travel by a fast ship rather than by paying a lower rate and traveling by a slow ship.

Q. That is correct as to emigrants to America? A. No, from this country to America. He does not get five dollars a day in this country.

Q. I was not talking of this country particularly. Perhaps I should have mentioned the Continent? A. You are talking of westbound passengers now, and it pays a man to pay a higher rate for a fast ship, because it gives him so many more working days in America, and instead of being on board and doing nothing he is able to work and earn money.

Q. You are assuming the case of a man going over there to do some work and staying there? A. Yes, the man who is going to stay there.

Q. You must remember that a large number of third-class passengers come over to this country for a month or two months? A. Yes.

Q. Has it not been your experience that where a low rate or a very low rate has been in effect more passengers have been attracted to that line, there have been more steerage passengers sailing by that line than if there were some higher rates charged by another company? A. No, I do not think so. Take the "Mauretania" or the "Lusitania," they are always full no matter what their rate is. You may have a low rated ship sailing the same day, and it would not get the passengers.

Q. Supposing you have a 22 dollar rate from Rotterdam, and another line has a 35 dollar rate, don't you think you would get your full capacity with the 22 dollar rate rather than the other line with the higher rate, or you might over-book? A. A good deal would depend on the ship.

Q. All conditions being equal the steerage passenger would take the lower rate ship rather than the one with the higher rate, would he not? A. If you take two ships equal in all respects and the rate for one is 22 dollars and the rate for the other is 35 dollars, naturally the man would go in the 22 dollar ship. My point is that supposing you had the "Lusitania" sailing, and a very inferior third-class ship sailing the same day, I think you would find the "Lusitania" would fill at a £7 rate and that the other ship would go with a very small number of passengers at a £5 rate.

Q. In all these ships the accomodation is no better than the other? A. Oh, yes, very much better.

3047 Q. They are? A. Yes.

Mr. Crim:

Q. In establishing the rate do you take into consideration the character of the vessel? A. That is so, its speed, accommodation and everything.

Mr. Guiler: In regard to the matter of the conference reports, how does the conference conduct its business in general? A. It has a secretary.

Q. Where is that secretary located? A. At Jena.

Q. Now reports are made regularly to him, are they not, by the various lines as to their carryings? A. Yes.

3048 Q. And matters of general information to the various lines are conducted through him, are they not? A. Yes, through him.

Q. And there is a branch of the Conference at Liverpool, is there not, with Mr. Smyth as secretary? A. Yes; he is secretary for the North Atlantic Passenger Conference.

Q. And there is another in New York with Lawson Sandford as secretary? A. He is the secretary.

Mr. Beecher: He is not now. I do not think any one has been appointed. I do not want to have it wrong on the record.

The Witness: He was secretary when I was in New York.

3049

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. He was secretary up to within a month or so? A. Yes.

Q. And during the period I am dealing with? A. Yes; that is so.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. Briefly, Mr. Ismay, what are Dr. Peters' duties as secretary at Jena? A. He makes up all the pools of the districts and he disseminates all the information among the various steamship owners. Everything goes through him.

3050

Q. And part of the information which he disseminates is as to the percentage of each line periodically? A. Yes; they come every week, every month—no, every week. He issues every week, a statement to each of the steamship companies which shows exactly the position of each line.

Q. And does he make requisition to the several lines for the penalties provided for in Agreement "AA"? A. The penalties?

Q. The payments, disbursements, from each line? A. Oh, yes.

Q. For instance, if a line has carried more than its quota under "A. A" they would pay that excess to him? A. I really do not know about this. I presume he tells you to send a cheque, the Cunard Co., or whatever company it may be.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Under Agreement "A. A," each line is required, is it not, to put up a certain guarantee, or promissory note for 1000 pounds for each one per cent of percentage it gets? A. I do not know the amount. I know we have to deposit a promissory note.

Q. That is a guarantee that it will live up to the agreement? A. Yes.

3052 Q. If it does not live up to the agreement, for instance, if it withdraws unauthorizedly before the termination, or refuses to pay compensation money, or fails to replenish its deposit, or if it starts or assists a new line in competition, that is competition with any of the contracting parties in 2 "AA," then a penalty may be imposed by the secretary on that line? A. Yes, I believe that is so.

Q. A penalty of not less than £250 for violation of it? A. I believe that is so.

Q. That is done by arbitration, is it not? A. Yes, I believe it is.

3053 Q. And if the secretary finds there has been a violation he may impose a penalty? A. No, I think not. It is done by arbitration.

Q. The penalty then is imposed after the arbitration is held? A. I presume that is so.

Q. Now, you were present, Mr. Ismay, at a meeting of the North Atlantic Conference on May the 25th, 1908, at which certain fighting ships were decided on, or a policy in regard to fighting ships against the Russian Asiatic, New York & Continental and the Volunteer Fleet was decided on? A. I think I was present. My name would be there if I was.

Q. Does that refresh your memory as to whether 3054 you were present or not? A. Yes, it does. I was there.

Q. Do you remember who it was who first suggested the matter of fighting steamers to fight the competition of the Volunteer Fleet, the New York Continental Lines and the Russian East Asiatic Co.? A. I cannot answer that.

Q. Was it a matter of general discussion? A. It was discussed at the meeting.

Q. How the conference would fight this competition which had recently come up? A. Yes, I think that is so.

Q. And Mr. Sanderson, Mr. Cauty and Mr. Curry were also present, were they not? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you decided what policy should be taken in regard to outside competition eastbound from New York? A. Yes, that is so, I think. It would be in the minutes, would it not?

Q. That was against the various lines which I have mentioned? A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. These are the minutes of that meeting, the correct minutes? A. Yes.

Q. There is no need to bother further about them. I offer these minutes of the meeting of May the 25th, 1908, held at the Savoy Hotel, London, England. 3056

Petitioner's Exhibit No. 705.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. And so far as you know, that is a correct transcript of what occurred at that meeting? A. Yes, I take it to be so.

Q. You do not doubt that it is correct? A. No, I do not.

Q. Mr. Ismay, you have read the Agreement "AA"? A. I have.

Q. And you were a party to the conference of steamship interests which brought about that agreement? A. I was, that is the February agreement. 3057

Q. And so far as you have been able, you have carried out the terms of that agreement to the letter? A. We have, so far as I know. If we have not, we ought to have done so.

Q. You are operating under the agreement today? A. Substantially we are. Of course, the agreement was slightly altered in 1911.

Q. And so far as you know all the other parties have carried out these terms, and where there have been irregularities, or supposed irregularities, they have been submitted to arbitration pursuant to the terms of that agreement? A. That is so.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Now you, personally Mr. Ismay, had correspondence with Mr. Peters on various occasions about various pool matters, had you not? A. I think I must have had. I do not remember. You have asked us for copies of all these, I understand, and that could be proved. Any correspondence I have had with Mr. Peters, or from him, I understand, will be put in.

Q. And you would take up the various pool questions with him, would you not? A. Yes, but that letter you have got there is not mine.

Q. Is this (produced) a copy of a letter you sent to Mr. Peters at one time? A. Yes, that is a copy. That is right.

Q. That was advising him with regard to the British percentage? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And he called on you?

I offer that letter in evidence, a letter dated the 25th of April, 1908, with annexed copy from Mr. Ismay, dated April, the 22nd, 1908, and the letter of Harold Sanderson to Peters, dated April 22nd, 1908.

3060

Petitioner's Exhibit No. 706.

The Witness: I am willing to answer every question I can. We will give you all the information we have at our disposal.

Mr. Crim: We are perfectly satisfied with it, Mr. Ismay.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. With regard to these fighting ships, the policy of meeting the competition of outside lines such as the Uranium Line, the North West Transport Co., and the New York & Continental, was made according to the minutes of May, the 25th, 1908, by a small committee appointed by the American Atlantic Conference selecting fighting steamers so-called, who were to sail on the same day or approximately the same day, and at practically the same rates as the steamers of the outside lines which I have mentioned? A. My recollection is that a committee was appointed in New York, and they selected the steamer which was to compete with the Uranium Steamship Co., and they selected the steamer which sailed nearest to it, to the competing steamer, but I have no recollection of the rate ever being below the rate of the Uranium Steamship Co.'s steamer.

3061

3062

Q. You will have a recollection that it was the same? A. That I could not say. I have no recollection of our rate ever being lower.

Q. You did not go into the details of that matter? A. No, I did not. Mr. Cauty can answer that.

Q. We will go into it with Mr. Cauty. I will not bother you with details. At any rate the rules laid down at the meeting of the 25th of March, 1908, at London were carried out in New York? A. Were carried out in New York.

By Mr. Beecher:

3063

Q. That is for a certain period? A. Yes, were carried out. They are not carried out now.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. For a certain period they were carried out? A. Yes.

Q. And again about a year after that the rules were revised? The Small Committee was revised and the same process went on? A. For a certain length of time the fighting ship was discontinued altogether.

3064 Joseph Bruce Ismay

Q. And Rule 22, By-law 22, was put into effect? By the way, what is that By-law 22 which is mentioned? A. That is what you have got I think. That is the fighting scheme. You really want a minute with No. 22 on it, do you not?

Mr. Guiler: Let me see that.

Mr. Beecher: We will have that along with all minutes.

Mr. Ismay: Why not put in that (indicating)? It is really Minute 22.

3065 By Mr. Guiler:

Q. You mean this meeting marked March 25th, 1908 is really Minute 22? A. Yes.

Mr. Beecher: And you can substitute the printed Minute 22 for it when you get it.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Another means of meeting the competition of the Volunteer Fleet, the Russo-East Asiatic and the New York Continental was by putting into effect Rule 9 as to agents in New York, was it not? A. I am not clear about it, and I do not know quite what was done about that.

3066 Q. Do you remember what Rule 9 was? A. No, I do not think I do. The New York Continental and the American Steamship Company—

Q. Rule 9 is in regard to agents not representing anything but Conference Lines. It is agreed, is it not, that Rule 9 is that agents of various lines shall not represent any other line, any other outside lines except Conference Lines, under a penalty of disqualification. Is that right? A. I am not quite certain how that is worded.

3067

Mr. Beecher: I would suggest that the Rule is already in evidence on one of the Government exhibits.

Mr. Guiler: I will have a look at it.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. So far as you know the provisions of Minute 22 were carried out with regard to the Russo-East Asiatic, the Volunteer fleet and the New York Continental Line? A. Yes.

Q. And your company particularly contributed to the compensation of the so-called fighting steamer? A. Yes, and I have no doubt we received compensation also.

3068

Q. The consequence of that situation was, in a word, to prevent other competition, was it not? A. Yes.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. There is Rule 9 of the Continental Conference (document produced)? A. (After examining.) Ours is differently worded to that.

Q. Now, according to Rule 9 agents were disqualified if they represent—agents in New York and various places in the United States were disqualified if they represented anything else but Conference Lines? A. If they booked for any other line but a Conference Line.

Q. Do you remember the case of Zotti of New York? A. I do not remember him. Did he buy a steamer?

Q. In general then that Rule 9 was enforced to meet the competition of the Volunteer Fleet, the Russo-East Asiatic and the New York & Continental Line? A. Not those lines specificaliy, I think it was put in there to meet the competition of any outside lines which might come along.

3070

By Mr. Crim:

Q. That was the purpose of it, was it not? A. After the pool with these three companies you have mentioned.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Any outside line? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember instances of any of your boats having been used at any time as fighting steamers? A. The White Star steamers have been used as fighting steamers.

3071

Mr. Beecher: The general effect of it is that it is not exactly legal, but it is not illegal.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Mr. Ismay, do your lines keep an account of the expenses and of the cost of service and actual cost of ship tonnage and so forth for every tonnage? A. We make up a voyage account for every voyage.

Q. You do, and it shows exactly what is charged to passengers, charged to freight, cargo, tonnage and so forth? A. Yes.

Q. And have you any financial statements for your lines, have you any financial statements of the conditions of your lines, coming out at the end of the year, annual reports? A. Oh, yes, certainly.

Q. Now could you let me have one or two reports of actual voyage expenses of the "Adriatic" and the "Baltic" and one or two of your boats of about 10,000 tons? A. I do not think we would like to divulge that. It is giving information to our competitors which we would not care that they should have.

Mr. Beecher: We do not want to have the statement of our accounts put in the records and probably if you want it just to look at for the purpose of examination or something of that sort—

Mr. Guiler: If you could let us have one or two for the purpose of examination I would be very much obliged.

Mr. Beecher: We will take that up along with other matters. That is something Mr. Ismay would not testify to.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. Will you state briefly for the record how those details are worked out, as to each voyage, how they are apportioned by their companies? A. I am afraid I could not tell you that. We simply take all the earnings and the expenses and take one from the other and arrive at the profit or loss the ship has made on that voyage.

3074

Q. How do you take into account the maintenance of that vessel? A. We get the return at the end of the voyage of the quantity of stores that have been consumed, first-class passengers, second-class passengers, and third-class passengers, and we have a return at the end of the voyage showing exactly what it has cost us for first-class passengers, second-class passengers and third-class passengers.

3075

Q. And your coal and supplies for the vessel are carried out in detail? A. We know what our coal costs us, our port charges—

Q. How much do you allow for depreciation of your vessel? A. Do you mean the International Mercantile Marine Company?

Q. Yes? A. Four per cent.

Q. Annually? A. Annually.

Q. Annually, and do you think it would amount to that over a period of say twenty years or twenty-five years? A. Well, the life of a steamer is not twenty or twenty-five years.

3076 Q. What is the life of a steamer, Mr. Ismay? A. The age depends on competition.

Q. Can you give us an estimate of what the life of your steamers has been in the competition in the past twenty years? A. No, it would be very difficult. You may build a ship and for a long time none of your competitors build any ships, therefore the life of that ship will be very much longer than if you build a ship and all your competitors come along and build new ships two years afterwards. That immediately depreciates her enormously.

3077 Q. You have operating in the carriage of third-class passengers vessels that have been in operation for years, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. Some of your vessels that are now in operation have been carrying passengers for fifteen or twenty years? A. Yes, and they are now carrying passengers at a heavy loss because they are out of date.

Q. That is, those particular vessels are carrying all classes of passengers at a loss? A. Yes, making a loss now.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. What vessel have you in mind, Mr. Ismay? A. I am giving away all my state secrets, you know.

3078 Mr. Beecher: I do not think we are going into a detailed examination of operations.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. You would not say your whole fleet is operating at a loss? A. Oh, no.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. You would not say it is operating at a profit? A. Well, the accounts speak for themselves. You have asked to have the accounts; I think you wanted one of our annual reports.

Mr. Guiler: I do.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. And the most profitable business you have is the passenger business, is it not, Mr. Ismay? A. Do you mean to say taking over the whole North Atlantic—oh, yes.

Q. Do you carry freight at a profit or a loss. Take a period of the past five years. Has your fleet been meeting its cost of transportation? A. What do you mean by that exactly?

Q. Have your earnings from your transportation of freight from America to the British Isles been sufficient to meet the cost of that transportation during the past five years? A. Do you mean to say if we were to debit the amount of coal that had to be consumed for carrying that freight across?

Q. The apportionment? A. I could not answer that question.

Q. Have you a system of bookkeeping that would indicate it? A. No. You see to arrive at that you would have to divide your coal consumption up between your cargo and your first-class passengers, second-class passengers, and third-class passengers. It would be a very difficult thing to get at. All your engine room stores would have to be divided up in the same way.

Q. You have no system of accounting to show you? A. No, so far as our fleet is concerned we simply debit the earnings with the cost of putting into ship and out of ship.

Q. In the transportation of passengers by rail our American Lines are able to estimate just about what it costs to transport a passenger between two given points. Have you any system on your steamship lines of estimating the cost of transporting a passenger? A. No.

3081

3082 Q. Or the mean cost of transporting a passenger for a period of years? A. No, we never have taken it out.

Mr. Beecher: Of course you have separate conveyances on your railroads for freight and passengers.

Mr. Crim: With the exception of two or three lines in America, all the lines carry passengers at a loss.

By Mr. Guiler:

3083 Q. Were you present, Mr. Ismay, at a meeting at which the Scandinavian Line was made a member of the pool, at a meeting of the conference? A. Have you got the minutes.

Q. I have not the minutes of that meeting, no. A. I am not sure whether I was there or not.

Mr. Beecher: Can we not put our answer, "I am not certain, the minutes will show," or something like that?

By Mr. Guiler:

3084 Q. The object of that agreement with the Scandinavian Line was to confine the Scandinavian Line to Scandinavian and Finish passengers alone, was it not? A. I think it was. They had never been in any other business.

Q. They were taking Continentals, I understood. I understood that was stated in the agreement? A. They were members of the conference before that, and then they came into the pool. They got a percentage of the Scandinavian business, or rather, to put it another way, they gave us a percentage of the Scandinavian business.

Q. They got as much as they could, a percentage of 2.70 eastbound and 3.50 westbound? A. Of course that is a subsidiary agreement altogether.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. Mr. Ismay, why is the disparity between the eastbound and the westbound percentage in that case? A. It would be based on their carryings, three to five years' carryings.

By Mr. Beecher:

Q. Three years' carryings prior to the time of fixing the percentage? A. That is right.

By Mr. Crim:

3086

Q. Ordinarily the eastbound and westbound rates are the same over a particular line? A. They are about the same.

Q. This was the experience of the conference, you would say, over a period of years? A. Approximately.

Q. Now are your eastbound and westbound freight rates the same? A. I am afraid I could not answer that. We have fine things going west, and provisions coming east.

Mr. Beecher: That is a pretty difficult question.

By Mr. Crim:

3087

Q. Do you in estimating your rates try to obtain substantially the same return on your voyage eastbound and westbound? A. We try to get as much as we can both ways.

Q. The rate on your westbound traffic is determined partly upon the amount of tonnage you will have on the return? A. No, that has nothing to do with it at all.

Q. Is it not an important factor? A. You mean to say our eastbound rates are covered by our westbound cargo?

Q. To a certain extent? A. No, I wish it was.

3088

Mr. Beecher: You have the idea of tramp steamers going to the west coast of Africa, or something of that sort, where they will fix a low rate in order to get there.

Mr. Ismay: We have to get there.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. I had that in mind, and wanted to ascertain if that held true to any extent in regard to the White Star Line? A. You see we have to operate our ships whether we have got cargo or not, on account of our 3089 passenger commitments.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Now I will show you, Mr. Ismay, a letter of December 9th, 1908, with cable annexed, and also the paper headed "Atlantic Conference" dated December 5th, 1908, purporting to be minutes of a meeting held at Cologne on December 3rd, 1908. Can you identify them as being the minutes of the meeting of that date? A. No, you see, I was not present at that meeting.

Q. Can you identify that as a White Star letter, with that annexed? A. Yes, a White Star letter.

Q. And that, substantially, those minutes are correct? A. I have no doubt they are perfectly correct, 3090 but I was not present at the meeting.

Mr. Guiler: I offer that in evidence.

Petitioner's Exhibit 707.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. In No. 12 of those minutes you will notice the matter of control stations on the frontier of Germany, German-Prussian frontier, and various other places along these frontiers, came up. Now the British lines have been bothered somewhat about their passengers getting across the frontier stations, have they not? A. Yes, I think they have.

3091

Q. In what way have they been troubled, and to whom did they attribute the trouble in getting across the line? A. I cannot give you all the details, Mr. Cauty will give you all that.

Q. I offer that in evidence anyway. In December, 1910, the various members of the conference had some trouble with one another as to whether Agreement "AA" should continue to exist or not, or November, 1910? A. Do you know what the circumstances were?

Q. I will show you a letter. See if that refreshes your recollection. (Letterhead to Mr. Ismay and examined.) A. Yes, I must have been present.

Q. And any troubles that arose at that time were—? A. They were patched up.

Q. Were settled up, so that the conference is just as strong as ever.

Mr. Crim: When was that?

Mr. Guiler: December 3rd, 1910.

Mr. Ismay: We renewed the agreement for five years, I think.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. What was the period of time in which the conference was suspended, Mr. Ismay, at that time? Do you recollect? A. I do not think it was suspended at all. Are you not getting mixed up between what you call the conference and the pool? They are two different things altogether.

3093

Q. I have been using them as synonymous terms. A. There has been a North Atlantic Conference for years and years and years.

Mr. Guiler: I offer in evidence the letter of December 3rd, 1910, with various minutes of conference meetings.

Mr. Ismay: That is the agenda—two agendas and minutes of the Italian Conference.

3094 Joseph Bruce Ismay

Petitioner's Exhibit 708.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. Mr. Ismay, I find in Petitioner's Exhibit 82, part of a sentence in which it says, "During the fight when conference was suspended." Can you tell me what is meant by that expression of conference being suspended?

Mr. Beecher: Who is that from?

Mr. Crim: It does not seem to be signed. It refers to some agent who has sold tickets at less 3095 than the conference price and when the conference was reorganized they tried to withdraw.

Q. That refers to the Mediterranean Conference. Do you remember what the occasion of that suspension was? A. No, I do not.

Q. I understand, Mr. Ismay, an attempt was made to enter into an agreement with the Hungarian Government and the Cunard Line, I do not know whether the White Star Line also, with regard to the Cunard Fiume service?

An objection is noted, pursuant to the stipulation on behalf of the defendant Cunard S. S.
3096 Co., upon the ground that this evidence is not within the issues, and is incompetent, and upon the further ground that it is hearsay.

A. We had no negotiations, as far as I remember, with the Hungarian Government; in fact I never had any.

Q. You never had any? A. No.

Q. Do you remember what the trouble was with the Hungarian Government? Do you remember that an attempt was made to pool the traffic, with the aid of the Hungarian Government, by the Cunard Line?

The objection is renewed.

A. No. All I know is that the Cunard Line made a contract with the Hungarian Government. What the terms of that contract are I do not know.

Q. May I see if this refreshes your recollection with regard to that. I will show you the letter of March 31st, 1909. (Minute No. 13 indicated to witness.) A. No, I do not remember that at all. (Petitioner's Exhibit 709 handed to witness.)

Q. At any rate, as appears by that letter, the Cunard Line was not able to make an agreement with the Hungarian Government with regard to that pooling contract? A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar, Mr. Ismay, with the matter of the allowances by railroads to the various steamship lines? A. I am not.

Mr. Crim: When was the first conference or pooling arrangement entered into with respect to third-class traffic between the British Isles and America? A. 5th February, 1880.

Q. Can you tell us what traffic it referred to in particular? A. No, I cannot. I do not remember the pool in 1880.

Q. Do you remember what lines were parties to that? A. I do not.

Q. Was it a failure? A. I really do not remember the pool at all. It is a good long time ago. It is thirty-two years ago.

Q. Can you tell us what factors brought about the pool, or conference, that is now in operation on third-class traffic? It appears from the record that there was a pooling agreement between certain German Lines from the Continent called the N. D. L. V.? A. That was amongst themselves.

Q. Yes. They, at a later date, apportioned a certain amount of their traffic to the British Isles? A. That is true.

3100 Q. Of which your line was one? A. Yes. But you are going back to the time when the White Star Line was a White Star Line Company of its own.

Q. At that time the White Star Line was an independent separate line incorporated under the laws of Great Britain? A. That is so.

Q. What was its capital stock? A. £750,000.

Q. It was engaged in operating ships from British ports and certain Continental ports? A. No, from Great Britain to the United States.

Q. Do you remember what other British lines were a party to this arrangement? There was an agree-3101 ment of July 11th, 1893? A. That is the Scandinavian business—Finnish business. That is not Continental business.

Q. Let us see the date of it? A. 11th July, 1893. There is no question of pooling here. It is simply an agreement with regard to rates.

Q. It is an agreement establishing rates on that particular business? A. That is right; on Scandinavian and Finnish business.

Q. Is that one of the first rate agreements, or agreements of any nature, towards regulating rates, that the White Star Line was a party to? A. No; I should say not.

3102 Q. It appears from the record, Mr. Ismay, that in 1892 the N. D. L. V. was organized, and it operated in that same territory, did it not? They probably drove a large part of the traffic through the British Isles? A. No; they drove it through Hamburg. At that time we objected to the Continental lines taking the Scandinavian business, and we had a war of rates over it. I think we put our rate down to £2.

Q. Was that rate war previous to that agreement of July, 1893? Do you recall any arrangement with regard to that particular traffic with regard to that? A. No, I do not; but I have no doubt there was one. I think I am right in saying that, but that we could have turned up for you and let us know.

Q. September, 1895, Exhibit X317. That was the first agreement in which all of the lines which were then operating were parties, was it not? A. Yes. This agreement was the result of the fight, because it says here the Continental lines, including the Scandinavian and Hansa lines, agree to withdraw altogether from the Scandinavian, Finnish and British trade business.

Q. The N. D. L. V. according to that agreement, guaranteed the British lines 6 per cent of the Continental business? A. That is so, which the British lines agree to accept; 6 per cent per annum. 3104

Q. There was a well-established clearinghouse for the pool in Liverpool? A. Yes, there must have been.

Q. If you will look it will refresh your recollection? A. Yes, there must have been.

Q. Another consideration of that arrangement was that the British lines should withdraw from the Italian business? A. I do not see that in this agreement.

Q. I think it is in it somewhere? A. Here it is (indicating), "That the British lines, with the exception of the Anchor Line, withdraw from the Italian west-bound business."

Q. Had the British lines been engaged in the Italian business previous to that time? A. Well, I take it they must have been otherwise I think they would not have had that clause in. 3105

Q. How did the White Star Line get in that business? Did it have sailings from the Mediterranean? A. No, I do not think we ever carried any Italian passengers in the White Star Line. I will tell you the reason why that was put in. If my memory serves me, during the time of the fight with the Continental line we arranged with the Cunard Line to bring passengers from Italy to Liverpool in three little steamers of theirs and we transhipped them in Liver-3106 pool here. We brought the Italians to Liverpool by the Cunard boats from the Mediterranean.

Q. Do you observe from that agreement that the British lines were apportioned six per cent of the Continental traffic? A. Yes.

Q. Now give me the agreement of September 10th, 1895? A. This is it (indicating). That is British business.

Q. Now, that one of September 10th, 1895, was an agreement between the British lines apportioning among themselves six per cent of the Continental traffic? A. No, I think you mean the agreement of 3107 27th June, 1896. This is the one which is dividing up the six per cent between the British lines. That is the one you refer to.

Q. Yes? A. That is the one of the 27th June, 1896—no, it is not dated at all. This agreement is made between the British lines dividing up the six per cent of the Continental traffic which the Continental lines gave.

Q. Are you able to tell me whether the British lines at that time had an agreement with regard to British business; immigrants from Great Britain? A. Yes, they had. Here it is (indicating). That was simply a rate agreement, not a pooling agreement.

3108 Q. The next agreement that I want to call your attention to—? A. Exhibit 319. You have had that one. That is the rate agreement for British business. This is the agreement for the Scandinavian-Finnish business.

Q. The next agreement that I want to call your attention to is the agreement between the British lines and the Thingvalla Line with regard to Scandinavian and Finnish passenger business. Do you recall what became of the Thingvalla Line? A. I think it is now the Scandinavian-American Line.

Q. Absorbed by that line? A. I think the Scandinavian-American Line is a continuation of the old Thingvalla Line.

Q. What has become of the so-called Beaver Line that was then in existence, Mr. Ismay? A. The Beaver Line was bought by Elder, Dempster & Co. I think first, and was afterwards sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Q. That is the line that the Canadian Pacific Railway is now operating? A. Yes. Of course they have added a lot of new tonnage to it, but that was the first time the Canadian Pacific Railway came into the steamship trade.

Q. There was an agreement under date of June 15th, 1898. That is another agreement between the British Lines and the members of the N. D. L. V.? A. That is right.

Q. There is a re-adjustment? A. Of the percentage, I think.

Q. Of the whole of the arrangement of 1892? A. It is really a continuation of the old agreement. It is a continuation of this 6 per cent.

Q. I observe here the Scanda. and Hansa Lines? A. Those are two lines which were started by the Hamburg-American Packet Company at the time of the fight to take passengers direct from Norway and Sweden to New York.

3111

Q. This agreement then was to bring about peace after that old agreement of 1892 had fallen through? A. "This agreement, subject to the operation of Clauses 3 and 4, shall operate for three years." This is a continuation of the 1895 agreement. This agreement was made to run to the 1st March, 1900, subject to three months' notice.

Q. You will observe, under date June 15th, 1898, the British lines entered into a new agreement with the Thingvalla Line? A. What year?

3112 Joseph Bruce Ismay

Q. 1898? A. The Thingvalla Line is not in this. This is an agreement for Continental business.

Q. Well, in any event it was March 15th, 1902, that the first arrangement was made with respect to the first cabin business east and westbound? (Agreement produced to witness.) That was the first agreement with respect to the first-class business? A. There must be one previous to this, I think.

Q. How long was the one of 1896 in existence? Do you recall how it became inoperative? The agreement of March 15th, 1902, was apparently amended on September 5th, 1902? (Agreement H.) A. That 3113 is an agreement on the tickets. That is not a rate agreement.

Q. Was that the beginning of the practice of interchanging tickets? A. Yes.

Q. Is that practice still in effect? A. Yes.

Q. In substantially the same form as indicated there; in the same manner as indicated there? A. The Cunard Company have since joined the Agreement H.

Q. Now, L. I call your attention to the agreement there with respect to the Italian and Oriental business? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall the circumstances that brought 3114 about that agreement between the so-called N. D. L. V Lines, the French and American Lines? A. What is the date of that.

Q. January 1st, 1904? A. No, I cannot remember that the French and American lines were interested in this business.

Q. Then it appears until this time, or immediately previous to this arrangement, the French-American Line had not been parties to a conference with respect to this traffic? A. The French and American Lines; not the French-American Line.

Q. This agreement had for its purpose the regulation of that competition? A. That is so.

Q. Now, I show you Agreement M. Do you recollect operating under that agreement? A. Yes, I remember operating under that agreement.

Q. Agreement of February the 26th, 1904. What was the purpose of that agreement, Mr. Ismay? A. I do not remember this at all.

Q. It appears that certain lines were contributing to establish a direct service to Scandinavian ports? A. This apparently was a service of Continental lines against the Cunard Co. The Cunard Co. established a service from Fiume in the Mediterranean, and this was a retaliatory measure on the part of the Continental lines to the action of the Cunard Line in Fiume, but only about three steamers were run under this agreement. 3116

Q. This agreement was not in operation but for a short time? A. That is right.

Q. Now Agreement J? A. That is an agreement of the C. P. R. and the N. D. L. V.

Q. When was it that the Canadian Pacific Co. began the steamship business? A. I do not know the year, but it was when they purchased the old Beaver Line ships.

Q. And can you tell me whether that agreement is still in effect or not with regard to the continental business? A. Yes, I believe it is, and it expires at the end of this year, I think. It runs from year to year. 3117

Q. Is it your understanding that since that agreement has been in existence the Canadian Pacific Co. has stayed out of the continental traffic to the extent of the agreement? A. Yes.

Q. They have operated under the terms of that agreement? A. Yes. They are substantially working under this agreement so far as I know.

Q. Now Agreement G, March the 9th, 1904? A. Yes, I have it here.

Q. Is that agreement still in effect? A. I have no knowledge of this contract because it is the N. D. L. V., and the Campagnie Generale Transatlantique.

Q. You know there is some arrangement with respect to that line? A. Yes, I understand there is.

Q. Now L., January the 1st, 1905. Is that agreement in effect? A. I really cannot speak in regard to that. We are not parties to it. They have an agreement and possibly it has been amended, but what it is I do not know.

Q. Now, January the 14th, 1905? A. Yes, I have got that one. That is an agreement between the British lines for third-class passengers.

Q. How long was that agreement in operation? A. That agreement has been in operation with certain amendments with regard to rates with possible intervals until the present day. It is determinable in three years. It was made for three years and subject thereafter to six months' notice.

Q. Is it your opinion that it is in effect today or substantially the same agreement is in effect today? A. With certain amendments with regard to the rates it is practically in effect today, but the rates have been amended.

Q. Now, there was on January the 21st, 1905, a modus of rates? A. Yes, the Scandinavian third-class business, and agreement for the Scandinavian business.

Q. Is that agreement in operation? A. Yes, I believe it is, subject to amendment, because other large steamers have come out which are not rated here.

Q. Now, then, January the 21st, 1905? A. The same answer would apply to that.

Q. The British and Scandinavian Lines gave notice to agents with regard to Finnish business, and was that notice pursuant to some agreement or arrangement with regard to the Finnish business? A. Well, the Scandinavian agreement is always made first, and then the Finnish agreement goes with it.

Q. And this notice is pursuant to the same agreement? A. Having made the Scandinavian agreement we send that notice out.

Q. Now, Agreement Z. Have you Agreement Z before you, Mr. Ismay? A. Yes.

Q. Is that arrangement in effect today? A. Still in force, but the percentage is altered.

Q. Do these three lines, the Allan, the Dominion and Donaldson's receive more or less? A. The Allan and Donaldson's both get more. I am satisfied that the Allan get more and Donaldson's get a little bit more. The Dominion has not been increased. The Allan and Donaldson's lines have got an increased percentage.

Q. Now W? A. That is an agreement with regard to second-class passengers.

Q. Is that agreement in effect today? A. Yes, I should say it is in effect today, but the rates have been altered.

Q. With the exception of the alteration in rates it is in effect today? A. Yes, with the exception of the alteration in rates it is in effect today.

Q. Now V? A. Yes, I have V.

Q. Is V in effect today? A. Yes, with the same exceptions. Alterations have been made in the rates, and other ships have been included in the agreement.

Q. In these agreements with respect to first and second-class rates, who established the rates, Mr. Ismay? A. It was established at a meeting of the representatives of the various steamship companies, and a very difficult job it is too.

Q. Now BB? A. I have it here.

Q. Is that in effect today? A. Yes, it is in effect today with certain amendments.

3121

3123

3124 Q. Do you recall briefly what the amendments are? A. I do not know. I have never been present, but I am told that we doubled the percentage.

Q. In other respects it is in effect today? A. Yes, we doubled the percentage to the Russian East Asiatic Co., east and west, otherwise it is the same.

Q. February the 20th, 1908, is that agreement in effect? A. Yes, with the amendments and alterations in the rates.

Q. And those amendments refer to the increase or decrease in the rates, do they? A. I fancy practically entirely.

3125 Q. Now, May the 23rd, 1908? That is British business third-class? A. The agreement I have here is the 20th of February 1908—yes, here it is.

Q. Is that agreement in effect today? A. Yes, I do not know whether the rates have been modified here again or not—yes, the agreement is in effect with probably some change in the rates.

Q. Now, there is another agreement of the same date with the Canadian Northern Steamship Co.? A. That is August the 15th, 1910, an agreement with the Canadian Northern Steamship Co.

Q. In any event there is an agreement between the Conference lines and the Canadian Northern Steam-3126 ship Co. with regard to the rates of the third-class passengers? A. Yes, there is.

Q. Well, that is all I want if you say there is an agreement? A. It is referred to here "The Royal Line became parties to an agreement for British third-class business as revised," etc. That has since been revised, that agreement.

Q. Do you recall to what extent it has been revised? A. I think the rates have been increased.

Q. Now, Special Agreement B., October the 1st, 1908? A. Yes, that is the one.

Q. Is that agreement in effect today? A. Yes, that agreement is running with certain amendments.

Q. Do you recall what those amendments are? A. The Fabre Line are not parties to it now.

Q. What has become of the Fabre Line? A. They are still running.

Q. Are they in active competition or maintaining the same rates without clearing through the pool? A They have reduced their rates. They are conductin, an active competition at the present moment.

Q. Now then, February the 8th, 1909, that is a special agreement between the Italian lines etc. Is 3128 that agreement in effect today? A. Yes, with certain amendments again.

Q. Now, agreement of June the 1st, 1909? Is this Mediterranean agreement now in effect? A. Yes, with certain alterations in the percentage. The Fabre Line has come out, and the percentages have been re-adjusted. The Italian lines get a bigger percentage.

Q. This agreement is marked "Mediterranean Steerage Passage Agreement, February 8th, 1909." Now, August the 15th, 1910, that is a revision of the agreement of May the 23rd, 1908? A. Yes, that is quite possible.

Q. That agreement is in effect today, I presume? A. 3129
It is the same one as you referred to before, and which was revised in 1910, and is still going on with further additions.

Q. Now, Mr. Ismay, when did the White Star Line become an integral part of the so-called International Mercantile Marine? A. In 1902, I think it was.

Q. Was the White Star Line sold for cash, or was there an exchange of stock when that consolidation was brought about? A. They got some cash and a certain amount of preference and ordinary shares in the International Mercantile Marine Co.

3130 Q. What is Mr. Smith's identification? A. He is Secretary of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference in Liverpool.

Q. And what are his duties here? A. He acts as the medium between all the British lines and the Scandinavian and the American lines. All communications pass between him. He is secretary for the British lines, and not for the Continental lines.

Q. During the period since the so-called N. D. L. V. was organized, there have been times when the steamship lines have been absolutely separate and independent and in active competition, have there not? A.

3131 Yes.

Q. And during those periods when the pools or conferences were suspended what was the result upon the traffic and rates? A. When we were fighting we had the ridiculously low rate of £2.

Q. Rates have been as low as £2? A. I think £2 is the lowest rate we ever quoted, and gave 15 shillings' commission, so that the ship got a net rate of 25 shillings.

Q. Would you say that but for the conferences and pools now in existence the rates would be much less? Would you be fighting each other? A. I think we have more sense now than we had a few years ago. I 3132 do not think we should be fighting now.

Q. You have no objection to Mr. Cauty giving us any information he can? A. Absolutely none. Mr. Cauty is entirely at your disposal and you will get far more information from him than I have been able to give.

Q. He is the detail man in your office, is he not? A. He is the man who knows more about the passenger business and the working and the ramifications of it than anybody in the office.

Q. You have general knowledge of your office and you rely upon Mr. Cauty to work out the details? A. I do.

3133

Q. And you came here this morning in obedience to a subpoena served upon you? A. I did.

Q. I cannot think of anything further I want to ask you, Mr. Ismay, and my associate Mr. Guiler tells me that he does not at the moment think of anything, and if anything vital does come to our minds we will reserve the right to ask you informally? A. All right, sir.

Q. And I want to express to you my appreciation and the appreciation of the Government for the candour with which you have given us this information? A. Thank you very much.

Mr. Guiler: I think we ought to put on the record the request for papers having been made. (To Mr. Beecher): Have you got them?

Mr. Beecher: I have not. You can get them at any time.

(Adjournment until Wednesday, September 4th, at 10 o'clock, at the North Western Hotel.)

Second Day

3135

North-Western Hotel, Liverpool, England.

Wednesday, September 4th, 1912.

Appearances as before.

ARTHUR BELCHER CAUTY, sworn on behalf of the Petitioners testified as follows:

Note:—It is hereby stipulated for the purpose of examining Mr. Cauty that he shall receive all the privileges and immunities of the so-called Sherman Anti-Trust Act to regulate

3136 Arthur Belcher Cauty

Conferences as if he had been placed under subpoena in the United States, and had appeared in pursuance thereof and had testified under oath in the Southern District of New York.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. What is your full name, Mr. Cauty? A. Arthur Belcher Cauty.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Cauty? A. At Wallasey—say Liverpool. Wallasey is a suburb of Liverpool.

3137 Q. You are in the steamship business? A. I am.

Q. In what lines have you been during your experience? A. I was with the Inman Line, I joined the Inman Line in 1886, which subsequently became the American Line. I joined the White Star Line in 1889.

Q. And you have been with the White Star Line ever since? A. Yes.

Q. And also with the International Mercantile Marine since it started? A. I have.

Q. How long has the International Mercantile Marine been going on? A. Since 1902, I think.

Q. Roughly speaking, you have been in the steam-

3138 ship business for the greater part of your life? A. All my business life, yes.

Q. And you are a thoroughly practical steamship man? A. I think I know something about it.

Q. Now in your experience as a steamship man, you have taken part in various conferences, so-called conferences, made both here and elsewhere, have you not? A. I have.

Q. In general where have you held those meetings? A. At a great many places; Liverpool, London, Paris, Brussels, Cologne.

Q. Have you ever attended any of the meetings in New York? A. No.

Q. You have not attended those conference meetings? A. No, I have never attended a conference meeting in New York.

Q. There is, I understand, a conference called the Atlantic Conference at New York, is there not? A. It is called the New York Conference, the Atlantic Conference, yes.

Q. And the agent up to a few months ago was Mr. Sandford, the Secretary of the conference? A. Yes, he left in April I think.

Q. That is a branch, as I understand it, of the Atlantic Conference, or so-called North Atlantic Conference? A. Yes. 3140

Q. Will you state, Mr. Cauty, what difference and distinction there is between the conference and the pool? A. The conference is a meeting of the steamship interests either in this country or on the other side for the conduct of the business in accordance with the conditions that were then in existence.

Q. And what is the pool with reference to the conference? A. Well, a pool is a specific condition that is agreed between steamship managers, and which the conference will then carry out. For instance every agreement has more or less different conditions, and when an agreement is made among the steamship companies the conference carries out that agreement or 3141 acts in conformity with it.

Q. A pool you would say is merely an agreement which the conference has drawn up previously? A. Yes.

Q. And which the conference carries out? A. Yes, which the conference carries out.

Q. In general can you tell us what the business of the conference is? A. In general it is to attend to the working of such agreements as may be in force, to act as a medium of communication between the lines and to do whatever may be necessary to assist in the proper carrying out of the business in the general interest.

3142 Arthur Belcher Cauty

Q. In general then, it is to carry out any of the agreements which have been previously made, and to disseminate information in regard to the agreements and matters of general pool interest? A. Yes.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. Mr. Cauty, a conference is a more or less informal association of steamship interests which take up matters of general interest to the business? A. Yes.

Q. And the pool is a formal obligation entered into, usually by a specific agreement? A. I quite agree, I 3143 quite agree.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. And taking Mr. Peters of Jena, it is his business, is it not, to advise members of the conference who are also members of the various agreements which have been drawn up with the conference, of any outside competition as soon as it arises and in regard to whether such competition is serious or not? Is that right? A. No, I do not think that is quite correct.

Q. Will you explain then? A. Mr. Peters merely acts as secretary and medium between the lines. We 3144 should expect to get far more reliable information on a question of that kind from the particular company who was most affected by such competition.

Q. The principal company most affected by the competition advises Mr. Peters in regard to it, and Mr. Peters by means of circular letters advises the various members of the conference, is that so? A. Yes. He would pass on word for word the letter he receives. He would not change it into his own words. He merely acts as a medium for the dissemination of that information.

Q. And the reason for that is that the various members of the conference may in joint session or otherwise take such action as they deem fit in regard to meeting such competition? A. Yes, that is quite right.

Q. Now I show you, for instance, Petitioner's Exhibit No. 705, which is the minutes of the meeting held at the Savoy Hotel, London, on May the 25th, 1908, and ask you if these are the minutes of a meeting held to meet the competition of the North West Transport Company, the Russian Volunteer Fleet, and the Russian East Asiatic Company?

Mr. Beecher: I object to the form of the question, Mr. Guiler. That is simply the way you characterize a copy of the minutes of that meeting. If you want to ask what that meeting was held for, it was a general meeting at which that subject among others was discussed.

Mr. Guiler: Is that any different from what I said?

The Witness: You say the meeting was held to consider this competition. Of course, that was one of the questions considered.

By Mr. Guiler:

3147

Q. Will you state, Mr. Cauty, what was the object of that meeting? A. I cannot say without I see the minutes. It was so long ago. That was the first one. (Witness looked at the minutes). Minute 2 was to deal with the question of compensation of the White Star Line, the passengers they booked from Pretoria, April the 14th.

Q. That was part of the competition measure? A. Minute No. 5 however, refers to the form of the promissory note to be given under the pool which has nothing whatever to do with competition.

3148 Q. The chief object of that meeting was to take up the question, the particular question, of the competition of the North West Transport Company and the various lines mentioned, is that so? A. I should say it was one of the questions, yes. We distinctly admit that. There are altogether a number of minutes which do not deal with the question of competition at all.

Q. You attended that meetieng did you not, Mr. Cauty? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you remember who brought up the question of the use of fighting ships to meet the competition of 3149 the Volunteer Fleet, the Russian East Asiatic Co. and the New York Continental Lines in the east bound business? A. I cannot remember who originated the suggestion. The matter was one of general discussion. Perhaps we were a little unfortunate in the term we used "fighting ships," because after all they have never taken on the character of fighting ships.

Q. That was the common name for them in the correspondence? A. I agree. I do not think we contemplated having to justify the term.

Mr. Crim: They never carried any guns.

The Witness: No, and they never thrust back. We were supposed to have given something back, and in 3150 the conduct of these fighting ships we have not taken up an aggressive attitude which the term would suggest was intended when that minute was passed.

Q. The way you carried it out was according to the minutes No. 22 of this meeting—for instance you had a provision here for compensation of the various steamers which were to sail about the same day, or approximately the same day, as the steamers of the opposing lines, did you not? A. Quite true.

Q. Will you explain to me how that compensation was worked out, that is in regard to the question of compensation that is here stated, compensation was not to be based on more than 30 dollars rate and was not to be more than 12 dollars below that rate. Can you explain to me what was the idea there? A. I can. In the first instance when this subject was discussed and the question of compensation was agreed to, it was felt that because this outside company was running ships at a very much lower rate than the conference lines—and on that account the conference felt compelled to have at least one ship sailing the same day at about the same rate—the line to whom that ship belonged should not be the sole sufferer through having to reduce its rate to the level of this outside competition, and the other lines said "Well, we will agree that when a company in accordance with this scheme has a steamer which is appointed to sail under this clause as a competing steamer and in consequence has to reduce its rate, the conference will reimburse that line," but we did not want to leave the amount indefinite, and it was the subject of much discussion as to what the normal rate should be considered, as for instance, while we were discussing this agreement the normal rates might have been 30, 32 or 33 dollars, in the course of three or four months' time this normal rate might have varied, and we could not forsee it, and to protect ourselves in respect of the amount of compensation we would have to pay, it was agreed that we should look on 30 dollars as the normal rate.

3153

Q. That is a rate on which you would start to pay compensation? A. Yes.

Q. Is not that the condition? A. That a line could not say our rate was 35 dollars, because it was laid down that 30 dollars was to be the rate on which the compensation was to be calculated.

Q. Worked out in this way that supposing you had a rate of 35 dollars and reduced that rate 10 dollars you would only get five dollars compensation. If you had a 30 dollars rate, and you reduced it ten dollars 3154 you would get ten dollars? A. Which was reducing 30 dollars under reasonable consequence then the compensation was fixed at a maximum of 12 dollars, having in mind that we did not think in working out that scheme it would ever be necessary to go lower than 18 dollars.

Q. Were you ever required to go below eighteen dollars in this competition? A. No, I do not think we have ever been near as low. Our usual rate, speaking off the book, has been somewhere between twenty-one and twenty-three dollars.

3155 Q. At times—as I remember I have a thing in mind just now. You had a rate of twenty-two dollars with two dollars commission? A. We may have had, but I do not think such a low rate has run for any length of time.

Q. Special sailings? A. Within the last few months it has been twenty-five dollars less two dollars—twenty-three dollars. I know we have been lower than that, but not much. The opposition have always been down to a nineteen dollar rate. They have always been below us.

Q. You brought their rate down to yours. Did not you? A. No, we have very seldom been as low as that. We have during certain periods been as low.

3156 Q. When I say you, I refer not only to your line? A. I am speaking of the conference. We certainly have charged an equal net rate to the opposition some years for certain periods but I think if you were to look over the whole periods during which these fighting steamers have been in operation you would find, more often than not, our rate has been a shade higher.

Q. According to this minute which we shall term, and which is termed twenty-two, this business of the opposition steamers was to be carried out by the New York Conference on the eastbound business? A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever have the same opposition steamers on the westbound business? A. Never.

3157

Q. It was carried out by the so-called small committee in New York, was not it? A. Yes.

Q. The small committee at New York Conference?

Mr. Beecher: Up to a certain period.

Mr. Guiler: We are getting a general statement.

Mr. Beecher: You make it too general. You ought to put some limit to make it clear.

The Witness: We might say it was carried out in the first part of the period by the New York committee, subsequently by a committee appointed on this side.

3158

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. But a committee on this side advised the New York committee what they should do? A. No, sir.

Q. The committee on this side communicate with the line whose steamer is appointed the competing steamer? A. Yes.

Q. Roughly speaking the New York Act was 1908-9—part of 1908-9? A. You have got it in the exhibits. I forget the date, but I think you are correct.

Q. It was appointed some time in 1908, and was dropped for a while, and was revived September, 1909? A. For a time that minute was entirely suspended.

Q. So I understand. Under this minute 22, however you had power—the conference had power if it wished to sail the competing vessel or steamer at a lower rate, could it not, than the opposition—any other steamer? A. Yes, it was quite correct, but it was never exercised.

Q. Under minute 22, Mr. Cauty, you could give an extra commission, that is give a higher commission than two dollars to the agent. Could you not? A. I do not think we could. May I look at that?

Q. Certainly. (Petitioner's Exhibit, Minute 22, handed to witness.) A. That has been a very disputed point. No, sir.

3160 Q. And you remember that there was at one time a direction by Mr. Peters to Secretary Sandford in New York, giving him power to allow an extra commission if he wished, if it was necessary to meet the opposition? A. I can say, yes. I think that was agreed to by subsequent correspondence, it was not covered in the original agreement. It is probably in those papers which I sent to you yesterday.

Q. I will show you Peter's circular letter 585 (document shown to the witness?) A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. That is circular letter 585, and that refreshes your 3161 memory, does not it? A. Yes.

Q. So that you can say that the committee in New York were allowed if they wished to give a higher commission than the ordinary commission of two dollars to agents for securing business against the opposition steamers? A. Yes, during a certain period and that limited—a certain limited period.

Q. I do not mean to say it was general but just once in a way? A. It is not being done now.

Q. The ordinary way of doing that was not to increase the commission of two dollars but to reduce the rate? A. That is quite correct. We had to face the position that the opposition steamers were quoting 3162 large commissions, trying to buy their business in that way from the agents. The conference preferred to try and quote a rate which would give us much about the same net rate, but would give the passenger the proper rate that such net rate would represent with the ordinary commission to the agent.

Q. That is to say, as near as possible to the rate of the competing steamer? A. Yes, but we did not want to give these excessive agents' commissions, we preferred to make our gross rate less than our usual rate, the net rate being approximate to that of the opposition people. The opposition were quoting very high commission we had reason to believe.

Q. In paying the compensation provided for by Section 1 of Minute 22 each one of the lines contributed a certain proportion in accordance with its proportion under Agreement AA? A. Quite so.

Q. The proportion of the loss to the line? A. What we call our percentages under Agreement AA.

Q. Will you explain that to me more fully? A. The Agreement AA gives each line that is party to that agreement a certain percentage in the East Asiatic business. In addition to the lines which were party to Agreement AA, one or two other lines agreed to share in this compensation, and Secretary Peters 3164 worked out the exact percentage that each line would have to pay, based upon their fixed percentages under this agreement and the subsidiary agreement.

Q. So that supposing there was a reduction of six dollars in the rate of the Russian East Asiatic Line, and the compensation was 2,000 dollars to the line—if the difference by reduction of rate was 2,000 dollars—the various lines in the conference made that up to that particular line? A. And that line itself helped to make it up. It bore its own shares you understand.

Q. Yes? A. The percentages were brought out and they would have written against their name their own share of this 2,000 dollars.

Q. Now, what was Rule 9 of the Conference regula- 3165 tions for agents? A. In America?

Q. Yes? A. It prohibited agents booking for other than conference lines.

Q. That rule was enforced in the United States, was it not, as a fighting measure? A. No, sir. I do not think it is quite correct to put it in that way.

Q. Put it in your own way? A. I think it is one of the measures which of course are necessary when you have outside competition to meet, but it is a rule which has been enforced, as far as I can remember, since we have had any organization at all dealing with agents, and on that account it would not be quite right to associate it in our minds as a measure that was specially adopted.

Q. I do not mean to say it was specially adopted but it was put in force against the opposition steamers as a measure to meet their competition? A. Yes. This rule for agents which prohibited agents booking for outside competing lines naturally cannot be put in force when there is no outside competing line; it can only be put in force when there is one.

Q. That is true? A. But as I said, as a matter of fact, it was enforced at that time. As a matter of 3167 fact it was.

Q. In 1908 and 1909? A. Yes.

Q. Against agents who, while representing conference lines, did represent the outside lines? A. Yes, as far as we were able to we put it into force.

Q. And the way that was worked out was that the agents were either disqualified or fined by the conference for representing outside lines? A. Yes, for giving business to outside lines.

Q. For giving business to outside lines, and in certain cases for giving information to outside lines in regard to conference matters? A. I never came upon a case in which an agent has been disciplined for giving 3168 information.

Q. Do not you remember the case of a certain agent of some of the Italian lines, who was disciplined in that way? A. For giving information only?

Q. Yes? A. No; I do not remember it. I am not prepared to contradict you if you have got it in your statement but I do not remember such a case.

Q. You do not remember it yourself? A. No, I do not remember any such case. It seems to me we have so much difficulty in arriving at any decision for disciplining agents anyhow that I cannot conceive any decision was ever come to for either punishing or fining an agent for giving information.

3169

Q. I had a case in mind but I do not recall it just now? A. I really do not remember any.

Q. Do you remember the case of a man named Clausenius of Chicago, who represented the Northwest Transport Line and also represented some of the conference lines? A. I do not remember his case.

Q Do you know the case of a man named Schiavone, both of whom were fined heavily? A. No. The handling of agencies goes into a great deal of detail. While we deal with agents on this side of the Atlantic we leave our New York agents to deal with agents on that side of the Atlantic.

Q. That was left to the Chicago committee? A. Yes, that would be left to the Chicago committee.

Q. The Chicago complaint committee. You, however, on this side dealt with your agents in a similar manner? A. Exactly, just the same thing.

Q. Yes. The vessels of the White Star Line have been from time to time used as fighting steamers, have they not? A. Yes, they have.

Q. I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 172 and ask if that recalls to your memory the case of the "Laurentic" sailing as a reduced rate steamer or as a fighting steamer? A. I do not remember the individual case, but I have no doubt that was a fighting rate.

Q. Yes. It states that there, does it not; that that was reduced for that sailing only? A. "This steamer sailing only." I quite agree with that.

Q. The "Laurentic" belongs to your line? A. Yes, she is one of our steamers.

Q. Now you recall, Mr. Cauty, that the question of control stations on the boundary line between Russian, Servia, Savony and Germany was a very live one between the German lines and the English lines? A. Yes, I do.

Q. What was the trouble in regard to those control stations that the English lines or their passengers had, while passing over the control stations? A. Well, the English lines felt at one period that their passengers were apt to meet with considerable difficulty in getting through the control stations, and having got through the control stations the English lines, or certain of them, felt aggrieved that the passengers had then to be directed either to Hamburg or Bremen.

Q. Hamburg and Bremen were sailing ports for the Hamburg-American Line and the Nord Deutscher Lloyd? A. The Hamburg-American Line and the Nord Deutscher Lloyd. We felt we were getting our passengers rather too near the home ports of some 3173 of our strongest competitors.

Q. By the way, first of all, before we get to that, who were in charge of the control stations at these various places such as Eydtkuhnen? A. Well, I do not know the names of the control stations.

Q. Ottloschin and Illowo and others on the Russian frontier? A. The control stations originated from a desire of the German government to exercise a control over third-class passengers coming into Germany and passing through Germany, just the same as the United States government exercised a control over emigrants coming into their country; and other countries also control the amount of third-class passengers, 3174 either leaving or arriving in their respective countries. The German government in establishing these control stations did so through the two German lines, the Hamburg-American and the N. D. L. V.

Q. And is it not so, Mr. Cauty, that the agent of the Hamburg-American and the Nord Deutcher Lloyd were the ones who were in charge of those stations? A. The Hamburg-American and the Nord Deutcher Lloyd have the working of those control stations under their charge.

Q. I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 50, which is a letter from the Hamburg-American Line to the Hamburg-American Line in New York, and ask you if that refreshes your memory in regard to the Hamburg American Line being in charge of the various control stations and having their agents there? A. This is the Holland-American Line.

Q. The Hamburg-American Line runs to Holland? A. No, they are two different countries. The Holland-American Line is the Rotterdam Company.

Q. Yes, of course, but the Holland-American Line according to their letter—? A. Have been permitted to appoint agents at these control stations exactly as the managers at the control stations, not as agents for us.

3176

Q. And they were in charge of it? A. They were in charge of it. The regulation that the German government have made with respect to emigrants requires that when an emigrant for a British company enters the German territory through a control station he must be directed to Hamburg or Bremen. The British companies tried very hard to get that regulation varied so as to permit an emigrant coming in through a control station to pass through Germany, Rotterdam or Antwerp, but we have not suceeded. At present we find no difficulty in getting our passengers through Germany. Our German line friends handle them for us, and forward them by channel steamers from either Bremen or Hamburg as the case may be.

Q. And previous to that time however many of the English passengers or English line passengers were turned back? A. In the early days we all felt very sore about it. We did not think that our passengers were being handled at all properly.

Q. Was that during the time of the competition, before the agreement of 1908? A. I really forget for the moment when these control stations were established. It was a question quite foreign to this fighting method we have been discussing.

3178 Q. I want to inquire about it and to learn what I can. I want to know the fact as to when you had the most trouble in regard to the control stations, whether previous to the agreement of 1908, or after, or when it was. I am not trying to catch you, Mr. Cauty? A. I am trying to think when they were established. That is the trouble. I can tell you frankly that it was in the early days that we had the most trouble, and that for the last year or two it has been all right and everything has gone quite smoothly. It was in the early days that we had the trouble.

3179 Q. And you had many complaints to make, had you not, to the German lines in regard to these control stations from time to time? A. We had in those early days.

Q. And Mr. Ballin of the Hamburg-American Line was the one who was assuring you that everything would be all right? A. Every time we brought it up we found some assurances. We were very persistent.

Q. For several years he assured you that everything would be all right? A. That is so. He did.

Q. And it did not come all right until later? A. No.

3180 Q. Now, I show you the minutes of a meeting a presumed meeting, held on February the 25th, 1908, at Liverpool, of the North Atlantic Conference, and ask you, even if this matter had not gone to such an extent, this matter of the control stations had not troubled you so much, you attempted to get a by-law passed to Agreement AA to the effect that the English lines would have no further trouble at the control stations? (The minutes in question were shown to the witness.) A. Yes, that is quite true. That confirms the answer I gave that it was in those early days that we had the trouble.

Q. When was that? A. Since 1908, since February, 1908.

Q. Since February, 1908, you have not experienced much trouble? A. It has gradually disappeared, I think perhaps some of the other lines have felt themselves more aggrieved over it than we have about it.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. This adjustment with the British lines made with regard to the control stations was made by paying a small fee, was it not? A. Well, I think that came up as far as the question was concerned. The German lines explained to us that there were certain expenses with regard to disinfecting the passengers, and taking care of the passengers and my recollection 3182 is that we gave the control station agent a commission on the passengers he booked through, and a small fee on prepaid passengers.

Q. And that adjustment was made somewhere about May the 23rd, 1908? A. Yes, that is so.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Now, Mr. Cauty, I will show you also a minute, No. 475 of the North Atlantic Steamship Lines combines and ask you whether that refreshes your memory as to whether the Red Star Line contributed equally with the Holland-American Line to the expenses of the control stations? A. Well, I am sorry 3183 to say that I cannot give you any information about that. I am not acquainted with the arrangements made between the Continental lines.

Q. You do not know the Red Star business? A. No, we do not, but I should say that minute is correct.

Q. This minute shows that the Red Star Line did contribute to the expenses of the control station? A. I should say that is so, but from my own knowledge I cannot say so.

Q. Minute 475 is as follows: "For the contribution of the Holland-American Line and the Red Star Line

3184 to the expenses of control stations there shall be taken into account on the one hand, interests on the invested capital, charges, repairs, and other expenses, on the other hand the receipts; the extent of the interests and of the charges are reserved for further agreement." I show you also the minutes of the meeting of the North Atlantic Conference held at Liverpool on the 8th of December, 1908, numbered 386, Section 14, thereof, which reads as follows: "14. Control stations, agents charging 15/—commission on British lines, British passengers accompanying prepaids, see notice 378—14. The secretary to write Secretary Peters that 3185 British lines are unable to pay 15/—commission to control station agents, but pay 15/—commission to their agents at Continental ports. They are willing, however, to pay the usual commission, about two marks, to control station agents for their trouble in handling the passengers." Does that refresh your memory, Mr. Cauty, as to also paying for the expenses of the control stations? A. I think it is part of that same question we referred to. Yes, I quite agree with that, and it is part of the same question already referred to, where we recognized there were certain expenses connected with our passengers at control stations which we felt it was only right we should meet.

3186 Q. And for some time then you have experienced no difficulty in private control stations? A. No.

Q. Now I understand, Mr. Cauty, that the steamship lines, parties to the conference, which we have been speaking of, are allowed a certain commission, a commercial allowance by the various railway companies belonging to the Western Passenger Association, Central Passenger Association, and other associations in the United States? A. So I understand, but I am afraid that I shall be able to give you very little information about the railway situation in America. That is one of those details that we leave more or less in the hands of our representatives.

Q. Representatives over there? A. Yes, but I do know we get a commercial allowance and I have read the minutes of certain meetings, I think, which took place at which that was agreed to, but having felt the matter was adjusted and put on a basis more or less satisfactory I have really not bothered to take any notice of it.

Q. You know there is a main factor for business? A. Yes.

Q. For which steamship lines originated other railway companies in the United States? A. Yes.

Q. And that is generally true throughout the United States? A. I understand it is. 3188

Q. Did you—you said you did not attend any meetings in the United States? A. No, I have never attended a conference meeting.

Q. You did not attend the meeting of the Western Passenger Association with the Transatlantic Pasage Conference held at New York on November 10th, 1909? A. No.

Q. You know however that the European agents of the various conference lines are allowed to sell inland American transportation only through the agency of the steamship lines. Is that so? A. That is generally correct.

Q. They use the steamship lines? A. That is gen- 3189 erally correct, but it is not an absolute rule. There are exceptions.

Q. I shall show you a minute or rather a resolution No. 416 of the North Atlantic Steamship Combine and ask you if that is to the best of your recollection as to that (Petitioner's Exhibit 416 handed in)? A. That is a very general rule.

Q. That statement in there has been followed out, has it not? A. Pretty generally. It has not absolutely. I think for instance the Canadian Pacific have not.

3190 Q. That resolution I wish to read in the record. Have you any objection. Resolution 416, European agents and the body.

Mr. Beecher: Resolution 416. Will you describe it.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Resolution 416: "European agents of the parties are allowed to sell American Inland Transportation only through the intervention of that party with whose ships the respective passengers are transported. Tickets 3191 for Amerian Inland Transportation made out to other companies or persons are withdrawn by the parties and replaced by their own. The agent remains responsible for the amount to the party. Moreover he is subject to a fine of at least 400 marks." A. I would like to put on the record that that is a resolution to which we were not a party.

Q. You were not a party? A. None of the British lines were a party. It merely represents a somewhat similar rule that the British lines have among themselves.

Q. That probably is general among all the companies? A. Pretty well.

3192 Q. We produce, according to our arrangement, two volumes. On the outer page there is, "Minutes of Meetings of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference from 1904-1907. Minutes 368-374, Vol. 1." This is from the files of your office? A. Yes.

Q. And they were sent to you in due course by the secretary of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference? A. Yes.

Q. And your line is a party to that conference? A. Yes.

Q. It has been during the period of time covered by these minutes? A. Yes.

Q. Are they true reports of what occurred? Is what they purport to contain correct? A. They are not sworn copies of course but I have no reason to believe they are not correct.

Q. Sufficiently true for you to act upon? A. For our purposes.

Q. The second volume has the title "Minutes of meetings of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference, 1908-1911, Minutes 375-417, Vol. 2." I offer them in evidence.

Petitioner's Exhibits, Vol. 1, No. 710, Vol 2, No. 711. 3194

Q. Mr. Beecher has also produced certain letters from Mr. Peters or purporting to be from Mr. Peters during the years 1908 and 1909. These letters are marked "G. 5." Is that one of the index numbers to circulars sent out by Mr. Peters? A. Yes.

Q. What other filed letters or numbers does he send to you? A. I am afraid I could not answer that entirely. He sends us "M," for Mediterranean and "F" for Mediterranean freight.

Q. What is the significance of the letter "G"? A. I do not know what "G" means.

Q. It appears that a number of these letters bear no signature. They were, however, accepted by you 3195 as the official letters from Mr. Peters' office? A. I think he follows the usual practice of putting at the end "yours respectfully" does he not, almost always?

Q. Yes, without any signature? A. That is so. You will find that almost everywhere.

Q. Those letters come in from you, and are filed as they now appear on that file in your office? A. Yes.

Q. Are you the personal custodian of such letters? A. No, they go down to the passenger department.

Q. Of the White Star Line? A. Of the White Star Line.

3196 Q. Or of your firm? A. Well, of the White Star Line, the Dominion and the American Lines. The passenger departments of the three lines are conducted in the same office.

Q. Do you send for them when you need any information which you think they contain? A. Which they contain, yes.

Q. It appears, Mr. Cauty, that a great many of the letters from this file are missing. Do you know anything about those missing letters; where they are or in whose possession they are? A. No, I do not. They are probably in our possession and may have been filed 3197 away under different references.

Q. I find that out of the 600 odd letters that more than 100 file numbers are not in this file? A. No, I could not explain that, excepting that some of them may be of very little importance. Others may have been filed away in connection with different subjects.

Q. I show you an agenda for a meeting in London, November 25th, 1909, No. 20, which refers to an increase for 1910 on third-class rates by 10/— G. 653? A. Yes.

Q. G. 653 is the file number of the letter that refers to that, is it not? A. Yes, that is so.

Q. It appears that the letters 652, 653 and 654 are 3198 absent from this file? A. I think we shall have no difficulty whatever in producing that letter. It will be our own letter probably. That is why they have not put it on. May I make a note.

Q. I will give you a list of all of the letters, Mr. Cauty, so that we may have the file as complete as possible? A. Yes. I think we shall be able to improve that. We have not had the time to attempt, in the short notice we had, to get this file complete.

Q. You have this file G throughout the year 1910, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. Will you produce that for us this afternoon? A. "G" file 1910: yes.

Q. This refers to the year 1908, 1909 (indicating). It is so interesting we would like to have the year 1910.

Mr. Beecher: We have given you, as far as we could, everything you called for in your notice.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. That is true. The notice was not definite in that respect? A. No, it did not cover 1910.

Q. I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 12A, page 154 of the printed record in this case. The matter here purports to be, "Resolutions of the North Atlantic Steamship Lines Combine." Now is that the resolutions of the Atlantic Conference at Jena? A. It is quite strange to me. They are not resolutions of the Atlantic Conference but of the N. D. L. V. Line.

Q. They appear to be a revision of certain resolutions. Do you know anything about that revision, who participated in it, under what authority it was done? A. I do not. I am not in any way associated with the N. D. L. V. Conference. I have not attended any of its meetings, and I have had no part or discussion in connection with any of these resolutions.

Q. Are those resolutions binding upon your company in any way? A. No, sir. Neither the White Star, nor the American nor the Dominion Line were in any way interested.

Q. With respect to third-class? A. With respect to any class. We have no interest in them at all.

Q. Have you in your possession the minutes of the Atlantic Conference during the years 1908, 1909 and 1910? A. We have. We have submitted them to you. I think we submitted all that Mr. Crim had not got.

Q. I have not seen them (minutes produced). There have been times during the past few years when you held meetings every month or two? A. Yes. To start 3202 with things were very unsettled and meetings were very frequent, but they have gradually got down. We have not had a meeting now for quite a time. I think they are all here. It was intended to give you them all.

Mr. Guiler: I do not very much gather where they are, Mr. Cauty. These are all the minutes we have got.

The Witness: We did not give you anything we knew you had already got.

3203 Mr. Guiler: They are not complete by any means. I could not make much of them last night. There are some there.

Mr. Crim: The witness produces minutes of the Atlantic Conference at Cologne, December the 3rd, 1908. The witness produces the minutes of the Atlantic Conference 22 to 141 inclusive. I offer those in evidence.

Petitioner's Exhibit 712.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. You are familiar with Articles 3 and 4 of Exhibit AA, are you not, Mr. Cauty? A. I am, sir.

3204 Q. And you are also familiar with Article 6 of AA? A. I will be if you will let me refresh my memory as to which particular one it is (the witness referred to the article of the agreement)? A. Yes.

Q. We observe from reading this that at the time of this agreement the contribution of a line plus to a line minus in their apportionment of souls was £4? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do with making this amount £4 or the establishment of £4 as the amount under this article? A. It was a subject of general discussion at the meeting and I don't think any particular one had a say as to what it should be more than another, but we had the experience of the N. D. L .V. They had a pool. I think it was felt by all to be a reasonable amount.

Q. What was the measure of whether it was reasonable or not? What was the standard by which this sum was fixed? A. The rates that were being charged for passage was undoubtedly the standard. For instance if our rates were to have been reduced to £4, then you would not consider £4 a reasonable amount.

Q. And why would you not consider £4 a reasonable amount? A. Because you would not then have a carrying rate for the passenger or anything to pay the agents' commission out of. There are certain expenses.

Q. And a line that was minus operating on a rate of £4 would receive the same compensation if its line were idle? A. Absolutely, without having the expense of carrying the passenger.

Q. In other words upon that basis there was no incentive to operate the steamship line? A. Of course that is covered in the agreement.

Q. But independent of the sections which require the lines to operate there would be no incentive, would there? The line would make just as much idle as in operation? A. Well, looked at from the third-class passenger point of view it would be making a great deal more, because it would be getting the gross rate, assuming the rate was £4, without having the cost of carrying the passenger.

Q. Exactly, and the line which did operate on that basis would be losing all it made? A. It would be losing a great deal more.

Q. Losing a great deal more? A. Yes, it would.

Q. Then the £4 was fixed as a reasonable rate, standard of a reasonable rate, was not it? A. It was.

Q. Has there been any situation arising with respect to third-class traffic which warranted a change in this standard of £4? A. It has never been changed.

3208 Q. It has never been changed. Has the White Star Line at any time asked to have it changed? A. As far as I recollect they have not.

Q. I understand you then to say that it was the experience of the lines, who were privy to this Agreement, that £4 had been a reasonable rate for a period of years, or at that particular time? A. The lines that were party to this agreement, or a great many of them, had no previous experience of the pool. You have not had that in your mind. They had not previous experience of the pool, so they could only arrive at some compensation rate which they thought would be fair 3209 for the future.

Q. Did you have any data before you at that time, or have you had since, which would indicate the actual cost of transporting third-class emigrants, that it would be greater than £4? A. The cost of transporting third-class passengers of course has been already dealt with in Mr. Ismay's evidence. As he explained we cannot work out the cost of transporting exactly as a railway company in dealing with the cost on the steamship, where you allow the victualling the establishment on board, the various departments, the handling the passengers on shore, etc. I should say it came to probably £2 or £2.10.0. It varies a great deal according to 3210 the number of passengers carried on ship. That does not take into account what we call the steamship expenses, coal, the upkeep of the ship, the engine repairs, insurance, etc.

Q. Now, with regard to these fighting, so-called fighting steamers, your purpose was to obtain for the pool lines every emigrant possible as I understand? A. Yes, we certainly wanted our fair share of the business.

Q. And when the Russia East Asiatic Line carried 500 passengers, and the so-called "fighting" steamers carried 2,000, you figure that by means of the "fighting" steamer you had been profited to that extent, 2,000? A. Quite. We had secured 2,000 passengers, a good many of whom would have gone by the Russian-East Asiatic Company or other competing steamer which was quoting lower rates than our normal rate.

Q. Emigrants usually travel by the same lines, do they not? For instance the emigrant going to America who travels by a White Star steamer, ordinarily, his tendency is to come back by it—in case he comes back? A. I would not go as far as that. I am afraid the experience of the past hardly justifies us in saying that. I think an old hand is apt to try his hand on different 3212 lines.

Q. Your experience has been that his first experience does not control him in the future? A. We make the most of all the passengers we carry. We try to make them all advertisements for us.

Q. Your experience has been that the most effective way in bringing about an increase of rates is by means of the pool? A. Well, I would not go as far as that. I think for instance we might point out that our first-class business and second-class business is not pool.

Q. But your first and second-class business is carried pursuant—? A. To agreement.

Q. Rate agreements? A. Yes, I am quite with you 3213 if you suggest that is the best way to secure good rates of agreement. I do not say they are necessarily pool agreements.

Q. Of course you are at some expense in the maintenance of a pool, whereas in an ordinary agreement, there is not occasioned the expense incident to the maintenance of the pool? A. Well, there is no great expense. I do not quite follow you with regard to the expense of maintenance.

Q. Well, it is cheaper to operate under an Agreement than under a Pool? A. Oh, I do not think so. You have in mind the compensation payment, I take it.

Q. No? A. Do you mean the office expenses?

Q. Yes? A. Well, I dare say there is not as much correspondence, and statistics do not have to be watched so closely. I do not think that is a very serious item.

Q. Mr. Peters maintains a large office? A. He does.

Q. Do you know how many employees he has? A. Yes.

Q. He also employs investigators to investigate complaints? A. Well, he has no investigators attached to his office—for instance, on the lines, of inspectors 3215 which I think you have in mind. He would investigate any complaint, and he visits all the offices at times to inquire with regard to passenger carriage and statistics, but he has not a police force attached to his office, if that is what you wish to imply.

Q. What methods does he adopt in ascertaining facts when complaints are made to him? A. He would have to deal with every case upon its merits. In cases where questions of rates are involved, the lines at the port of departure, he would probably inquire of.

Q. Would he have someone in his office whom he could send to go through and audit the books of the 3216 company against whom the complaint was made? A. He has a right of access to all the passenger books of all the lines.

Q. Now, tell me briefly what Mr. Smyth does with respect to the British lines? A. Mr. Smyth acts as the British lines, secretary. The British lines as a whole are not parties to the pool. A number of the Canadian lines are not. The Allan Line are not parties to the pool, except in the Continental business. The Canadian Pacific are not parties to the pool. The Royal Line are not in the pool. Consequently, in acting as secretary to the British lines, Mr. Smyth's services are not solely connected with the pool. In fact the pool is only part of his business, and with respect to that part he represents Mr. Peters, who is secretary to the pool. We have conference meetings from time to time; you can see the minutes, which are exhibits. Mr. Smyth is the secretary and enters them. He makes records of all the proceedings. If we wish to communicate any matter of interest about the line, we pass it through Mr. Smyth, he duplicates it and sends out a copy to each of the lines. He collects statistics for us. He issues our rate sheets.

Q. Mr. Smyth was in this business before there 3218 was any amalgamation, directly or indirectly, between the British lines and the so-called Continental lines and the N. D. V.? A. He was.

Q. When the British lines became parties to the Atlantic Conference and became identified with the Hamburg American Line and the North German Loyd, and other Continental lines, Mr. Smyth's office was taken over, as it were, as a local clearing house? A. No, sir. Mr. Smyth's office continued. I think that would be a better way to put it. The British lines decided that it was better to continue Mr. Smyth's office as their own particular conference office, their local conference office.

Q. When did this conference receive the name of 3219
North Atlantic? A. I could not tell you. We have always called it the N. A. C. This book goes back to 1904, and that is a new series. I do not recollect it having had any other name. I would not like to say that it had any other name, and I do not recollect when it actually started. It has been in existence as long as I remember.

Q. Is Mr. Smyth under the direction of the members of the North Atlantic Conference, or is he under the direction of Mr. Peters? A. Under the direction of the British lines only. Mr. Peters has no control over him at all.

3220 Q. Do you know such a conference as the Metropolitan Conference? A. No.

Q. I saw the name in the papers, and I presumed that it was a typographical error for Mediterranean? A. I have never heard of the Metropolitan Conference.

Q. When was the first arrangement made with the Transatlantic lines with regard to first and second-class rates? A. Are you going back now to ancient history? I believe it was in 1896.

Q. Was that pursuant to a formal agreement? A. I think we had a rate agreement then.

3221 Q. How long was that agreement in force? A. I do not remember.

Q. Then the time came when the agreement was abandoned? A. It was.

Q. How many attempts have there been to place the first and second-class American business under a rate agreement? A. They have been numerous. I could not tell you how many, but we have had numerous agreements at different times.

Q. Has the agreement that is now existing in fact been successful? Have the parties carried out its terms? A. Yes.

3222 Q. What has been your experience with respect to which traffic is the most profitable: first, second or third-class? A. That is a broad question. It depends which you get the most of, I think. If you can get very large numbers of first-class they would be very profitable.

Q. I mean to the White Star Line, what has been the principal source of profit to the White Star Line? Has it derived most profit from the first or the second, or the third-class? A. I really could not answer that question. This is for your information. I may say that it varies a great deal. For instance like the "Olympic" which sailed last week. She had 740 first-class passengers, something like 450 second-class, and a comparatively small third-class list. I think she had something under 400. You would not need to ask me which was the most profitable in that list with 740 first-class. But there is another ship which might sail with practically no first-class passengers, and a full second and third-class list.

Q. Now, which has been the most profitable to the White Star Line per passenger? A. Per passenger?

Q. Yes, the first, second or third-class passenger? A. I should say the first-class passenger.

Q. You believe that your experience has been that the carriage of the first-class passenger is more profitable than the carriage of the second or third-class passenger? A. Yes, if you get enough of them.

Q. You are taking into consideration the capital; that there is more capital invested in the carriage of the first-class passenger than the second or third? A. Well, I was taking into consideration the cost of handling him on the ship, feeding him, providing him with quarters, landing and embarking, but I was not taking into account the steamship expense or the capital value of the steamer.

Q. Proportionately, from the return, it costs less actually to transport the first-class than the second or 3225 third? A. Well, my answer would still be true if that was not the case. Supposing it cost 50 per cent of the passage money to transport a passenger, the passage money in the first-class is, well, it might be, three times what it is in the third, and if you take off 50 per cent you get a bigger return. You do get cases where with a very small list you carry first-class passengers at an actual loss; in fact you may carry all passengers at a loss on certain voyages.

Q. How much greater has the net return been to the White Star Line on its first-class than on its 3226 third-class? A. Well, sir, we have no figures which would show that. You are asking me a question now that I could not really answer you from any figures or any computations we have ever taken out.

Q. Have you ever made any effort to ascertain the exact cost of transporting a passenger across, an approximate cost of transporting a passenger across the Atlantic? A. We have made estimates of the cost of transporting them, taking into account the expenses I have given you; that is to say, just the particular expenses incurred on the voyage, but the previous question you asked me went further than 3227 that, rather.

Q. Yes? A. And I have already said that I think on the basis that I mentioned the cost of transporting a third-class passenger would be about say £2 to £2.10.0.

Q. What elements of cost have you left out of that calculation? A. Well, we have left out the insurance of the ship, for instance, to which all the earnings must contribute. We have left out the establishment charges on shore. We have large offices to maintain. We have left out the running expenses of the ship, the payment of the crews of the deck and engine department, the engine department repairs, and the 3228 cost of the coal. I think that is about all that I can think of at the moment.

Q. Have you taken into consideration the salaries of the various officers? A. No. We only take into consideration the victualling department expense; that is to say, the stewards' wages when actually attending on the people.

By Mr. Beecher:

Q. You have not considered the cost of the commission tickets and so forth? A. Yes. Well, that would be taken off in the net passage money.

3229

By Mr. Crim:

Q. Mr. Cauty, so far as your system of accounting is concerned, each voyage stands by itself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on some voyages your net return from freight is greater than on other voyages? A. It is, sir.

Q. And some voyages your eastbound freight is greater than the westbound? A. It is.

Q. Again your return from third-class passengers on a particular voyage may be greater proportionately than the return from the first or second-class passengers? A. Yes, sir.

3230

Q. And the converse is true? A. It is.

Q. With respect to the first and second-class passengers? A. Yes, it is.

Q. So that if you have a large complement of third-class immigrants going West you can afford to carry freight cheaper than if you did not have so many third-class immigrants? A. It really has no bearing on it. The freight rates are fixed quite regardless of what the number of passengers is.

Q. How do you arrive at your freight rates? Are they subject to the amount of space available each voyage? A. No, the freight rates are continued from time to time, subject to fluctuations, according to the requirements of the market and discussion amongst the lines.

3231

Q. Are these rates fixed by a conference of the lines? A. Well, by discussion among the lines I should say.

Q. By discussion? A. Yes.

Q. Or a matter of agreement? A. Well, I should say yes, a matter of understanding among the lines.

Q. And are their rates predicated to the classification of the freight? A. Yes.

3232 Q. And how is your freight classified? A. You are getting me out of my depth. I know how to deal with the passenger business, but I cannot tell you so much about the freight business, except that we do classify freight among the fine goods and the rought stuff, but I cannot attempt to give you a detailed classification of the rates.

Q. Is this classification made by a conference of the steamship interests or by some particular individual? A. I am not quite clear, as a matter of fact I am not quite clear as to the facts there. The classification has been in existence some time, but how and 3233 when it was arranged I cannot say.

Q. The classification has been more or less fixed permanently for a period of years? A. Yes, I should say it has, sir.

Q. And the rates however are adjusted from time to time with regard to the tonnage to be carried? A. To the requirements of the trade.

Q. In the establishment of freight rates do you take into consideration what the earnings of the line have been from passengers? A. No, sir.

Q. They stand separate and distinct? A. They stand alone and distinct.

Q. And in the establishment of the passenger rates

3234 of either class do you take any regard to the earnings from freight? A. No, sir.

Q. Each in so far as your line is concerned is arbitrary to the other and not relative? A. Quite correct, sir, they stand alone.

Q. In respect of the establishment of rates? A. Yes, they stand alone.

Q. I show you G. No. 646, a circular, purporting to be a circular letter from Mr. Peters. This letter appears to enclose some correspondence between the White Star Line and the North German Lloyd. I show you what purports to be a letter of the date of October 21st, 1909, from the White Star Line, or Messrs. Ismay, Imrie & Co. to the Nord Deutcher Lloyd. I ask you if you wrote that letter or you recall it? A. Yes, I did. Yes, I remember that very well.

Q. Did you write that letter, Mr. Cauty? A. The firm did. I believe I did. I do not remember. My initial is not there. I think I did. Yes, I think I did. I suppose I did write it.

Q. In one paragraph I find this sentence: "We are quite of your opinion that a general advance of at least 20/- all round should be made in the second- 3236 class rate. We think a pool would secure a larger increase, but I hope the advance of at least 20/- may be agreed, if a pool is found impossible"? A. Yes.

Q. It was your opinion at that time that a pool would be more effective than the agreement in bringing about an advance in rates? A. I did not think so then, because certain of the lines were very reluctant to advance their rates—a good many were anxious to. Failing to get what we thought a satisfactory rate agreement we thought perhaps the reluctance of any lines to advance would be overcome if there was a pool, so that their position was protected.

Q. That is all I want to ask you, Mr. Cauty. Now, 3237
Mr. Cauty, if you will produce for us—

The Special Examiner: You had better give him a list.

Mr. Crim: The list of letters which appear missing from File G, and the letters on File G, during the year 1910, and the Minutes of the Atlantic Conference.

The Witness: The minutes for 1910?

3238 Arthur Belcher Cauty

By Mr. Crim:

Q. Yes, 1910? A. Are these the ones you make out to be missing?

Q. Yes. That (indicating) is just a private memorandum? A. That is the one you just asked me about.

Q. Yes? A. That is not in here.

Q. No, it is not. None of these numbers are in there.

Adjourned till 3 o'clock, September 4th, 1912.

3239 Resuming.

Mr. Crim: Now, Mr. Beecher, I simply want to get Mr. Cauty to identify some of these statistics to get them formally in.

Q. Now, Mr. Cauty, I show you Form Westbound No. 48A and is this a typical form of statistics that your office receives from Mr. Peters? A. That is so.

Q. And you have a corresponding form for the westbound traffic? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I show you another form, No. 17? A. Yes, that is to show the working of the pool with the Russian East Asiatic.

3240 Q. And this form is typical of the others you have received periodically from Mr. Peters? A. It is, sir.

Mr. Crim: I offer those in evidence.
Petitioner's exhibits Nos. 727 and 728.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. And those statistics are made up from data that is sent to Mr. Peters from the respective members of the conference? A. They are.

Mr. Crim: Now, Mr. Beecher, there are certain agreements that have been produced by 3241

Mr. Cauty that we want to offer in evidence, but we do not care to detain Mr. Cauty while you are marking them, so that you may have access to them for the purposes of your cross-examination.

Mr. Guiler: I offer in evidence various agreements which have been produced by the Cunard Company.

It is understood that they go in subject to the objection by Mr. Beers to any evidence of any agreement or conference other than AA, as not within the issues and incompetent and irrelevant.

3242

Mr. Crim: The agreements the Government offers now are all agreements by the White Star Line and produced by Mr. Beecher and Mr. Cauty, excepting certain agreements produced by the Cunard Line referred to in cross-examination of Mr. Ismay.

Mr. Guiler: The Cunard exhibits are already marked for identification.

Mr. Crim: They were some of the agreements I showed you the other day.

CROSS-EXAMINED by Mr. Beecher:

3243

Q. Mr. Cauty, in your direct-examination you referred to the rates of steamers and stated that the rates of the Conference Lines had never been below those rates and as a general thing you thought they were somewhat higher. Were you referring to—what rates of the fighting steamers were you referring to? A. I was referring then to the published rates of the fighting steamers, although I might add we had every reason to believe that the Uranium Company—

3244

Q. You are speaking of the Uranium Company? A. Other outside lines—although we had every reason to believe that lines were paying small extra commissions.

Q. You had no reference to the actual rates of the outside lines taking into account secret commissions? A. No, we dealt with the published rates.

Q. Now you started to say something in your direct-examination as to the relation between the control stations and the conference lines. Will you not please explain to us exactly what the situation has been in reference to control stations as you understand it?

3245 A. Well, as I think I understand, the control stations were established in accordance with the requirements of the German Government, who desired to have some control over immigrants coming into German territory either to reside there or to pass through German territory. The establishment of control stations had nothing to do with the meeting of this outside competition. The conditions under which emigrants are allowed to pass through these control stations are, as we understand it, decided by the German Government and one of the conditions is that emigrants passing through Germany are required to pass through the control stations to one of the German ports, either Hamburg or Bremen. They are shipped from there by steamers to 3246 London by the British lines receiving passengers, either to London or other east coast ports. That regulation as I understand it is insisted upon with regard to all immigrants except those from the Holland American Line and the Red Star Line. Those two companies which sail from Rotterdam and Antwerp respectively, have obtained a concession, I may call it, from the German Government which enables their passengers to pass through Germany to their own ports. Any other company wishing to have its passengers pass through Germany to some other port than Hamburg or Bremen would require to obtain such a concession from the German Government. I may say the White Star Line tried very hard to obtain such an arrangement and other of the British lines have done so too, but we have not been successful and our passengers now come through Hamburg or Bremen.

Mr. Guiler: I ask that the answer be stricken out on the ground that the witness is not shown to be in any way qualified to state the requirements of the German Government as to control stations or as to their purpose or whether they were established to keep off outside competition or not and as not being the best evi- 3248 dence.

Q. You stated in your direct-examination that the men in charge of those control stations were in general the agents of the Hamburg American and North German Lloyd Companies. Do I understand that those agents are responsible for causing emigrants to go only to Hamburg and Bremen or in accordance with the arrangement specially obtained by the Holland-American and Red Star Lines, to which you referred? A. Yes, those agents, the men in charge of the control stations, are naturally responsible for carrying out the requirements of the German Government.

Q. But it is only the requirements of the German 3249
Government which they are carrying out and not their own individual desires? A. No, the requirements of the German Government.

Mr. Guiler: Objected to on the ground that the witness is not qualified to state the requirements of the German Government or whether it is their individual desires.

Q. Those lines do not make the regulations which are thus carried out? A. No, certainly not. The German Government, as we have always understood, 3250 when deciding on the establishment of the control stations, I suppose, looked round for some right and proper means to work them and they placed the working of those control stations in the hands of the two German lines, the North German Lloyd and the Holland-American.

Mr. Guiler: Same objection and supposition of interest not evidence.

Q. Well now, in the testimony which has been given in this cause in New York it was indicated that certain third-class passengers holding tickets of the Uranium 3251 or the New York Continental, or some other Conference Line bound for Rotterdam, had been stopped at the control stations, and had not been allowed to pass on until subsequently their tickets had been changed for tickets of Conference Lines such as the Hamburg-American Line. Can you give any explanation for that? A. Well, I am not acquainted with the specific instances you refer to, but any line not having a license in Germany for the conducting of its passenger business, and not having obtained a concession from the German Government for bringing its passengers through Germany, would naturally not be able to get its passengers through the control stations.

3252 Mr. Guiler: Same objection—witness has no personal knowledge.

Q. Under the regulations of the German Government a third-class passenger holding a ticket on such a line would not be permitted to pass the control stations? A. No, I should understand that is the case. The White Star Line and other British lines, the Cunard Line, for instance, have had a license from the German Government for many years, long before the pool was in existence of course.

Mr. Guiler: Same objection.

Q. Well, not a license permitting the direct passage of your passengers through Germany? A. A license to do passenger business in Germany.

Q. This operation of the control stations, I understand you to say, has no connection with any agreements of the Conference Lines, or any steps taken by the Conference Lines to carry out their agreements? A. No, sir; there is no relationship so far as I understand.

Mr. Guiler: Same objection.

Q. Now you were asked in regard to the compensation rate of £4 fixed in the Agreement A. A., and I understand you to testify that £4 was regarded as a reasonable compensation figure. Will you explain exactly what you understand to have been the basis of fixing that amount? A. Well, that is rather a difficult question to answer, but it has, of course, to be dealt with on very broad lines. The idea was that if a line was over-carrying a percentage it should not be making a profit out of such passengers that were over and above its allotment, and in consequence the lines had to take in a rough and ready way some general idea as to what rates were being paid by the passenger, 3255 what it would cost the line to carry that passenger, and then that anything left over was to go into the pool. The idea of fixing £4 as a compensation rate was with the idea that as a rule a line paying compensation would not be getting anything for itself out of such passengers.

Q. Did you intend to give the impression that £4 bore any relation to what would be a reasonably remunerative rate for carrying a third-class passenger? A. No, sir; I should be very sorry to carry passengers at £4.

3256 Q. The idea was solely to fix a compensation rate which, as you say, in a rough and ready manner, would as nearly as possible cause the lines to carry the percentage which had been fixed under the pool? A. That was the idea.

Q. You were asked in regard to Mr. Peter's office and the expenses incurred in connection therewith. Would those expenses be materially different whether there was, or was not, a pool? A. No, sir; I should say that the expenses of a secretary's office under the pool, that is Mr. Peter's office, were a mere bagatelle. It is not a matter worth considering in the operation 3257 of a steamship company.

Q. Would the expenses be materially different if there were merely a conference as you defined it instead of a pool? A. I suppose they would be a little less; possibly a couple of clerks less. It would be so little as to be immaterial. We have always kept on our conference office whether there has been a pool or not; whether there has been an agreement or not.

Q. As you said before, the conference and the secretary of the conference serve a great many other purposes than the carrying out of any pooling arrangements? A. Certainly.

Q. Merely as a means of communication and the in-3258 terchange of ideas I assume that a conference and a conference secretary would be essential? A. Well, we have always felt it to be so. Our conference in Liverpool, and Mr. Peter's office, have been in existence for very many years. I do not remember when they were started.

Q. You have stated that there were rate agreements in respect to first and second-class business, to what do those rate agreements refer? A. Those are rate agreements in respect to the minimum rate; that is to say, that no line may go below the rates provided for in these agreements for first or second-class passengers as the case may be.

Q. Does that leave the lines free to charge as much as they like for the accommodations on any steamer and furnish what accommodations they like on any steamer? A. Undoubtedly. Not only that, but the range of rates is very large. For instance, if you take a ship like the "Olympic" or the "Mauretania" or the "Lusitania" you find very few passengers indeed, in the season are carried at these minimum rates. We have a much higher rate.

Q. So that the range of rates and the possibility of competition, and the actual competition as to the first and second-class accommodation in the rates, is very extensive, is it? A. Undoubtedly. 3260

Mr. Guiler: Objected to as calling for a conclusion.

Q. You were asked in regard to the method of establishing freight and passenger rates, and you testified that they were fixed independently of each other. What is, as you understand it, the idea in fixing such rates? A. Well, we fix all our rates for freight or passengers west and eastbound with the idea of getting the best return we can; making the business as profitable as we can.

Q. On the different classes of business? A. On the different classes of business. 3261

Q. I suppose the fact that you have a full cargo of freight or a full cargo of passengers, would not cause you to carry the ordinary class of goods or passengers at a reduced rate? A. No, sir, it would not.

Q. You would not, because you were getting good freight rates, carry your passengers at a loss so as to ease things up? A. No, sir, we should not. Each class of business stands on its own bottom. We do the best we can with each.

Q. Now, Mr. Cauty, under the agreements and arrangements which you have and have had, will you state in a general manner some elements of the competition which exist, if it does exist, between the various conference lines in the carrying on of their business? A. Well, I think, speaking broadly, we can say there is competition in every class of our business, for instance our freight business is conducted under condition of active competition on all the lines. Our first-class passenger business is conducted under a rate agreement now—

3262 Arthur Belcher Cauty

Mr. Guiler: Objected to as not stating facts but conclusions.

3263 Q. As to minimum rates? A. Which leaves that business open distinctly to competition, and which is evidenced by the strides the lines have made in providing attractions to draw the first-class business with respect to steamers. This more than applies equally to the second-class business where again we are working under a rate agreement.

Q. Again as to minimum rate? A. As to minimum rates only, and although it may appear somewhat unexpected to say so, I might add that under our third-class pool the elements of competition are not entirely eliminated, for instance a line is allotted a certain share of the business, and I think in looking at the features 3264 of the pool it is only fair to keep well in mind that the facilities are not arbitrary facilities, but are merely establishing or merely securing the relation and maintenance of class conditions, and every class of pool is based on the past character of the line, and where possible on the past carryings for a considerable number of years. Now in the working of a pool a line has to carry approximately its full percentage, and if any line was to draw behind in the race with regard to making its ships attractive, drawing the passengers, it would undoubtedly suffer. In the first place it would suffer in its revenue, falling behind in its percentage. It would ultimately have to reduce its rates. The pool in no case is made for a great period of years—this five years' agreement we have now is the longest period it has been made for, and any line that systematically shows its inability to carry its percentage would have a very difficult case to meet when the renewal of this pool came up for consideration, and I think this is evidenced by the condition on the North Atlantic today, that all the lines fully realize this. You have only to look at the ships we have on the Atlantic and the accommodation we provide, the improved victualling we give the passengers, to realize how much the conditions of the passenger have been ameliorated during the recent years in crossing the Atlantic. That I think must be clearly laid down to the wish of each line to keep well up to its competitor.

3266

Q. Will you give us some of the details which you have mentioned? A. For instance if you take the third-class accommodation that was offered, I think I might say ten years ago such a thing as closed room accommodation was hardly known. Nearly every passenger had to take his berth in what were called open steerages where the bunks were as a rule wooden built, the provision of dining room was quite unknown. Passengers had to take their meals on tables put on the hatches, the idea of providing a general room for recreation or a smoke room was also quite unknown. On the ships today you see the open accommodation has been very largely replaced with closed rooms.

Q. You mean the open rooms? A. The open accommodation has been very largely replaced with closed rooms. In fact, many ships have nothing but closed room accommodation. We provide dining rooms, recreation rooms, smoke rooms, and the scale of dietary is much more liberal.

3268 Q. About the toilet. Bathing arrangements have been made in that direction? A. That I think has gone with the other. The lavatory accommodation is improved. That goes with the march of the times, but I think that clearly shows that the element of competition which is by some felt to be more or less necessary to keep up facilities offered to the public, or to increase the facilities offered to the public is not entirely absent even under a pool. In fact I might say it is very present.

Q. Now, Mr. Cauty, you testified, I believe, that you had been in the steamship business for a good many 3269 years? A. Yes, I have, sir. I have been in it since 1886.

Q. And your business has been peculiarly that of the passenger business? A. It has been particularly that of the passenger business.

Q. In that connection have you perhaps more than anyone else had to do with the relationships between the different lines and the making of agreements and the holding of conferences? A. I have been at all meetings, I think, in connection with the 1908 agreement. In fact I do not think I have missed a meeting.

Q. You are very familiar with all the conditions which have existed and the reasons which have led 3270 to the existing methods of conducting the steamship business? A. Yes, I have been in very close touch with all the negotiations which led to the agreements. I am assistant manager of the White Star Line now, and among my other duties I particularly look after passengers.

Q. Will you give us briefly your views as to the reasons for the advisability and necessity of having such agreements as "AA" and similar agreements which have been considered in this clause? A. That is a far-reaching question. I think the best way to reply to that question is to refer to the past history of the lines.

We can go—in fact I have gone in review in connection with this inquiry, I have refreshed my memory too with regard to the circumstances in the way of agreements which have availed in the Atlantic trade for the past thirty-two years. I cannot say that I can otherwise recollect or recall what happened so far back, but I find our first agreement we have any record of dates back to 1880, when there was a Scandinavian pool established, which lasted for a short period, I do not remember how long. But from 1880 to 1888 various agreements were in existence, and from 1889 to 1895 was a very strenuous time in the North Atlantic trade. All agreements went by the board, and this period was one of keen competition between all the Atlantic lines. Each line did what they thought best, and rates went down to an absolutely unremunerative level.

3272

Q. Such as, for example? A. Well, I think it went down to £2. I think the rate that Mr. Ismay mentioned is one that has been resorted to in a subsequent rate war. I think we went down to £2. I believe it was 30/—, but I am not sufficiently sure about it to make the statement definitely, but I can safely say £2, and I think the result of this competition is very instructive, because if we look at the list of companies who were engaged in the Atlantic trade in 1880 and those who were left in after this rate war, we find there were a good many names missing. The Inman Line went into liquidation. The Beaver Line got into very serious difficulties, and was subsequently bought up. The Guion Line and the National Line went out of the business. The Warren Line, started carrying passengers, but also went out of business, and the State Line was subsequently amalgamated with the Allan. All these troubles arose, I may say, during those six years or thereabouts, and I think the lesson we have to learn from time is that if these conditions had been 3273

continued, they had only to be continued long enough for the Atlantic travel and the whole Atlantic trade to be left in the hands of one or two of the strongest companies. When the lines got together in 1895 we do not find any line then standing back. We find everybody very very anxious to remedy this very unfortunate state of affairs. The lines then got together, and that first agreement in regard to Continental business which has been put in as evidence which allotted the British lines a share of the Continental business, was arrived at, and I may say that that is really the foundation stone of our present agreements. It is 3275 true the negotiations have not proceeded along a smooth path always. We have had breaks in our peaceful relations, in 1903 to 1908 we were again more or less at loggerheads with one another. But the fight in those days was comparatively a short one. We only got to reducing rates towards the end of the period, and it was in 1908 that our present agreements were established. Now, in arriving at a pool we did not say to ourselves "This business must be pooled." I do not know whether you can understand the distinction; I want to make it clear. We did not approach it as a pool with one object in view. We had been working almost entirely up to then under rate agree-
3276 ments, and I may tell you it was a very, very difficult thing when you had to give a separate minimum rate to each individual steamer on the Atlantic. We did accomplish that in respect of first and second-class passengers, but with regard to third-class the difficulties between the various lines were insurmountable, and I think I can say that for nearly two years negotiations were going on in a desultory fashion between various interests in an endeavor to find some way out of this deadlock in regard to third-class business, and it was only after considering a great many different ways of arriving at a solution of the question that this pool, the AA Agreement, about which so much has been said, was made. That pool was established as an alternative to a rate agreement, and we have found it has got over a great many of the difficult questions which had to be considered in connection with third-class business. Now, in making this settlement I think it is only fair to again point out, from our point of view at any rate, the benefits that we think have accrued to the Atlantic passenger and the merchant on both sides of the Atlantic as a result of these agreements. We have established lines which are operated regularly, we have given a class of steamer and accommodation which I can confidently say would never 3278 have been dreamt of if the unstable conditions of the years prior to 1895, for instance, had continued. But we feel unfortunately that the results of the pool have been to encourage outside opposition—lines to come into the trade which never could have lived on the Atlantic. I believe the steamship companies are held by some on the other side of the Atlantic to be guilty of having formed some combination with the idea of crushing outside competition. Now, I can give you my view very frankly and without any hesitation, that if this pool had not been formed and these agreements had not been arrived at, no outside competition could have lived on the Atlantic for five minutes. The es- 3279 tablished lines would never have consented to have allowed any other line to have come in, and attacked their business. The Uranium Company, which is now in operation, sails from Rotterdam to Halifax, New York and back to Rotterdam. The Holland American Company is a well-conducted line, a line with considerable resources, and it is not to be conceived that the Holland American line would have tamely submitted to any other company attacking their business in their own port. The conference, however, shares the loss with the Holland American Line in so far as the Ura-

3280 nium Company, which practically only affects their third-class business, is concerned, and it is not the Holland American Line only which is affected by outside competition, but it is the pool as a whole. The Uranium Company, we have every reason to believe, is backed by the Canadian Northern Railway Company. The Canadian Northern Steamship Company is what we know as the Royal Line. The Royal Line is one of us; they are not in the pool, but they are in the rate agreements, and they work amicably with us. The Uranium Company, on the other hand, is outside the pool, and they have consistently run their ships at rates
3281 lower than the pool line steamers. The pool lines steamers' rates now are on what we consider a fair and remunerative level. The Uranium Company consistently underquotes us. Westbound they take rates probably £2 lower than the pool lines. Eastbound as you know they have been quoting as low as nineteen dollars net as against the Conference lines' rates, which range from twenty-eight to thirty dollars, and that might open a suggestion as to the reasonableness of our rates. But from our point of view the Uranium Company is operated in the interests of a Railway Company. We have it on very high authority that a railway company subordinates its steamship inter-
3282 ests to its railroad interests, and we have no reason to believe that the Uranium Company is in any different position. We think probably the Uranium Company will be continued and has been continued in spite of very heavy loss by interests which are perhaps not normally the Canadian Northern, but are certainly very closely identified with the Canadian Northern. I do not know, gentlemen, that I have anything more to add as to why we came to make these agreements, or as to what I think the effect has been in respect of outside competition, which as I have already explained briefly, is that our agreement has enabled the competition to live, and not, as in the United States case, sought to crush the competition. If we had sought to crush it, I will submit that we have been unfortunate in our efforts, for not only has the Uranium Company not ceased to exist, but it has consistently increased its business.

Mr. Guiler: Objected to on the ground that the witness shows no basis for statement in regard to unremunerativeness of £2 rate and no personal knowledge as to the reasons why Guion, Beaver &c. Lines, went out of business or that the reason given was correct and no 3284 knowledge that the Uranium Line is backed by the Canadian Northern Railroad interests and that the conclusions are conjectural and not backed up by any facts testified to.

Q. Have you any figures as to the percentage of business carried by the lines outside of the Conference? A. The non-conference lines, the non-pool lines, perhaps, to call them correctly, in 1908 carried 16.42 per cent of the westbound business. In 1909 they carried 12 per cent. I can explain that, I think, very easily by reminding you that in 1909 the Russian Volunteer people went out of the business, the Russian East Asiatic Company joined it and the Uranium 3285
Company ceased sailings for a time, but in 1910 their carryings went up to 18.48 per cent of business. In 1911 they went up to 23.66 of the business, whereas in 1912, up to July 31st, they carried 22.95 per cent of the business. Eastbound, the situation is much the same. In 1908 the non-pool lines carried 9.09 per cent of the business, in 1909, 6.46, in 1910, 11.13, in 1911, 12.77, in 1912, up to July 31st, they carried 9.84. The carryings probably of the eastbound business, are, of course, much stronger in the second half of the year. I think that will probably prove that.

3286 Arthur Belcher Cauty

I think that amply shows that if our efforts had been to drive out this competition they have not been very successful.

Mr. Guiler: Objected to on the ground that the witness has no knowledge of the alleged facts testified to and is unwarranted in drawing his conclusion from them and that is conjectural.

Q. Now, Mr. Cauty, from your experience with the shipping business in all these years what would you say as to the probable result of such agreements now 3287 existing among the lines being put an end to? A. Well, that again is rather a difficult question, because we have the opinion of certain of the managers that perhaps now we shall not see a return to the severe competition and low rates of former years.

Q. I believe that Mr. Ismay said he thought that at the present time, perhaps, the shipping people had got more sense than they had in the olden days? A. Well, I must say, of course, that is an expression of opinion, and anything I say would only be an expression of opinion; but my own opinion is undoubtedly that we could not continue to maintain the business on a satisfactory normal level without agreements. I 3288 do not think it is possibly, the jealousies of the different lines and the different interests are too keen, and given that unrestrained competition and low rates there is only one conclusion that one could expect, and that is the elimination of all the weaker lines and the monopoly in the hands of the stronger lines.

Mr. Guiler: I object to the conclusion of the witness as to the elimination of weaker lines and resultant monopoly as being conjectural, fanciful and entirely without any basis upon fact and too remote for consideration by the Court.

Q. What effect do you think that would have upon the character of the services rendered to the travelling public? A. I think the services rendered to the travelling public would be very much curtailed.

Mr. Guiler: Objected to on the same ground.

Q. And frequency of sailings? A. And frequency of sailings and accommodation on board ship would all suffer. In fact, I think that those who cross the Atlantic, those mercantile interests which require constant communication across the Atlantic, would all be very seriously prejudiced by a termination of rate agreements, pooling agreements, between the lines. 3290

Mr. Guiler: Same objection.

Q. I understand, Mr. Cauty, that you have produced, or will produce, as far as possible, everything in the possession of your company as required by the United States District Attorney in addition to such documents as they advise you they already have? A. Yes. We have all along been most desirous of giving every information that the Government desire, and we are now engaged in getting out documents which Mr. Crim asked for this morning. We have a good many already in hand, and when we get them we will send them up. 3291

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION by Mr. Crim:

Q. Mr. Cauty, I understand you to testify on cross-examination that the purpose of establishing £4 as a standard of compensation was to deter a company from carrying more than its allotment? A. May I say to remove any inducement to the company to carry more than its allotment. I think perhaps that would be a more correct term.

Q. Likewise it was fixed on that basis of £4 so as to not compensate a line that had not carried its allot-

3292 ment to the extent of a profit for being a drone? A. Well, I hardly think that is correct, Mr. Crim, because supposing a line is overcarrying largely, and you can get a considerable number of £4 without having to do anything for it, it is not a bad business. The check really was on the line that overcarried; there are other considerations. There are other clauses in the agreement which require lines to carry their percentage, and it would be brought under operation in connection with a line that was short of its percentage, in so far as that line would require ultimately to reduce its rate, would be obliged to reduce its rate.

3293 Q. If the £4 gave the line under its percentage a profit there would be a substantial incentive to become a drone, would there not? A. Yes. If it was left and allowed to draw £4, and do no work, I should say it would be very profitable, but that would not be permitted.

Q. Now, the tide of immigration, in so far as third-class is concerned, between America and Europe is largely dependent upon the prosperity of the United States, is it not? A. Very largely, sir.

Q. And that immigration has increased greatly during the past few years? A. No, I should not say it had. I think the figures are all available. I think 3294 you will find we never touched 1907.

Q. Well, from 1905 to 1911 there has been a high tide of immigration, has there not, to the United States? A. 1907 has been the biggest year there has ever been. We have never touched that since. In fact 1908, as you know, was a very bad year.

Q. Do you attribute the bad year of 1908 to the panicky condition of affairs in America? A. Yes, we did, sir.

Q. Do you recall that just previous to 1895 we went through the most serious panic in America since the Civil War? A. I cannot say that I do.

Q. Do you remember the condition of financial affairs generally in America in 1893? A. Twenty years ago? Well, I cannot say that I do sufficiently clear to answer you "yes."

Mr. Beecher: Well, counsel will concede that 1893 was a panic year in the United States? A. I concede that. I do not remember the circumstances.

Mr. Crim: Thousands of corporations failed all through America. Wheat sold at forty-nine cents a bushel and corn at nineteen cents a bushel. Would not that condition in America have a very material effect upon the steamship business? A. I should think 3296 it would.

Q. Might not that have contributed very greatly to these lines going into bankruptcy and insolvency as you have indicated? A. Tell me what was that—1893?

Q. 1893. A. May I refresh my memory?

Q. The period from 1892 to 1896? A. The National Line went out of business in 1892, the Monarch Line out of the passenger business in 1888, the Guion Line failed in 1894, the Inman Line went into liquidation in 1888, and with regard to the Beaver Line I do not know when they were bought. But I have no doubt that any line that was in existence in those days that you speak of would have felt the strain 3297 very severely. There is no question about it. We did in 1908. But I think the agreement that was in existence in 1908 helped us very materially and softened the blow.

Q. Do you apprehend that if Agreement A. A. were abandoned that the steamship business would be more or less demoralized? A. I think so, sir.

Q. First-class rates would go down? A. I think so.

Q. Second-class rates would go down? A. I think so.

3298 Q. Freight rates would go down? A. I do not think it would affect freight. I have no reason to think it would affect the freight rates. Freight rates are worked so absolutely independently of our passenger rates.

Q. Third-class rates would go down? A. I think so.

Q. What has been the percentage of increase in the steamship business during the past twenty years? A. I am afraid I cannot answer you that question, sir. I can get it for you. I could not answer you that off the book.

3299 Q. There has been an increase of one hundred per cent or more in the number of vessels plying between Europe and America, has there not? A. Well, yes; I should imagine you were quite correct, without looking it up.

Q. And the capacity of these vessels has increased commensurately? A. It has.

Q. And the freight business between the United States and Europe has increased commensurately so as to justify the new vessels with their enormous capacity? A. Well, I should say the freight business suffered a long period of very serious depression. It was only at the end of last year and this year it has 3300 again begun to approach what we hope will prove to be a normal condition again.

Q. It sometimes happens, or has happened, that just subsequent to these competitive fights that the business has increased very greatly, has it not? I will direct your attention to the experience of the Hansa Line when that fight was on between the steamships plying between America and Sydney, I believe? A. May I refresh my memory from these notes (indicating)?

Q. Yes. A. Well, in 1895, which was the first continental pool agreement, that was the year in which the westbound carryings to America totalled 328,000 and that declined until 1898 when it reached 274,000, and for subsequent years it showed a steady increase; 1899, 1900, 1901, until the high water mark of 1907 was reached. It has not been reached since, of course, as you know.

Q. And the larger the number of emigrants transported the cheaper the cost of transportation? A. Undoubtedly by each ship.

Q. The larger vessels engaged in transporting third-class passengers carry them, and at considerably less cost than the smaller capacity vessels? A. I think, sir, you want to prevent a misconception creeping in, to bear in mind my answer applies to the individual ship, whether there are a million passengers going to the United States or only 2,000 the cost of transporting them need not vary if you put the same number into each ship. For instance, if you have one ship carrying 2,000 passengers—it is an absurd argument—but suppose those were the only passengers going to the United States, there is no reason why she could not carry them as easily as 500 vessels carrying a million.

Q. Exactly. A vessel with the capacity of 25,000 tons will carry passengers at much less cost relatively than the ship of 10,000 tons? A. I think it would be fair to say that a modern ship can carry passengers much cheaper than an old ship because of her improved design, and the more economical use of her space. For instance, we have ships now of 10,000 tons which cannot carry passengers economically anyhow, but we have also ships at much about the same size which when full, will carry the passengers at much about the same cost as our big ships when full, but the balance, as far as there would be a difference, would be in favor of the big ships.

3303

3304 Q. Is that your experience and information with regard to lines other than the White Star? A. No, sir; the White Star, but I can safely say that is the experience of any steamship company.

Q. So that most economical way to transport an emigrant is today approximately a 25,000 ton vessel sailing across the Atlantic in about seven days? A. Yes, at a moderate steam.

Q. Is that a moderate steam, seven days? A. I did not catch how much you said.

Q. I said seven days? A. I should give eight days. When you get seven days you are getting up to twenty 3305 knots.

Q. When you increase the speed of your vessel to five or six days you increase the cost of transporting the passenger? A. Very, very much.

Q. Likewise when you reduce the capacity of your vessel to 7,000 or 8,000 tons requiring fourteen days you increase the cost of transporting the emigrant? A. Would you kindly repeat the question.

Q. When you decrease the capacity of the vessel to 7,000 or 8,000 tons and extend the time to fourteen days you increase the cost of transporting the emigrant? A. That is a very long time. I can hardly conceive that time. It might, if it was a modern ship, 3306 it might be a cheap ship to operate. It is not the ship I should build if I had the money, but it is a cheap ship to operate.

Q. Now, as I understand you this morning on direct-examination to say that there were agreements with regard to freight? A. Yes.

Q. What is the nature of those agreements? A. Well, I am sorry to say as I think I told you this morning, I am not anything like as fully aware with the trade arrangements of our company as I am with the passenger arrangements. I know that the trade rates are arranged according to classification, and lines exchange duties from time to time as to what they should be. They are controlled more or less by the difference in trade. When trade is good, and more than enough to take up the accommodation offered the freights are increased.

Q. You represent several lines that operate under A. A.? A. You speak of me personally?

Q. Yes. A. At the meeting I represent the White Star, American, and the Dominion Lines, usually in conjunction with Mr. Ismay.

Q. Now, has any one of those lines received any special benefit from the pool as contracted with the 3308 others that you represent? A. No, sir; I should say we benefit from the pool and the other agreements. The whole structure is really one.

Q. A. A. alone would not be sufficient to maintain the stability of rates. It is only in connection with the agreements that are made with the other lines? A. There have been agreements with regard to third-class business in the past without first and second-class business, but taken as a whole A. A., and the first and second-class agreements are very much more attractive than the situation which went, when only A. A. was put in. We should be very sorry to see the first and second-class agreements cancelled.

Q. I think that we passed over a question I de- 3309 sired to ask you with respect to the fight occasioned by the U. S. Line from New York, with freight. Are you familiar with the fight that was made there? A. I am not.

Q. In substance the Royal Commission reports that subsequent to that fight it was found that trade between the two countries had increased accordingly? A. Subsequently to the fight.

Q. Subsequently to the fight? A. No, I am not acquainted with that.

Q. Do not you think those competitive fights tend to bring about greater energy and intercourse between two countries? A. I doubt it very much, but in any case the United States is taking care that the third class emigrant into the country is not increased too much, are they not? Their policy is rather to restrict emigration.

Q. Would you make the same reply with respect to first and second-class passengers? A. No, sir; I do not think the same conditions apply with respect to first and second-class passengers. Our first-class very largely consists of Americans who come over here for 3311 their holidays.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION by Mr. Guiler:

Q. Mr. Cauty, there are one or two other things I want to ask you. I want to know whether you have ever had any practical experience with the control stations between Russia and Germany? A. Do you mean have I personally visited them? No, sir.

Q. So you personally do not know for what reason the individual emigrant is sent back from those control stations to his home, and not allowed to go through? A. I may tell you that personally you 3312 would find very few steamship managers in Liverpool who have been to the control stations.

Q. I was asking your experience? A. I would like to tell you we have had explanations with regard to the control stations which we have every reason to think are true, and my reply to that form of question with regard to the control stations was based on information given to us by our German friends, and with the knowledge of associating the agreements of the other Continental Lines who, I think, are a little closer up to the conditions existing in Germany, and who accept them as correct, and we accepted them as correct.

Q. When you testify with regard to the control of stations, you testify not from your own knowledge, but from what the Hamburg Line, and the North German Lloyd told you, and the Holland, and the Red Star have told you, and not from personal knowledge? A. As to the White Star Line having had to get a license from the German Government for doing emigration business.

Q. You had no practical experience in crossing the control stations, or in passing them? A. I have not attempted to go through the control stations as an emigrant on any occasion.

Q. So that if, as has been testified to before in this hearing, the emigrants have been turned back simply because they held Uranium Line tickets and without any further question, you cannot say that it was because they have violated any regulation of the German laws—

Mr. Beecher: I should object to the form of the question as not correctly stating any evidence that has been given.

Mr. Guiler: I understand it has, Mr. Beecher. We put witnesses on the stand here who testified that they were merely questioned what kind of steamship ticket they had and when they said Uranium tickets they were told to go back.

3315

Mr. Beecher: That may be, Mr. Guiler, but there has been no testimony that the reason has been because they hold Uranium Line tickets, and not because the German regulations prohibited the passage of emigrants holding tickets on lines which have not secured authority to pass their proposed passengers through the control stations.

By Mr. Guiler:

Q. Have you ever studied the laws in regard to passing these control stations or looked them up? A. I think I can produce you the law under which we have our license from Germany?

Q. No, I asked you if you had looked up those laws, and if you can testify from your own knowledge as to the requirements of passing through? A. No, I cannot say personally. I have not studied those laws.

Q. But you got your information from the North 3317 German Lloyd, the Hamburg-American Line, and the Holland-American Line in regard to that? A. And the Red Star Line also.

Q. So that as to those cases we have put in evidence previously you cannot testify from your own knowledge as to the particular reasons why they were turned back? A. No, sir; I cannot, but I have every reason to believe that what I have testified is correct.

RE-CROSS EXAMINATION by Mr. Beecher:

Q. I have one or two questions, Mr. Cauty. You testified in answer to Mr. Crim that in your opinion
3318 without the A. A. and other similar agreements all classes of passenger rates would go down. Is it your opinion that that reduction would be permanent? A. You mean if no agreements were established?

Q. If no agreements were established? A. I do, yes, I think it would be a very very heavy blow on the North Atlantic trade and I think it would be a check to the progress in the conditions on the Atlantic which have been so marked of late years.

Q. Well, now, after those low rates had taken their effect of putting out of business the weaker lines, what would be the—

3319

Mr. Guiler: I think you are assuming something there, Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beecher: He is testifying that that is his opinion.

Q. What would be the inevitable result? A. I think in my testimony I said the result of this competition, if it was left to reach its natural conclusion, would be to drive out the weaker lines and secure a monopoly for the stronger lines. Is there any need to say more? We all know what monopoly means.

Q. So that when that situation was reached it might be assumed that not only the accommodation and the service would be less—

3320

Mr. Guiler: I think he has said all that before.

The Witness: It would not be the millennium. I am sure we need not emphasize the fact that monopoly stands for all that is bad in American eyes. I think the monopoly might be used to the disadvantage undoubtedly of the travelling public and the merchant on both sides.

Q. The result would not in your opinion be favorable in the end to the travelling public, shippers, merchants and anyone else? A. Exactly.

3321

Q. In considering the cost of carrying passengers in the big ships it was not directly stated, but I assume that the proposition that it would be cheaper to so carry them must be based on the assumption that the ships carry the full complement, or substantially so? A. Yes, I emphasized that too, I think. In answering Mr. Crim, I dealt with large numbers on each individual ship, that one ship carrying 2,000 would carry them just as cheap as 500.

Q. You certainly could not carry a few emigrants on a large ship as cheaply as on a small ship? A. Oh, no.

3322 Q. And in considering the cost of carrying in the large ships you are referring chiefly to the operating case and there would be still taken into account the increased capital charges resulting from the cost of the big ships? A. Undoubtedly that has to be taken into account.

Q. These big ships which carry economically when full may have a capital account two or three, or even five times, larger than that of smaller ships? A. They have undoubtedly.

Q. In relation to the question of the speed of ships; in this connection am I right in supposing it is cheaper 3323 to feed third-class passengers on a comparatively slow voyage rather than pay the coal charges for a quick trip? A. Undoubtedly.

Q. There is nothing much more expensive than speed, and any increase of speed means an enormous increase of the coal cost? A. Not only the coal cost but you take up far more of the ship with engines and boilers.

By Mr. Crim:

Q. Every increase from seven days? A. Undoubtedly

By Mr. Beecher:

3324 Q. Not merely from seven days, but a ship with small engines and a very small coal consumption may cross the ocean in ten or twelve days very much more cheaply than one which crosses in seven or eight days? A. Oh, yes. You get also very much more space. You require less room for engines, boilers and coal. You have a practical example in the "Mauretania" and "Lusitania," that carry practically no cargo at all, and they are 32,000 tons.

Q. You stated, in your opinion, one result of the pool was to enable outside lines to continue in the business that would be otherwise impossible. Will you explain exactly how you reach that result? A. Well, I think I can repeat myself in pointing out that when lines are working without agreements, as we have worked in the past, they all appear to be very ready to protect their own trade, and there has been no hesitation in going down to unremunerative rates. We have no reason to believe that if outside competition were to arise again, and there was no agreement, any line that was particularly attacked by such outside competition would at once retaliate and retaliate very severely. In the case of the Uranium Company the 3326

Holland-American Line is the one particularly affected by the competition, and the Holland-American Company is a company of considerable resources, and a well managed company, and it is not to be conceived that they would calmly submit to the Uranium Company coming in and under-quoting them—that is the pith of the whole thing, an outside company comes in and voluntarily quotes lower rates—without retaliating very severely, and I think they would retaliate very effectively. I think they would be able to drive the outside competition from their port. In the case of the pool we do not fight. The term "fighting steamer" is a misnomer; because if you are fighting you not only receive blows but you give them and all we have been doing has been to put on a ship at a rate somewhere about the rate the Uranium Company was charging, not under. I think probably if there had not been the agreement, they probably would have had a fleet of ships sailing against the Uranium Company at less rates.

3327

Mr. Guiler: Objected to as a conclusion, opinion, conjectural and not based on any facts known to the witness as testified to by him.

3328 Q. In other words, what you do is to lessen the blow directed against the Conference Lines by outsiders? A. That is what we do. We say if this ship is left alone at cut rates it will draw a large amount of custom from us, and we put on a ship about the same rate, usually a little higher.

Q. It is self-evident, I suppose, but am I right in understanding the very existence of agreements, of Conference Lines, and stable rates, affords an opportunity to the outsider to fill his vessels with passengers at a lesser rate? With a maintenance of the rates of the Conference Lines he would not be able to 3329 do so? A. That is undoubtedly the case.

Mr. Guiler: Mr. Cauty, the fair share of the business you have spoken of as somewhat smaller is like the Irishman's share of the whiskey—it is at the bottom? A. Oh, no. It is rather interesting when you hear sympathizers of the Uranium Company saying that the Conference ship was put on with the idea of taking all they can get. What do they think the Uranium ship is put on for? The answer is undoubtedly to get all they can. If we put out a ship at a ten dollar rate you could justly accuse us of attacking her unfairly, because we would be using the resources of the Conference Lines on what was mani-

3330 festly a ridiculous rate. But we do not do that; we have never done that. The Conference has kept its rate up almost invariably at a higher level than the Uranium Company. It is the Uranium Company that has set the pace and then squealed because something has followed.

Q. There is one case in evidence where you have gone below already? Can you say as a general thing? A. You say there is one. If you can say there is one case of evidence I am quite satisfied, because we have been fighting for three years, off and on. I won't reply to that.

3331

Mr. Beecher: Mr. Cauty, in referring to the Uranium Steamship Line and its connection with the Canadian Northern Railway Company, may I ask whether this expression from the memorandum submitted to Congress by President Taft, in signing the Panama bill, meets with your approval: "The difficulty is that the interest of the railroad company is so much larger in its railroad, and in the maintenance of its railroad rates, than in making a profit out of the steamship line, that it can afford temporarily to run its vessels for nearly nothing in order to drive out of the business independent steamship lines, and thus obtain complete control of the shipping in the trade (through the canal), and regulate the rates according to interest of the railroad company"?

3332

Mr. Guiler: Objected to on the ground that no connection has been shown between the Canadian Northern Railroad and the Uranium Line.

A. Yes. I think that is always a possibility in connection with steamship lines connected with railroad companies.

By Mr. Guiler:

3333

Q. You agree with President Taft? A. Yes, and I think it is safer to do so.

Mr. Guiler: I think we must thank Mr. Cauty for the frankness with which he has answered all the questions put to him on behalf of the Government.

The Witness: I am very much obliged to you.

Mr. Crim: We are very much obliged to you, Mr. Cauty, for giving us the benefit of your experience.

Mr. Guiler: I have here, certain letters produced by the White Star Company, which I desire to put in later.

Mr. Spooner: Have they been produced here?

Mr. Guiler: They have been produced here, yes; I suppose that may be done, Mr. Burlingham?

Mr. Burlingham: Yes.

Mr. Guiler: Then there are circular letters of Mr. 3457
Peters which were produced at the hearing at Liverpool and about which I desire to confer with Mr. Dorr, produced by Mr. Ismay. These have already been marked in evidence in Liverpool as a body and now I wish to confer with Mr. Dorr in regard to the same, and possibly eliminate some that we do not think material. There are other minutes of the meetings of the Atlantic Conference held in Liverpool, the North Atlantic Passenger Conference, which have already been marked in evidence, but which I desire also to go over later, and possibly eliminate the greater part of them. That may be done, may it not?

Mr. Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Dorr: Mr. Beers, as I recall it, earlier in the 3458 case, the Cunard Company in answer to certain subpoenas stated that a search had failed to show in their files papers which came within the terms of the subpoena, is that correct, Mr. Beers?

Mr. Beers: That is my recollection. We produced all the documents in the office of the agents here in New York, which could be found and it is my recollection that we offered to produce anything called for from Liverpool, if on looking over the record, the Government finds anything that was not supplied at that time that we can supply, and if you will let me know, I will produce it.

Mr. Guiler: I would like to have on the record, also, 3459 that the Hamburg American Line will produce certain letters and correspondence called for by the subpoena issued sometime prior to this, and I would like to reserve the right to put that correspondence in later.

Mr. Spooner: That is being collated and will be translated. It was just about the time we broke up and I supposed it had been delivered to you. If it is not, I will see that it is. It is in my office. It all relates to the fighting ship business as I recollect it.

3460 Mr. Dorr: As to these letters that have been produced by Mr. Shipman, or copies of them, it would hardly seem necessary to have them written out by the stenographer, and with the consent of counsel, they will be sent directly to the printer.

Mr. Spooner: You consider those taken in the testimony at Liverpool already in evidence?

Mr. Guiler: Yes.

Mr. Dorr: As I recall it, there was a stipulation that the testimony might be taken at Liverpool.

Mr. Spooner: A stipulation that Mr. Ismay's testimony might be taken.

Mr. Guiler: And any other witness that the Govern-
3461 ment desires. I understand that was so.

Mr. Spooner: No, sir; not to my recollection.

Mr. Dorr: Have you any objection to Mr. Cauty's testimony?

Mr. Spooner: I have not seen it.

Mr. Beers: On page 936, I said, "I should like to have it appear on the record that the examination to be had in Liverpool is only for the purpose of taking the testimony or deposition of Mr. Ismay, and of such experts as to foreign law as Mr. Burlingham may desire to call.

"Mr. Guiler: Also that the examination of Mr. Ismay will undoubtedly entail a calling for various papers and documents at the same time as the exam-3462 ination is going on," and I said, "I would like to enquire on the record as to the date of the next hearing which is to be had in New York after the testimony of Mr. Ismay has been taken in Liverpool."

Mr. Guiler: And I think Mr. Spooner said at that time, that any other witness we might think it necessary to take the testimony of, he would not object to it.

Mr. Bullowa: I want to reserve an objection to that testimony. Whether I shall insist upon it later or not, I will notify the Government.

Mr. Spooner: I don't want to make any point on it, and I do not mean to if I can just look over the testimony, which I will proceed to do. I want to reserve the right to move to strike out the testimony taken at Liverpool, except Mr. Ismay's. 3463

Hearing adjourned until Friday, November 1st, 1912, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, 3464

against

HAMBURG - AMERIKANISCHE-PACKETFAHRT - ACTIEN - GESELLSCHAFT, and others, Defendants.

Before:

Charles E. Pickett, Esq., Examiner.

New York, November 1, 1912.

Hearing resumed pursuant to adjournment. 3465

Appearances:

Henry A. Wise, Esq., Goldthwaite H. Dorr, Esq., Henry A. Guiler, Esq., for Petitioner.

Messrs. Choate & Larocque, by Nelson Shipman, Esq., for Norddeutscher Lloyd, et al.

Messrs. Lord, Day & Lord, by Lucius H. Beers, Esq., and Allan B. A. Bradley, Esq., for Cunard Line, et al.

Ralph J. M. Bullowa, Esq., personally for the Russian East Asiatic Company, et al.

3466 Mr. Bullowa: I think before this proceeding goes on, I shall put on the record that Mr. Beecher stated he understood this hearing this morning was simply for the purpose of respondents, if they desired, to put on a witness and that when he found out he could not secure the witness he had made other engagements, and told me he was going up to General Sessions and that Mr. Burlingham would be engaged before Judge Ward on a motion in the Titanic matter.

Mr. Dorr: Did he ask to have an adjournment; do you ask that for him now?

Mr. Bullowa: I do not want to make any request in his behalf; I only want to put down his understanding of it.

3467 Mr. Bradley: Are you authorized to make any request on his behalf?

Mr. Bullowa: I don't know that I am.

Mr. Bradley: Do you know that you are not?

Mr. Guiler: I think the hearing was put over until this morning; that is what you asked.

Mr. Bullowa: No; my understanding was—I won't be positive that it is correct—my understanding was, and confirmed by Mr. Beecher, that the Government had rested yesterday, and that the hearing would be adjourned until November 11th, but that if we desired a hearing this morning to put on a witness, we should have the right to do so.

3468 Mr. Dorr: I think the record will show the Government rested and subsequently by consent of counsel, and before that was recorded, the Government stated it might desire to offer other evidence.

Mr. Beers: That was my understanding of it.

Mr. Bradley: That is my recollection of what took place.

Mr. Dorr: I think in the absence of any authorized appearance for Mr. Beecher and Mr. Burlingham, perhaps an adjournment might be taken without proceeding with the examination of the witness.

3469

Mr. Beers: I ought to state on the record that on hearing from the United States Attorney this morning, I communicated with Senator Spooner personally on the telephone and he requested that the hearing this morning, proceed. I told him it was the purpose of the Government to examine Mr. Winter, and all the Senator asked was that his right to cross-examine be reserved.

Mr. Dorr: I have no objection to that.

Mr. Bullowa: I reserve the right to cross-examine for Mr. Beecher as well. Is that understood, Mr. Dorr?

3470

Mr. Dorr: Well, it seems to me that Mr. Winter is a witness who can readily be called by the defendants and any matters they desire to bring out—it seems to me that the cross-examination of Mr. Winter as a witness, the witness being in the employ of the defendants, he can readily be called by the defendants if they desire to examine him.

Mr. Beers: I think I can agree on behalf of Mr. Winter that he will appear at the request of any of the defendants for examination.

Mr. Winter: Certainly.

HERMANN WINTER, sworn on behalf of the Petitioner, testified as follows: 3471

Direct-examination by Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Winter, what was your occupation in 1908? A. I was with the North German Lloyd as passenger manager.

Q. How long have you been with the North German Lloyd? A. Since 1885.

Q. With what department of the business were you connected during that time? A. Practically, entirely the Passenger Department, and gradually assuming the management of the office.

3472 Hermann Winter

Q. In 1908, did you become a member of the so-called Small Committee? A. I did.

Q. What time in 1908 was that? A. Approximately in May, I should say; May or June, for a term of three months.

Q. Were you present at a meeting at which this Small Committee was designated? A. The Small Committee was practically designated under cable instructions from the other side.

Q. Will you state the circumstances in your own way, Mr. Winter, as to the method by which you were 3473 designated to become a member of the Small Committee? A. The companies on the other side desired that certain competition be met on this side—

Q. Will you just confine your answer to the method by which you were designated? A. And cabled instructions here that a committee of three be appointed.

Q. To whom were those instructions sent? A. To all the lines here.

Q. Were they communicated to your line in that letter or were general instructions sent to a common agent to notify the various lines? A. There were two or three cables received here by the various lines.

Q. What did those lines then do? A. Met in the Conference rooms.

3474 Q. They were accustomed, were they not, to meet in conference? A. To discuss business affairs, yes.

Q. And that was at one of these meetings of the Conference that this matter of the designation of the Small Committee was taken up? A. It was.

Q. And what was the Conference at which it was taken up; what was the name of that Conference? A. The Continental Conference.

Q. Continental or Atlantic? A. Continental.

Q. What lines did the Continental Conference include at that time? A. Hamburg American, North German Lloyd, the Red Star, Holland America Line, French Line, the Russian American Line.

3475

Q. Was there any representative of the White Star Line present at that meeting? A. Indirectly, in the Red Star.

Q. Any representative of any other British Line? A. No, I believe not.

Q. Was a Mr. Lawson Sandford, the secretary of the Conference, present as secretary of the Conference? A. Yes, as secretary of the Conference.

Q. Did he record the proceedings of what occurred at that meeting? A. Merely the designation of the committee.

Q. Did the instructions which had been received from the various lines abroad which were discussed at this Conference, include the designation of any particular persons to act on this Small Committee? A. No; they were to be named here.

Q. It was, then, a matter of discussion at this meeting of the Conference as to what persons should be made members of this Small Committee? A. No; the various interests in the business were selected to represent us on the committee, for representation on the committee.

Q. I don't quite catch that, Mr. Winter? A. Well, the Continental Lines interested in Continental business, then the British Lines as far as they were represented in that connection.

Q. The representatives of these various lines at this meeting of the Conference discussed what persons should be designated? A. What interests.

Q. What interests should be represented? A. What interests should be represented.

Q. And then, if for instance, the North German Lloyd, it was decided that the North German Lloyd should be represented, then it was left to the North German Lloyd to designate the particular person who should represent it, is that it? A. No, not in that way. The North German Lloyd and the Hamburg

3478 Hermann Winter

American Line represented the larger Continental interests, and were to have a representative on the committee.

Q. How was the particular person who should represent them to be designated? A. That was a matter of experience; his business experience.

Q. Who selected him, the various persons who were assembled at the Conference? A. Yes.

Q. It was not left to the line to designate the particular person? A. No.

Q. At that meeting, they discussed what interests
3479 should be represented on this Small Committee, that is, what line and what person should represent those particular interests? A. Yes.

Q. And what persons were selected at that meeting? A. Mr. Lederer, Hamburg American Line; Mr. Nyland for the Holland America Line, and myself.

Q. How long did that personnel serve? A. The arrangement was one member to serve three months, another for two months, and the last for one month, so that all the lines might rotate.

Q. What other lines were represented on that Small Committee from time to time, other than the ones which you have mentioned? A. Subsequently, the 3480 American Line was represented through Mr. Farley, the Russian American Line through Mr. Strauss, Mr. Farley would be representative for the White Star.

Q. The White Star, as well as the American? A. Yes.

Q. Was any specific authority conferred upon this Small Committee at this meeting of the Conference at which the persons who were to be members of that committee were designated? A. During the first term, the committee had authority to select a steamer and to suggest a rate.

3481

Q. Was that power conferred by action of the various lines which were represented at the Conference here, or was that power conferred under explicit instructions from abroad? A. Under cabled instructions from abroad.

Q. The instructions, then, were in substance, that a committee should be selected? A. Exactly.

Q. And that it should have the power to designate a ship and suggest the rate? A. Suggest the rate.

Q. At which that ship should operate? A. Yes.

Q. And the rate was to be applicable to the steerage passengers only? A. Third-class passengers.

3482

Q. Third-class passengers only? A. Yes. You see, the lines judged the committee being on the spot would be better able to judge the matter.

Q. And the ship was to be designated which should sail at or about the time of the sailing of a steamer of a line which was not a member of the Conference? A. Of a competing line that was cutting into business.

Q. Of a line which was not a member of the Conference? A. Yes.

Q. What lines were there at that time which were not members of the Conference? A. More particularly the North West Transport Company.

3483

Q. That was the only line doing a steerage business in the North Atlantic trade that was not represented directly or indirectly in the Conferences you have mentioned? A. Practically.

Q. After the designation of this Small Committee, did that Committee hold meetings? A. Not regular meetings.

Q. Didn't the various members confer formally or informally? A. As the other line designated a steamer and published a rate, we met and consulted.

Q. As to what should be done? A. As to what shall be done.

3484 Hermann Winter

Q. Did the competing lines which you have mentioned from time to time, publish sailings and publish rates for steerage passengers on those sailings? A. They had not at that time, a fixed sailing list or fixed rate.

Q. Did they, from time to time, publish the fact that there would be a sailing? A. Yes.

Q. And that there would be a rate which was applicable to that particular sailing? A. Exactly.

Q. From time to time, then, your Committee ascertained that the competing line had so announced 3485 a sailing and published a rate? A. Yes.

Q. On learning of that, did your Committee designate a ship belonging to one of the lines which was a member of the Conference, and suggest a rate which should be published for that steamer? A. Yes.

Q. And that was the regular course of the business of that Committee? A. Yes.

Q. While you were a member of it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have used the word, "suggest," Mr. Winter, were the suggestions of the Small Committee as to the rate, followed by the lines to whom the suggestions were made? A. They usually were adopted.

Q. Do you recall any case in which they were not followed? A. Yes.

3486 Q. What was the procedure in those cases? A. That had to be reported to its home office and they raised an objection.

Q. And that objection was reported back to the Small Committee? A. No, they were allowed to proceed then and adopt the rate they chose.

Q. Was the fact of their objection indicated to the Small Committee? A. Yes; the line would say we object. Some lines objected to having their steamers designated.

Q. And would state the grounds of their objection? A. They would say they did not want to participate.

3487

Q. What lines were those? A. The Cunard Line one.

Q. What others? A. The White Star objected to this designation.

Q. The White Star Line did accept designations? A. It subsequently did; yes.

Q. Subsequently? A. Not for that very vessel possibly; for other vessels.

Q. Were there any other lines that objected to the designation? A. No. On the contrary, some of them asked for the designation.

Q. What lines asked for the designation? A. The Baltimore interests asked for the designation; the Canadian interests. 3488

Q. The Baltimore interests; what lines were they? A. They felt they were being affected.

Q. What lines do you refer to? A. The North German Lloyd; the Baltimore interest.

Q. The North German Lloyd is what you refer to as the Baltimore interests? A. Yes; the Canadian Pacific.

Q. To Hamburg? A. The Hamburg Line from Philadelphia.

Q. The Canadian Pacific? A. The Canadian Pacific from Montreal.

Q. Any others? A. The Allan Line from Montreal. 3489

Q. Any others? A. Not that I know of.

Q. They asked to be designated? A. To be designated.

Q. Did those requests for designation come at the time it was asked or immediately thereafter? A. Thereafter, as the line published the steamer at the lower rate, the other line would object and say we would like to be designated also so that we may compete.

Q. That is they objected— A. To the sole designation of one line.

3490 Hermann Winter

Q. How long did your committee continue to exercise the power of designation and the duty of making the suggestions of the rate? A. I should say approximately five or six months.

Q. What change was then made in the practice, if any? A. The committee was asked to recommend and suggest a rate to the other side, the home office.

Q. Was it asked to recommend the ship that was to be designated? A. Yes.

Q. And also to recommend a rate? A. Suggest a rate.

3491 Q. And how long did the committee continue to perform that function? A. Not more than three or four months.

Q. That brought it down to what time, Mr. Winter? A. I should say the middle of 1909.

Q. And what occurred then? A. The companies on the other side assumed the entire direction in that matter.

Q. In what way did the companies on the other side indicate their instructions in this regard to the companies on this side? A. They cabled the specific line instructing them to reduce their rate for a certain sailing to meet the competition.

Q. Did the instructions come from the home office 3492 of that particular line or from Secretary Peters? A. No, from the home office of the particular line to that line here.

Q. Are you familiar with the method by which that designation is going on? A. No, not now. They select on the other side.

Q. While you were a member of the Small Committee do you recall whether or not your committee suggested as to rates for the ships which you designated a published rate lower than the published rate of the competing line? A. Yes, on various occasions. That is, the published rate, not the net rate.

Q. That was the rate which was published to the public and which they were invited to buy tickets on? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Winter, I would like to get from you if I can some of the history of what was done under the various agreements which have been put in evidence; are you familiar with the various pool agreements of the Continental lines?

Mr. Beers: It is understood that evidence of what was done under agreements other than "AA" is received subject to our objection?

Mr. Guiler: That is understood.

3494

A. Fairly so.

Q. And with what was done under them? A. Yes.

Q. Let us start, if you will, with the agreement of 1892; between what lines was that agreement? A Practically the Continental lines only; covering Continental business.

Q. The lines which were engaged in carrying passengers and freight to or from the North Atlantic Continental ports? A. North Atlantic Continental ports, that is right.

Q. Did that agreement include the British lines? A. No.

Q. Or the Scandinavian lines? A. No, it did not.

3495

Q. At that time were there any Russian lines? A. No, no direct Russian lines.

Q. There were none? A. No.

Q. Did it include the Mediterranean lines? A. No, not the Mediterranean. There practically was no direct—that is, the Mediterranean service such as we understand it.

Q. It has grown up since that time? A. Yes.

Q. How long did that agreement of 1892 remain in effect? A. 1892 remained in effect—well, that agreement practically with slight amendments is in effect today.

3496 Hermann Winter

Q. Has it been continuously in effect during that whole time? A. Yes.

Q. And continuously acted upon during that time? A. Yes, between the Continental lines.

Q. Known as the N. D. L. V. Agreement? A. Yes.

Q. This agreement provided that the steerage traffic of the various lines that participated in it should be divided into certain percentages and it provides—the face of it—that a certain percentage should be allotted to the British lines, namely fourteen per cent? A. In arriving—

3497 Q. Refresh your recollection about it if you wish, Mr. Winter? A. Yes (referring to Petitioner's Exhibit No. 2). In arriving at some basis to formulate an agreement upon it naturally the division of the business as it was done by the statistics of ten years prior to that time are taken as the basis and it was found that the British lines practically had transported fourteen per cent of that business.

Q. Well, that provision then certainly of the fourteen per cent to the British lines did not mean there was any agreement with the British lines? A. No.

Q. You simply assumed that the fourteen per cent of the— A. Fourteen per cent was not available for 3498 Continental lines practically.

Q. And the remaining eighty-six per cent was apportioned among them? A. Exactly. In fact, it is stated in the next paragraph you see; it provides for an agreement later with the British lines.

Q. But that agreement was not entered into immediately after the 1892 agreement? A. No, it took some time to negotiate it.

Q. Until that agreement with the British lines was entered into I suppose that the various Continental lines were free to get as large a share of that fourteen per cent as they could? A. They had to arrange their service as far as possible to obtain their share of this business. Mind you, under the agreement every service, every line, is bound or obliged to get as many passengers as they can.

Q. That is, is bound to carry as nearly as possible its percentage? A. Get all the business it can.

Q. If it could carry more than its percentage? A. Of course, it advances its rate; that is regulated.

Q. I suppose to diminish its business? A. Somewhat by advancing the rate.

Q. Then the efforts of the line to secure additional business are only effective up to the point where it is receiving its allotted share and then it is bound by the terms of the agreement to take steps to raise its rate and thus diminish its share? A. The idea is if a line takes such effective methods in the way of competition to better its service and obtain a better share it will, of course, obtain a large revenue.

Q. But just as soon as it has any such measures which it takes so becoming effective in giving it a larger percentage of the business, then it is bound to take steps to diminish the amount of that business, is it not under the agreement? A. To an extent; not to diminish it, but to obtain a larger revenue also.

Q. It has got to keep on enlarging the rates until that time when it diminishes the business? A. There is a limit to that; it cannot be forced above a certain amount.

Q. But that figure above which it could not get— A. That is put on voluntarily sometimes; the lines have gone above that.

Q. And if it does not raise its rates the other lines can force it to raise its rates? A. No, they can reduce their rates to secure their own share. In fact at times they are at liberty to reduce.

Q. But according to the agreement which was finally adopted the successor of this agreement, the agreement of 1908, it was agreed, was it not, that the lines should take the step of raising rather than lowering it to equalize the percentages? A. Yes.

Q. In order that all the companies might get the largest revenue possible from that business? A. Yes.

Q. At the time this 1892 agreement went into effect was there any agreement between the various lines that were parties to it as to the rates which should be charged other than this general agreement which you say did regulate the rates? A. I don't quite understand.

3503 Q. Was there any agreement as to specified rates; as to what specific rates each line should charge should be? A. At the beginning of every year practically the basis of rates was established for each line.

Q. That is, was that established by each line separately or by the various lines in conference? A. The various lines practically notified of the rates they wanted to accept to begin with.

Q. And it was a matter of mutual discussion? A. Yes.

Q. And agreement or not? A. On the other side discussion and, I presume, understanding.

Q. And did that apply to the cabin business as well as the steerage business? A. No.

3504 Q. At that time, in 1892, then there was no understanding or agreement? A. 1892 was the first agreement they reached and it was the result of a disastrous competition that existed prior to that time.

Q. The causes of it we will go into subsequently. We are now concerned with what was actually done—

Mr. Bullowa: That is part of the history of it, isn't it, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. Dorr: I suppose this will all go into that ultimately.

Q. But in 1892 then at the time of this original agreement, there was no agreement as to the cabin rates or as to the division of the cabin business? A. No.

Q. Did such an agreement thereafter come into existence between the lines which were parties to this conference? A. Not for a division of the cabin business, but fixing minimum rates.

Q. When was such an agreement first adopted by the lines which were parties to this agreement, Government Exhibit No. 2?

3506

Mr. Beers: That is the Continental lines?
Mr. Dorr: Yes.

A. Approximately 1898 I believe; somewhere around there.

Q. Between 1892 and 1898 am I correct in understanding that there was no agreement between the Continental lines and the British lines? A. No direct agreement or understanding to work together.

Q. And there was no agreement as to a division of traffic? A. Not beyond that included there.

Q. Was there any agreement by which the Continental lines kept out of British traffic or the British lines kept out of Continental traffic? A. The efforts of the British lines I believe to obtain a larger share of the Continental business helped to an understanding ultimately.

Q. Helped to the agreement of 1898? A. Yes, the agreement of 1898.

Q. That is, at that time the British lines were seeking a larger part of the Continental business than they had heretofore been able to secure? A. Yes, they made various attempts at that.

Q. And that led to a revision of the earlier agreement of 1892? A. To an understanding as to how that business should be divided practically, or the field of operation divided: I think it was in 1898.

Q. Did it go—what was it, an oral understanding or was it an agreement in form as well as in substance? A. I think it was more in the form of an understanding; I don't think there was a permanent agreement of it.

Q. What British lines were parties to this understanding or agreement? A. The American Line, the White Star, Anchor Line, Allan State Line—that is out of existence now.

Q. That understanding or agreement came into existence about 1898? A. I think so approximately at that time.

3509 Q. And at the same time the provisions of the 1892 agreement of the Continental lines with some modifications were continued? A. Yes.

Q. How long did that state of affairs last? A. I think with slight amendments until 1902, the beginning of 1903.

Q. What occurred at that time? A. The Cunard Line which had been operating together with them withdrew.

Q. Had the Cunard been a member or a party to that agreement? A. Not necessarily a member, but it had co-operated to the extent of working under the same basis practically; that is, not disturbing matters.

3510 Q. Had it taken any measures to restrict its business to a particular share of the general business? A. No.

Q. Had it been under any agreement to advance its rates if it were getting a larger share of the business? A. It advanced its rates to obtain a larger proportion and found it was able to get it.

Q. It had advanced its rates from time to time? A. And had reduced it as it was necessary.

Q. And it had done that from the standpoint of obtaining the largest amount of traffic it could obtain at the most remunerative figures? A. Yes, but it always informed the other lines.

Q. Informed the other lines of those actions? A. Of those actions.

3511

Q. Of what action it had taken? A. Yes.

Q. That is, it had been acting— A. In harmony with it.

Q. In a general spirit of harmony without any agreement which restricted its rights— A. I think so; that is about the basis of it.

Q. To carry on its business as it thought the best interests of the line demanded? A. Yes.

Q. And the Cunard was engaged in the Continental traffic at that time? A. To a slight degree, yes.

Q. Not by running its ships directly? A. No, they were running by way of Liverpool.

3512

Q. Now, in 1902 or 1903, what action was taken by the Cunard? A. The Cunard at the invitation of the Hungarian Government started its own service from the Mediterranean; its Hungarian service.

Q. The Hungarian traffic prior to that had been regarded as Continental business? A. Exactly.

Q. And had gone through the northern ports? A. The northern ports.

Q. And it instituted the so-called Fiume service? A. Yes.

Q. Did the Cunard lower its Continental rates at that time? A. Oh, no.

3513

Q. One other thing before I pursue that further, Mr. Winter; had certain Mediterranean services been established by other lines prior to the establishment of the Fiume service by the Cunard Line? A. Yes, for the Italian traffic; only that.

Q. What were those lines which had gone into the Mediterranean? A. The North German Lloyd had gone in there, the Anchor Line had gone in more directly, the White Star had gone in by way of the Dominion Line and the Hamburg-American Line.

Q. And there were also certain Italian lines at that time? A. Yes.

Q. Which were running to Italian ports? A. Yes, the Fabre Line.

3514 Hermann Winter

Q. And those various lines entered into an agreement among themselves covering the steerage traffic? A. No. That is, there was a general understanding here as to the rates; the companies instructed their representatives here to meet and discuss what rates could be equitably charged; they were agreed upon and put into effect.

Q. Suggest what rates could be equitably charged or what rates could be effectively charged? A. No, for services rendered.

Q. The consideration of all the people you met was what the value of the services were or what would be 3515 an effective rate in order to get the business and to work the lines profitably? A. A line with a better service and better boats could get a better rate than a line with a slow boat and a comparatively poor reputation.

Q. And a real serious matter for discussion, Mr. Winter, was, was it not, the fixing of the rates of the various lines according to the attractiveness of those lines for the business? A. Certainly, that is the basis you have to fix your rate on.

Q. It was important to a line, we will say, with inferior facilities that the line with superior facilities should maintain a higher rate? A. Certainly.

3516 Q. Otherwise the line with the inferior facilities would not get the business? A. Yes.

Q. So that these conferences were primarily directed toward the question of relative rates of the various lines? A. Yes.

Q. What part in these conferences was the effort and desire to so fix relative rates that the relative proportions of business of the various lines would not be disturbed? A. There were no proportions fixed at that time.

Q. What concern was it then, we will say, of the Fabre Line, what rates should be charged by the North German Lloyd? A. Naturally it wanted to be put in a position to be able to secure its business?

3517

Q. What? A. To get its share of the business.

Q. Exactly, and in a rough way the shares of the various lines must have been prorated, at any rate in the minds of the conferees, must it not? A. Well, to an extent, yes, of course, but the amount of business offered was a guide also.

Q. At that time there was no definite agreement as to what particular share it would have? A. No.

Q. That is, the Fabre Line might contend it ought to have a larger share than the North German Lloyd was willing to concede it ought to have, and those differences as to what should be the relative proportions of business were also always discussed in conference? A. Yes.

Q. And matters of general adjustment? A. Yes.

Q. To get the rates in a general way adjusted so that the mass of business would in a general way conform or would be satisfactory to the various lines? A. These rates were discussed here and then submitted to the home offices abroad. If they approved of them they were charged.

Q. Now, was there not also, Mr. Winter, or was there or was there not an understanding at the same time that the lines which were running ships to Mediterranean ports should confine their business to Italian emigrants? A. Why, no; not for the Mediterranean lines.

Q. Not at that time? A. Not at that time.

Q. That is, at that time the Mediterranean lines were free to take as much continental business as they could obtain or that they desired to obtain? A. Yes, but all the lines avoided that.

Q. As a matter of fact they were not doing a very large continental business? A. No, they couldn't do it.

Q. Had they tried to do it? A. They couldn't do it, even if they tried.

Q. Had they tried to do it? A. Yes.

Q. And had not succeeded in getting it? A. They can't get it, no.

Q. Did the Cunard Line confine itself exclusively when it entered the Fiume service, exclusively to the Hungarian business as far as the steerage passengers were concerned? A. Coming this way, yes.

Q. On westbound? A. Westbound.

Q. How about the eastbound? A. Eastbound it competed for Italian business.

3521 Q. How about the eastbound Continental business, didn't the Italian lines and North German Lloyd and other lines— A. No.

Q. Didn't the Italian lines do any eastbound Continental business? A. No; very little; you cannot get it that way.

Q. They were unable to secure it? A. Yes.

Q. But they were competing for it? A. Yes; they never quoted rates. The Continental business is Italian lines.

Q. They did not quote rates? A. At that time they never did.

Q. So that at that time there was at any rate no
3522 formal agreement and, as you recall it, no understanding even? A. No.

Q. That the various Mediterranean lines should not be allotted to the Continental business. As a matter of fact, they were not doing it to any extent, and no definite restriction had been imposed upon them doing it; it was left to the ordinary working natural conditions at that time? A. That is it.

Q. And no attempt was made in any way to restrict or interfere with the play of those natural conditions at that time? A. No.

Q. That was the situation in 1902; there was this Continental agreement as to the North Atlantic and there was a collateral understanding or agreement with the British lines, or all the British lines other than the Cunard, and there were these understandings as to the fixing of rates which they endeavored to make mutually agreeable in the Italian trade? A. Yes.

Q. But no restriction as to the Continental business being done via the Mediterranean? A. Yes.

Q. And in 1902 the Cunard established its Hungarian business? A. Yes, probably 1903.

Q. And also as far as eastbound traffic went it competed for the Italian business? A. Yes.

3524

Q. The Cunard did not lower its rates at that time, or as an initial step at any rate? A. No.

Q. What steps, if any, were taken by the other lines? A. Why, a rate war broke out immediately.

Q. What do you mean by that; what did the other lines do? A. Well, the rate war resulted in the withdraw—

Q. I understand that; that is a pretty general question, but what did the other lines do?

Mr. Bullowa: Won't you let him answer the question in his own way? You ask your own questions and put everything in his mouth. Now let him have a chance to answer it.

3525

Mr. Dorr: I asked him to state specifically what the lines did.

Mr. Bullowa: I know; he is answering it in his own way.

A. Difficulties arose between the lines—

Q. I understand that—

Mr. Bullowa: Wait until he finishes and then object.

A. They reduced their rates.

Mr. Dorr: I don't think Mr. Winter wants to avoid answering the question directly when he understands what I want.

Mr. Bullowa: I think he is trying to and if it is not his understanding you can ask it over again. You are putting everything in his mouth. You have an idea what you want—

Q. Mr. Winter, what I desire you to do now is this: to state as specifically as you can what particular steps the various lines took at that time in relation to the fixing of their rates or sailings of their steam-3527 ers at the time the Cunard went into the Hungarian service; do you get what I have in mind? That is what I am trying to get is not a general statement as to what occurred, but, so far as you can give it to me, a specific statement as to what, for instance, your line did. It will be better to begin that way; what did the North German Lloyd do when the Cunard began its Fiume service? A. I would practically have to look that up if you want it as specific as all that.

Q. Well, by specific I don't mean what particular rates were charged, but did it make any changes in the service, put it that way? A. Naturally the Cunard did secure Hungarian business, not so much because the Cunard line entered their service, but because the 3528 Hungarian Government practically stopped Hungarian emigration by way of northern ports, and it led to a readjustment of all matters.

Q. That is, the Hungarian business as a block was withdrawn from the Continental lines which had theretofore been doing it all and dividing it up among themselves according to certain agreements? A. Yes. Well, had not divided the Hungarian business up.

Q. Only in so far as it was a part of the general Continental business? A. Yes.

Q. My question was misleading there. And the North German Lloyd did do certain things? A. All the lines practically reduced their rates to attract their business.

Q. To attract the Hungarian business? A. Yes, despite the restrictions placed upon it by the Hungarian Government.

Q. The Hungarian Government put certain restrictions in the way of Hungarians traveling via Continental ports? A. Yes.

Q. By Continental ports, when that phrase is used, you mean the North Atlantic ports? A. The North Atlantic Continental ports.

Q. And in order to counteract the Hungarian Government in attempting to divert the emigrant traffic 3530 to Fiume and the Cunard Line, under its agreement with the Cunard the various lines lowered their rates from Continental ports? A. Yes.

Q. Now, what other steps, if any, were taken by the Continental lines—the North German Lloyd and other lines—which were occasioned by the action of the Cunard Line? A. No further steps taken than that.

Q. You simply lowered the rates? A. Simply lowered the rates.

Q. Did they succeed by that method in regaining a portion of the Hungarian business? A. As usual these rate wars have always led to loss and ultimately led to 3531 a readjustment of method.

Q. Mr. Winter, I know you do not mean to do anything but answer my questions directly, but what my question was, if you will read it, you will find, I think, did not call for that particular answer. (Question read.) You see that question calls for a definite answer? A. It did.

Q. For how long did the Continental lines continue to reduce their rates in order to attract this business? A. I couldn't say offhand; it was not a very long period.

3532 Hermann Winter

Q. It was not a very long period? A. No, about a year.

Q. That would bring it to about 1904 approximately? A. 1905.

Q. Four or five? A. Yes.

Q. Did the Continental lines then restore their rates to what they had been? A. Gradually all rates were restored.

Q. Was any agreement at that time entered into between the Continental lines and the Cunard Line? A. I think that agreement resulted a little later than that.

3533 Q. In 1906 or 1907 was it? A. I would have to look that up.

Q. Was there any agreement prior to 1908 to which the Cunard was a party? A. No, not this business.

Q. Not steerage traffic? A. Not on it.

Q. So that gradually the rates which had been lowered by the Continental lines as a result of the Hungarian agreement for the Fiume traffic with the Cunard— A. It was not merely the Hungarian; other difficulties arose.

Q. What were the other difficulties? A. New steamers being put in.

Q. By what lines? A. By practically all the lines;

3534 the adoption of rates that secured a large proportion of this business against other vessels that had previously been in the service.

Q. Let's get that as specifically as we can, Mr. Winter.

Mr. Bradley: You asked for other causes and you might as well get them all down.

Mr. Dorr: That is what I want to go into.

Mr. Bradley: Perhaps he had some more to mention, I don't know.

Q. First you say an additional cause was the entrance of new steamers? A. Yes.

3535

Q. What new steamers and what lines have you got particularly in mind? A. All the lines practically improved their service; the Hamburg-American, North German Lloyd; we all put in new boats.

Q. You haven't in mind any particular steamers? A. No, sir.

Q. Or particular boats? A. No; all the lines put in better service.

Q. Were these difficulties in 1905 connected at all with the cabin business? A. No. Well, some of those, yes.

Q. In what way? A. The Kaiser boats came out, for instance, the North German Lloyd had secured a large proportion of the business. 3536

Q. And carrying at substantially the old rates? A. No, at higher rates; so boats were charging a higher rate because they were worth it.

Q. Because you had entered the business? A. They secured the business. The facilities they offered, the speed they made and the services they rendered.

Q. And the other lines thought the Kaiser rate ought to be proportionately higher? A. The other lines reduced their rates or adjusted their rates, and that brought around differences.

Q. You mean that the other lines thought that the rates on the Kaiser boats for example should be raised to such a point that the other lines could get their fair share of the business? A. Well, in one way. The adjustment came in on the Hamburg-American Line, also running at the same speed; she adopted a lower rate. 3537

Q. And the other lines thought that it was not fair? A. And the North German Lloyd naturally thought they ought to go to some other class, or adopt the same rate as the Kaiser boats.

Q. As the North German Lloyd? A. Yes, rendering the same service.

Q. And they regarded it as unfair that the Hamburg-American Line should run a boat of equal facilities at a lower rate? A. Exactly.

Q. And these differences in rates led to more or less, I suppose, ill feeling between the different lines; I don't mean personal ill feeling, but business ill feeling? A. Yes, it led to feuds between the different lines; reduction of rates.

Q. And when they once started fighting they fought tooth and nail? A. Yes; it extended to every class.

Q. How about the steerage rates of the new boats, the Kaiser and the Deutschland, was that also a factor 3539 in the difficulties? A. Their rate war is also effective on all classes of business.

Q. I am speaking now, not of the secondary effects, but the primary effects, where the rates which were charged by the Hamburg-American Line, we will say, for its Deutschland steerage business, was it thought that those rates were lower, we will say than the rates of the Kaiser Wilhelm? A. They were not.

Q. They were the same? A. Yes, they were the same.

Q. Then the fixing of the steerage rates is not one of the factors which led to the rate war? A. No, not at that time.

3540 Q. The lowering of the steerage rate was a result rather than a cause? A. A result rather than a cause.

Q. And the war had its inception— A. Probably in the differences of the cabin list.

Q. That war then in so far as the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American Line was concerned had its origin in a different cause from the war of the Continental lines against the Cunard Company for example—that is, so far as the Hungarian business went, the interest of the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American were one, I suppose? A. They didn't have any war; there was no war in the Hungarian business; merely an attempt to recover their business under restrictions placed upon them by Government action.

Q. That is to say, the reduction there was to meet an artificial condition created by the Hungarian Government? A. More particularly, yes.

Q. And in that matter there was no difference between the Hamburg-American and the North German Lloyd? A. No.

Q. And no occasion for a general rate war? A. It led to a general rate war.

Q. It led to a war eventually of those lines with 3542 the Cunard Line for example so as to secure for the Continental lines a portion of the Hungarian business? A. Indirectly; the North Continental lines reduced their rate and the Cunard Line had to follow.

Q. Yes; it would naturally lead to competition between the Cunard and Continental lines? A. Yes, but the Cunard did not follow very much.

Q. It had the advantage? A. It had the advantage.

Q. It had such an advantage that it was not compelled to reduce its rates so far? A. Yes.

Q. But what led to the struggle of the Continental lines among themselves; were the difficulties through the putting on of these new ships? A. New boats, yes, and difficulties arising by Governmental action. 3543

Q. You mean the action of the German Government? A. The Hungarian Government particularly.

Q. Now, Mr. Winter, were these difficulties as to the first and second cabin business adjusted? A. Yes, came to an understanding.

Q. By an agreement or understanding? A. We came to an understanding on the various minimum rates.

Q. And when that was done why the war measures as to the steerage rates ceased, I suppose? A. Practically.

Q. That was about to—when was that, in 19—? A. 1905 or '06.

Q. Were the British lines a party to the agreement as to the cabin rates? A. Yes, to an understanding at that time. That is, the proposition in 1905 practically failed.

Q. There was an understanding? A. There was an understanding that was practically put in operation, but it failed shortly thereafter.

Q. Were the Cunard a party to that? A. Well, they worked together with it; they were not a party to it.

3545 Q. But when you say they worked together with it, they did not start in on a campaign of rate cutting independently? A. No, the Cunard practically was free from all agreements since 1903.

Q. Now, then, this 1905 understanding or agreement you say did not last very long? A. It never went into operation fully.

Q. To what extent did it go into operation at all, if you can testify? A. The lines for self-protection particularly adopted certain minimum rates and adhered to them. There never has been a division among the lines of cabin business, Mr. Dorr; there cannot be.

Q. At any rate, there is none. Have you ever tried 3546 to make a division? A. You cannot make it; it has been tried over and over again but did not succeed.

Q. The lines, then, did make an attempt to make a division of first cabin business but found it impracticable? A. You cannot divide the cabin business.

Mr. Beers: Mr. Dorr asked you whether they tried to?

Q. Did they try to do it? A. Yes, it has been tried.

Q. When was that tried; under what agreement; do you mean to say they tried or tried to make an agreement? A. They tried to arrange some plan.

3547

Q. They tried to agree upon a plan? A. To agree upon some plan to adjust the cabin business that way

Q. But they never actually made an agreement to divide it? A. No.

Q. That was simply tentative negotiations? A. Yes.

Q. Which did not result in any agreement? A. Let us understand, Mr. Dorr. Prior to 1892 there was an indiscriminate rate war here; indiscriminate cutting—

Q. Are you answering my question as to whether the negotiations were tentative or not? A. I said yes.

3548

Mr. Bradley: That is not all the question.

Mr. Dorr: I think the witness has answered the question when he stated the negotiations were tentative. If that is not a complete reply, Mr. Winter, I don't want to cut you off? A. They tried to come to an agreement but they couldn't do it.

Q. The agreement of 1905 did not go fully into effect. What was the next occurrence? A. Matters continued as they were regarded then until 1907.

Q. That is, the various Continental lines acted in accordance— A. With their original agreement as far as third-class business was concerned.

Q. They continued to share the Continental third class business? A. Yes, the agreement shows that.

Q. And a certain amount of the Continental third-class was allotted to the British lines? A. Yes.

Q. And the British lines other than the Cunard divided that up among themselves? A. Yes.

Q. By their own arrangement? A. Yes.

Q. Now, at that time what was the situation in regard to the British steerage business, the Continental lines, were they under any agreement with the British lines to keep out of that?

Mr. Beers: That is between 1905 and 1907?
Mr. Dorr: Between 1905 and '07.

A. The Continental lines have always kept that British steerage business for natural reasons.

Q. Tell me was there or was there not an understanding or agreement that they should do so? A. No, there was no understanding practically; the Continental lines withdrew from the British business because they could not handle it.

Q. You say they withdrew, when did they withdraw? A. From the very beginning; they cannot 3551 carry it; they have got to meet certain requirements of the British law.

Q. Was there or was there not an agreement that they should not go into the British business; wasn't it part of the consideration, so to speak, or one of the considerations which you presented to the British lines, that the Continental lines would not go into the British business and would keep out of it? A. No, you cannot find that in any agreement.

Q. No, I am asking you now for the terms of the agreement? A. No, that is a natural condition.

Q. A condition which the British lines recognized? A. Which the British and Continental lines both rec-3552 ognized. The Continental lines could not carry British business, which is in fact the British lines' business.

Q. Now, Mr. Winter, was it not used as an argument with the British lines by the Continental lines to prevail upon them to accept the percentage of Continental business which was allotted to them that the Continental lines would not go into the British fields? A. It was used as an argument possibly.

Q. Don't you know it was? A. Yes, but it had really no weight.

Q. You mean as a matter of fact the Continental lines while advancing that as an argument, did not really intend to go into the British field? A. They could not do it.

Q. You say they could not do it? A. No, not effectually.

Q. With their existing ships? A. Yes, at that time.

Q. Of course, it was perfectly practicable for them to go into it by building ships which would meet the British requirements if the old ships did not meet it? A. Yes, but they hadn't the ships to go in at that time.

Q. They were building ships from time to time? A. Yes, but they were made to meet the Continental requirements. 3554

Q. And there was an understanding that they would not, not particularly with ships they had, but the ships they were building would not go into it? A. The British business had that field to themselves.

Q. They had it, I know, but was there not an agreement— A. Not an agreement or understanding, but simply because they had it. They owned it and the German lines could not undertake to take it away from them.

Q. You mean the German lines— A. The Continental lines.

Q. You stated to the British lines we recognize this is your business and we will not compete with you in it; that is what it amounted to, was it not? A. Yes. 3555

Q. The statement to the British lines by the Continental lines that they would not—they said they would not compete, wasn't that what they in substance said to the British lines? A. That was never stated.

Q. How about the Scandinavian business? A. We are all competing for the Scandinavian business, eastbound.

Q. They were at that time? A. We are today.

Q. I am talking now about that time? A. At that time.

3556 Q. How about the Scandinavian westbound? A. Westbound the Continental lines withdrew from in favor of the British lines as part of the consideration for the division of the business, the Continental business.

Q. That the Continental lines should not go into the Scandinavian business? A. That is part of the agreement of 1895.

Mr. Bullowa: Are all of these agreements contained in some written document?

The Witness: I think the first agreement for 1895 will show that.

3557 Q. In regard to the Continental lines keeping out of the British lines' territory, or the British territory, do you know of any written agreement on their part to do so? A. No, there is none.

Q. Do you not know that there was an understanding that they should do so? A. Except it is a natural fact; there is nothing in the way of an understanding or agreement on that.

Q. Wasn't it stated to the British lines at the time of these agreements that the German lines would keep out of the British territory? A. No, not in so many words.

Q. Not in so many words? A. No.

3558 Q. Was it not implied to them that they would? A. No.

Q. Now, Mr. Winter, are you quite clear about that? A. I am clear that the Continental lines cannot touch it.

Q. I am not talking now about what the actual facts were, but the Continental lines could with their present equipment go in; my question now is directed to this, did not the Continental lines urge it upon the British lines that they were giving up the British business or any attempt to go into the British business, as one of the considerations of the British lines accepting the percentage they had under these contracts of the North Atlantic or Continental business; now, isn't that a fact, Mr. Winter? A. Well, I don't know—

Mr. Beers: You heard the question, didn't you?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Beers: Read it again and make sure.

Q. (Question read.) A. That is a fact, yes, in one way, but—

Q. Go ahead; finish it up; say anything you desire in explanation? A. It is a fact one way of course, but except its natural conditions there.

Q. You mean as a matter of fact the British lines would have had in any event a considerable advantage in their own territory? A. Yes. 3560

Q. Just as the Continental lines have a considerable advantage in their own territory? A. Yes, but the volume of the Continental business is so much larger.

Q. That there was more inducement for the British lines to go into the Continental than there was for the Continental to go into the British? A. Yes, with the strong hold the membership had on it.

Q. The Continental lines as a matter of fact touch at certain of the British ports, do they not? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Whereas the Cunard Line, for instance, and the White Star Line do not touch at Continental ports? 3561
A. The White Star Line do.

Q. At Continental ports? A. Yes, Cherbourg.

Q. Did they in 1905 do that trade? A. Yes.

Q. Always? A. Oh, yes. Well, they started in—when the White Star started its service to Cherbourg and Southampton it went into the Continental business; it touched at Continental ports.

Q. But while it maintained a Liverpool service exclusively it did not? A. It did not touch at Continental ports.

Q. And it did not establish the Southampton service until 1906, did it not? A. Oh, it was prior to that.

Q. 1904 or '05? A. 1905 or '05 or '06; somewhere around that.

Q. And the Anchor Line of course has no Continental port? A. No.

Mr. Bullowa: It has a Mediterranean service.

The Witness: It has a Mediterranean service, yes.

Q. But it did not do a Continental business? A. No.

Q. The Continental lines, they proceeded under their old agreement with some modifications from 3563 1905 down to 1907? A. Yes.

Q. And the British lines other than the Cunard Line continued under their old agreement with the Continental lines and among themselves with certain modifications down to 1907? A. Yes.

Q. Was there any disturbing element introduced into the situation? A. Yes.

Q. In 1907? A. Yes.

Q. What was that, Mr. Winter? A. The rates of the Cunard Line for the Mauretania and Lusitania raised objection in the cabin business more particularly.

Q. The cabin rates? A. Cabin rates.

3564 Q. The third class rates also? A. No, they were affected later.

Q. The difficulty then arose from the cabin rates of the Mauretania? A. From the cabin rates of the Mauretania, yes; competition to get business.

Q. Did the other lines complain that if the Cunard maintained those lower rates in the cabin they would get more than their share of the business? A. The Cunard Line practically with these two boats were cutting into the business of all of the other lines under the rates they were charging.

Q. What rates were they charging? A. $110 as against $112.50 and $115 for the others; and, of course, with the attraction of speed; the attraction these new steamers offered of speed accommodation, service, they cut right into it.

Q. That is, those elements made the steamers particularly attractive rather than the $2 difference in rate? A. Well, they helped.

Q. Two dollars difference in first cabin business would not be material? A. Five dollars difference in cabin business at times affects the business.

Q. Five dollars? A. Yes; that is really so, as all of the other rates are based on that. 3566

Q. What rates were being charged for the Lucania and Campania of the Cunard Line? A. $100 and $85; $85 in the winter season.

Q. And when the Cunard put the Mauretania and Lusitania on the service they fixed the cabin rate at $110? A. $110.

Q. The rates of $112.50 were the rates of the Deutschland and Kaiser Wilhelm? A. Of the Deutschland and Kaiser Wilhelm.

Q. And the Continental lines thought that the Cunard rates ought to be with the new boats higher? A. With better service ought to be higher.

Q. And what did the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American do? A. Tried to negotiate a better understanding and feeling and the rates were reduced. 3567

Q. And they reduced their rates on the Deutschland and Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse? A. Yes.

Q. How long had those ships been in service at that time? A. The Kaiser Wilhelm II had just come out; the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse came out in 1897; the Kronprinz in 1901; the Kaiser Wilhelm II came out in 1907.

3568 Q. What were the rates of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse? A. $112.50.

Q. That is all of those boats were $112.50? A. Yes, from $105 to $112.50.

Mr. Beers: These are all first cabin rates?

The Witness: First cabin rates, yes.

Q. And the Deutschland? A. The same thing practically.

Q. When did the Deutschland come out? A. 1898.

Q. The North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American reduced their rates; how far did they reduce them at that time, to what point, do you recall? A. We 3569 came down to $75 ultimately, at the end of the rate war.

Q. And when was that? A. In the fall and winter of 1907.

Q. Were steerage rates affected? A. Oh, yes, the reductions in cabin rates naturally also applied to the sceond cabin rates and then the steerage.

Q. That is, when the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American started to cut, they cut all along the line? A. All other lines cut; they naturally had to reduce.

Q. And the Cunard Line itself cut, I suppose? A. It had to to meet that.

3570 Q. What was the situation in the Mediterranean at that time; was there any cutting going on there? A. Yes, cabin rates there were affected.

Q. Cabin rates there were also affected? A. Also affected.

Q. You say that this terminated in the winter of 1907, that is, the last part of 1907? A. This practically caused the negotiations which resulted in the agreement of February, 1908.

Q. And resulted in the Agreement "AA"? A. "AA."

3571

Q. Do you recall the date of the first formal agreement as to the Mediterranean business? A. The first formal agreement for the Mediterranean business is dated February, 1909.

Q. February, 1909? A. Yes, between all the lines. I think it is February, 1909.

Q. Hadn't there been an agreement prior to that time, Mr. Winter? A. No, there had been various negotiations looking towards an agreement.

Q. Had there been tentative working agreements? A. I don't remember. If at the time we had a working agreement it had not been reduced to formal shape, but it was understood various lines would charge certain rates.

Q. And how about the division of business? A. There was no division of business beyond the natural one, the charging of rates.

Q. But the relative rates were, I suppose, designed to preserve in a general way a division of business? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Now then, in 1908 and 1909 was there considerable and pretty active competition in the Mediterranean business? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the Italian Lines at that time competed for continental business? A. The Italian Lines entered into the continental business; that is more particularly the south continental business.

Q. Then by agreement of 1909 they agreed definitely to withdraw from that business, did they not? A. Yes, gladly.

Q. I don't suppose you represent the Italian Line, but they received a certain allottment or certain share of the Mediterranean steerage business? A. Yes.

Q. And that share was such that they were glad to accept that and withdraw from the continental business? A. Yes.

Q. And since that time the Mediterranean Lines have not gone into the continental business? A. No.

Q. Except the Cunard which continues in under the Hungarian Agreement? A. Yes, the Fiume service.

Q. And it was not until 1908 then that the Cunard came into the general agreement? A. That is right.

Q. And the Cunard had been a large and powerful line prior to that time, had it not? A. Yes, it was a factor in the trade.

Q. When the Agreement "AA" went into effect did it include all of the lines which at that time were en-3575 gaged in the North Atlantic steerage traffic? A. Yes, except the Uranium Line, practically the Northwest Transport Company.

Q. And that is included since that time, or does this agreement as amended include all the lines which are engaged in that North Atlantic steerage traffic other than the Uranium Line and its— A. Yes.

Q. There was no other exception, was there? A. Yes, there was one, the Canadian Northern or Royal Line rather.

Q. That no longer is in existence? A. Oh, yes, it is.

Q. It is still in existence? A. Oh, yes.

3576 Q. So there are two lines which are not— A. That has joined; that applied for admission.

Q. That now belongs? A. Yes, but the Uranium Line never applied.

Q. That has never become a member? A. Never applied for membership.

Q. Do you speak of that of your own knowledge? A. Yes.

Q. It never applied to you? A. The agent here informed me of that.

Q. You mean Mr. Thomas? A. Mr. Fourman.

3577

Q. Mr. Fourman is merely a passenger agent? A. I know, but he told me that fact; he showed me a cable too.

Q. When was that that you had this conversation with Mr. Fourman? A. Last year.

Mr. Bullowa: Do you know who the cable was from?

Mr. Dorr: I object to that.

Q. The only knowledge that you have then is the conversation with Mr. Fourman and a paper which he showed you? A. Yes.

3578

Q. Are you personally acquainted with the owners or managers of the line? A. No.

Q. You have not had any conversation with them about it? A. No.

Q. What is your position at the present time, Mr. Winter? A. I am on the staff of the Cunard Line.

Q. And in the office here in New York? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you attended any meeting of the lines in Europe? A. Yes.

Q. Of late, the last few years? A. Last year.

3579

Mr. Beers: On behalf of Senator Spooner and at his request and also on my own behalf I should like to reserve the right to cross-examine Mr. Winter at some subsequent hearing, and I understand Mr. Winter will hold himself in readiness to respond to a request.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Bullowa: I join in that request and on behalf of Mr. Burlingham and Mr. Beecher.

Hearing adjourned until Monday, November 11th, 1912, at 11:00 o'clock A. M.

Mr. Guiler: I want to notify counsel that at the last meeting held here I neglected to put in the Continental Traffic Agreement which I intended to put in.

I have taken the liberty while you were away, in order 3583 to get it in the printer's hands, to mark that Exhibit No. 913. If there are no objections that will go in that way. It is the Continental Traffic Agreement for third-class.

Mr. Beers: As far as I am concerned I have no objection to it going in as though it were offered at the last session, and being given the number 913 subject to our objection that it is irrelevant and immaterial and incompetent.

Mr. Spooner: Agreed to produce witnesses on behalf of the defendants represented by him on Thursday, November 14, 1912, at 11 o'clock A. M.

Mr. Guiler: I offer in evidence the following cir- 3584

Mr. Beers: In so far as these refer to matters other than AA their admission in evidence is over our objection?

Mr. Guiler: Yes.

Mr. Beers: I also wish to object to their admission as not binding upon the defendants I represent and therefore incompetent.
